Mr. MANSUR. If the gentleman will permit me, I am informed by Senator PASCO that Florida did not become a State until 1845, and that the old Florida war was fought when it was Indian territory.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. The trouble began while it was Spanish territory.

Mr. MANSUR. Did not the Federal Government have to put it down?

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, in order to throw further light upon the origin of this war, I send to the Clerk's desk an extract which I ask the Clerk to read:

Discarding that code of morals which teaches the suppression of truth, for the purpose of upholding the honor either of the Government or of the individuals who wield its administration, the author of the following work has endeavored to give a faithful record of those interesting events which appear directly connected with the exiles of Florida.

Torn from their native land, their friends and homes, they were sold in the markets of Carolina and Georgia. Feeling the hand of oppression bearing heavily upon them, they fled to Florida, and, under Spanish laws, became free. Holding lands of the Spanish crown, they became citizens of that Territory, entitled to protection. To regain possession of their truant bondmen, Georgia made war upon Florida, but failed to obtain her object.

At a time of profound peace, our Army, acting under the direction of the Executive, invaded Florida, murdered many of these free men, and brought others to the United States and consigned them to slavery. An expensive and bloody war followed, but failing to capture more of the exiles, our Army was withdrawn.

This war was followed by diplomatic efforts. Florida was purchased, treaties with the Florida Indians were made and violated; gross frauds were perpetrated, dishonorable expedients were resorted to, and another war was provoked. During its protracted continuance of seven years, bribery and treachery were practiced toward the exiles and their allies, the Seminole Indians; flags of truce were violated; the pledged faith of the nation was disregarded. By these means the removal of these exiles from Florida was effected. After they had settled in the Western country most of those inquiries were repeated until they were driven from our nation and compelled to seek an asylum in Mexico.

Men who wielded the influence of the Government for the consummation of these crimes assiduously labored to suppress all knowledge of their guilt; to keep facts from the popular mind; to falsify the history of current events, and prevent an exposure of our national turpitude.

The object of this work is to meet that state of circumstances; to expose fraud, falsehood, treachery, and other crimes of public men who have prostituted the powers of the Government to the perpetration of murders, at the contemplation of which our humanity revolts.

The author has designed to place before the public a faithful record of events appropriately falling within the purview of the proposed history; he has endeavored, as far as possible, to do justice to all concerned. Where the action of individuals is concerned, he has endeavored to make them speak for themselves, through official reports, orders, letters, or written evidences from their own hands; and he flatters himself that he has done no injustice to any person.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, no one can regret more than I do the necessity for calling up these bygones. I belong to that class of men who would be glad to let bygones be bygones, and for the future do our duty as it comes up before us.

In order to throw as much light on the origin of the long and tedious Florida war, I will state that the first decades of it, during the thirties and forties, it was for the recovery of slaves escaping from their masters into Florida, before and after the acquisition of the country from Spain. The last decade, in the fifties, the war was for the removal of the Seminoles, or mixed-breed Indians, from their native country to a new country west of the Mississippi River. They fought with all the desperation of brave men fighting for their homes and country.

Mr. Chairman, I am also informed that the principal portion of this claim has been settled, and the present claim is for interest, and in an old claim like that, it appears to me, that the claimants should be willing to let bygones be bygones. I believe there is not a particle of justice in the claim at the present time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, as this measure will not be acted upon this afternoon, I shall feel entirely content to present a very few matters connected with it, in order that they may go into the RECORD. This subject has often been before Congress, and has been fully discussed at different times. The contemporaneous history of this claim of the State of Florida is of the highest importance, for after a long lapse of years the facts become obscure, the living actors of the time are no more, and everything becomes hazy and speculative. So that to my mind, in a claim of this character, against the Government, contemporaneous history is specially important. I shall be very brief, and confine myself to a statement of a few matters and legislation of Congress during and immediately after the Seminole Indian war in Florida in relation to that war.

The argument of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BULLOCK] was a very able one and a very eloquent and touching appeal. None of us failed to sympathize with the suffering of the people of Florida during that period of peril and alarm. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MANSUR], with his usual force and eloquence, has addressed the House and made a strong and vigorous argument for this claim, but I am not convinced that the claim should be paid by the United States. I wish to present a very few matters, and shall be brief about it. In the report made by the Secretary of War in 1882, in pursuance of a joint resolution adopted in 1881 by Congress, the case is fairly presented as follows:

From data afforded by the records of the War Department and executive publications of the State of Florida, the history of the affairs that caused the expenditures set forth in the claim now under consideration appears as follows:

Military operations in Florida during the years 1855, 1856, and 1857 extended over an area of 27,400 square miles, and were against ninety-eight hostile warriors. The forces were engaged as follows:

1. Regular troops number 840 in 1855; 866 for first nine months of 1856; 1,756 from October 1, 1856, to September 1, 1857, and 339 for the remaining four months of 1857.

2. Volunteers called out and mustered into the service of the United States (none in 1855), 321 in 1856; 1,164 in 1857.

3. Militia forces called out by the State authorities for short periods of service between December 1, 1855, and January, 1857. (See annexed Exhibit No. 1.)

That statement, brief as it is, presents the whole case. It will be noticed that during the period of this war there were ninety-eight Indian warriors in the field. And now the action of Congress upon that state of facts and touching this war and the proceedings of Congress in relation thereto must be referred to to ascertain what was the contemporaneous view of Congress in relation to that subject while these facts were transpiring and immediately after the close of that Indian war. If this claim is well founded the fact was certainly well known by Congress when the following measures of legislation were enacted.

In the Army appropriation act of August 30, 1856, this section appears:

For pay, furnishing and maintaining with quartermaster stores and supplies and subsistence of mounted and foot companies of Florida volunteers, called into the service of the United States, $240,667.52.

Now, that is the first provision. That refers specially to the Florida volunteers in that Seminole war, and seems to have been a careful estimate. The second is as follows: This is in the Army appropriation act of March 3, 1857:

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to cause to be audited and settled, the accounts of the State of Florida against the United States for money advanced by that State in payment of volunteers called into service for the suppression of Indian hostilities in 1849 and 1852: Provided, That it shall be satisfactorily shown that said claims have been actually allowed and paid by the State.

Mr. MALLORY. That relates to something preceding.

Mr. HOLMAN. That did relate to a matter preceding, but I am trying to show that the claims of Florida even before were under the view of Congress at the time the pending claim is alleged to have accrued. The third proposition is as follows, and is the second section of the Army appropriation act of the 12th of June, 1858:

And be it further enacted, That the balances from the appropriation for "preventing and suppressing Indian hostilities and for traveling allowance of volunteers," already expended in the payment of Florida volunteers called into service by authority of the War Department, may be applied by the accounting officers of the Treasury to the settlement of the account of paymasters by whom said balances were disbursed.

Then and finally the following in the Army appropriation act of March 3, 1859, after these events had all transpired and after the close of that Indian war and while all the facts were yet fresh in the knowledge of Congress:

For the payment of volunteers employed in Florida during the years 1857 and 1858, and who were called into service by requisition of the President on the governor of that State, the sum of $413,600, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the amount found due for the time said troops were actually in the service of the United States: Provided, That no greater pay or commutations be allowed than are authorized to similar troops of the United States Army.

Between the time this conflict began, in 1855, between the people of Florida and the Seminole Indians and the conclusion of it, those four provisions were enacted by Congress manifestly with all the facts in view, and it seems almost, if not absolutely, incredible that if at that time Florida had had a claim of $251,000 against the United States for other volunteers than those referred to in these several provisions that fact would not have appeared in the legislative history of the period, and I must insist that these proceedings of Congress repel the idea that any other claim incident to that war existed in favor of Florida against the United States, and so far as I have been able to examine the subject, those proceedings cover the whole ground. Evidently Congress intended the two appropriations, amounting together to $654,267.52, to cover the claim of Florida against the United States.

Gentlemen will observe that during that Seminole war the Federal Government, as shown by the report of the Secretary of War, had troops in Florida ranging in number from 840 down to 339, with larger numbers in the interval, against these 98 Seminole Indians, and paid in addition $654,267.52 for the Florida volunteers. Those regular troops, of course, are not referred to at all in the provisions I have cited. The $654,267.52 was paid to the Florida volunteers. The other troops were a part of the regular Army of the United States, and therefore were not to be taken into account in these appropriations I have called attention to.

It is clear that every provision of law I have read applied exclusively to the volunteers of Florida in that Seminole Indian war, and if this is correct, how can this claim have any just foundation?

That $654,267.52 is the amount paid under those appropriations to the Florida volunteers, and that sum, I repeat, was in addition to the expenses incurred by the Government in the employment of its regular forces employed in the Seminole war. The report made by the Secretary of War, a portion of which I have read, and the report by the Secretary of the Treasury, to which I shall call attention in a moment, were made under resolutions adopted by Congress from time to time, and they are rather presentations of the claims made by Florida than an actual inquiry into the facts.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in making his report, presents, among other things, the fact that the United States, years before these particular events transpired, had used a portion of the Indian trust funds in the purchase of Florida bonds, and held in trust for the Indians bonds to the amount of $132,000 against Florida. Taking the statement of the State of Florida as presented by the Secretary of the Treasury also, the amount of the aggregate claim of the State would be $261,934.31. But the amount stated by the Secretary of War is different. In his report the Secretary of War states it as $224,649.05, an amount less by several thousand dollars than the claim submitted by the State of Florida.

So that the difference between the two officers in stating these accounts, arising from the Secretary of War having rejected a portion of them, is the difference between $224,649.05 and $261,934.31.

Mr. MALLORY. Is not the gentleman aware that the authority under which the Secretary of War proceeded was different from that under which the Secretary of the Treasury proceeded? The Secretary of War was limited entirely to the expenses of the war, beginning in 1855, whereas the Secretary of the Treasury had a wider scope, including all claims of the State of Florida against the United States Government.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is right; but the object I had in reading the second section of the appropriation bill was to show that all these matters prior to 1855 had been adjusted by act of Congress.

I think that our Federal Government ought to act very justly and fairly toward the States in the adjustment of claims, but I think also that it should be governed always by the presumption that the Government always acts justly and fairly, and therefore as Congress was legislating upon this subject from 1856 to 1859 and appropriating large sums of money to pay Florida volunteers in the Seminole war, this Congress ought to presume that its predecessor of thirty years ago, when the facts were fresh, fully performed its duty, and that if there was then in existence another claim against the United States in favor of the State of Florida it certainly would have been determined at that time.

Gentlemen will observe the entire absence of any part of contemporaneous history in the legislation of Congress on this subject throughout that entire period of time, the entire absence of anything which seems to give any countenance whatever to this demand. That is the trouble, and that always has been the trouble in recent years with this matter. We have here a contemporaneous history, which shows that Congress enacted four different measures touching the claims of the State of Florida, but that this claim, now presented, amounting to $261,934.31, is not mentioned.

One other subject I will allude to for a moment only. There are two propositions submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury as to the mode of adjustment. Assuming that the United States, in the adjustment of these claims, would take into account the Indian funds that the Government had invested in the purchase of Florida bonds, the suggestion is made as follows:

Under the circumstances, absolute precision being impossible, I have assumed that January 1, 1858, would be fair to each party as a date from which to reckon interest on the amount due the State.

This follows the statement by the Secretary of the Treasury that the Department had no power to allow interest, inasmuch as it had been the general policy of the Government—not its uniform policy, but its general policy—from the beginning, for obvious public reasons, not to allow interest on claims against it, even if the claims were just.

Upon the basis above stated two modes of stating a mutual account are suggested, viz.

Now, this is assuming all the time in effect that the $132,000 is a claim of the United States Government itself against the State of Florida. I do not think that view of the subject is correct. These funds used were trust funds—Indian funds. The Government, I admit, virtually guaranteed the payment of those bonds; but the bonds were held in trust; they were not held as a debt due from the State of Florida to the United States.

First. By computing interest on each side to January 1, 1890, and then striking a balance, thus:

Aggregate due the State		$261,934.31
Interest thereon, at 7 per cent, January 1, 1858, to January 1, 1890		586,732.85
		848,667.16
Principal of bonds held by United States—
In trust—
Principal of bonds held by United States	$132,000.00
Interest from November 27, 1873 (to which date interest has been paid), to January 1, 1890	148,712.66
Balance		567,954.50

So that after Florida pays this $132,000 due the Indians, this claim would be largely more than doubled against the United States. A mere statement of such a case as that would go very far to show the justice and reason of the ordinary rule of the Government with regard to the payment of interest on claims. The absence of such a rule that governments should not pay interest on claims would be perilous to our Government or any other.

If this claim is to be allowed—if the current history of that period when this claim, it is alleged, arose will justify Congress in the appropriation of this more than half a million dollars out of the Treasury besides the Indians, the $132,000, the adjusment should stand thus:

Claim of the State of Florida	$261,934.31
Amount of bonds held in trust for the Indians	132,000.00
Leaving the balance of the claim of Florida	129,934.31

If this transaction is to be treated now as a legitimate one, as a real claim against the United States and one which in the judgment of Congress ought to be adjusted in some form or other, it ought to be without charging the Government with interest. I admit that the States of Virginia, Massachusetts, and Maryland did receive from the United States years ago an adjustment of their Revolutionary debts and payment on a complicated basis which in effect did take interest into the account, yet it has been against the policy of our Government almost uniformly to disallow interest on claims. The mode of settlement which I suggest is the only mode by which we can escape a precedent which if now set will stare the youngest of you unpleasantly in the face so long as you remain in Congress, and your successors after you. It is clearly against a just and reasonable public policy. I do not think this claim ought to be paid——

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Would the gentleman sustain the proposition that the Government pay this claim of $129,000, eliminating the question of interest entirely?

Mr. HOLMAN. If my friend will permit me, the statement which I was about to make will rest upon the action of Congress when the facts out of which this claim arose were fresh and well known. I do not think that the Treasury of the United States should be called upon to pay this money. But if the House conclude that the claim should be paid, if the touching appeal of my friend from Florida should have the effect of inducing gentlemen to support this claim in some form, I trust that no interest will be allowed; that in adjusting the claim, at best of very doubtful validity, we shall not set a dangerous precedent in the history of our legislation.

One other fact, Mr. Chairman, and I am done. It is obvious from the facts I have already stated that all the volunteers brought into the United States service in the Florida wars were paid their full compensation; that the Federal Government made the necessary appropriations in 1856 and 1859; that those men were all paid. This report of the Secretary of War speaks of some persons being employed as militia for a short time at the period mentioned in the report. That is a sort of employment which occurred all over this country in the earlier period of our history, and as late as 1860 it did not seem proper to Congress that such a matter should be taken into the account.

When the States of the West, beginning with the State of of Ohio, were thrown into peril by the Indians, and settlers took up arms to defend their homes, I find nowhere in the history of our legislation the record of any appropriation by Congress to meet their expenses, to pay them compensation for their patriotic services, unless they were called into the service by the United States. If they were, they were uniformly paid by the United States. I know very well that in the examination of the history of my own State no such instance is to be found, where irregularly organized troops drawn together on the spur of the moment were considered as in the employment of the United States. They did not come to the Federal Government for consideration in such incidental emergencies; and yet this militia force is spoken of in the report of the Secretary of War as incidentally employed at short intervals. My friend does not claim that the volunteers were not paid.

Mr. BULLOCK. I do.

Mr. HOLMAN. That the volunteer force was not paid?

Mr. BULLOCK. Yes; I will show you that they were not.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, all the conclusions to be drawn from these documents here are in that direction. What were the appropriations of 1856 and 1859 for—over $600,000? These are the cold facts. The statutes contain the appropriations for the volunteers; the men enlisted by the United States were certainly paid, or why the appropriation? The Secretary of War, speaking of facts, says:

> Third. Militia forces called out by the State authorities for short periods of service between December 1, 1855, and January 1, 1857.

Congress was not called upon to pay them. They were never in the service of the United States.

That is all the reference made to these troops for which the Federal Government is now called upon to pay more than $800,000.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, I do not think the claim has such foundation as to justify the Congress in paying it, and Congress can not afford in the adjustment of such a claim to establish a dangerous, and in my judgment, fatal precedent in our legislation of paying interest on claims against the Government. Such legislation has never, I think, occurred in this direct form in our history, and will not be found presented in such direct form even in the adjustment of the Revolutionary war claims of the States of Maryland, Virginia, and Massachusetts, claims which demanded the highest consideration from our Government, and were of unquestioned validity.

Mr. BULLOCK. Mr. Chairman, some of the statements which have just been made by the gentleman from Indiana indicate that he is not only not fully conversant with the facts in this case, but that his statements are based in part on absolute ignorance of the contemporaneous history of this claim.

The extracts he has read from different appropriation acts refer to previous expenses in suppressing Indian hostilities. This claim is for expenses in 1855, 1856, and 1857. Those expenses were not audited and paid by the State until December 2, 1859, and could not have been appropriated for in the appropriation acts of 1856, 1857, and 1858, quoted by Mr. HOLMAN; and in demonstration of this I quote from the report of the Secretary of War, and which will be found in Executive Document No. 203, first session, Forty-seventh Congress, as follows:

> By act of August 30, 1856 (11 Stat., 150), an appropriation of $240,667.42 was made for pay and supplies of mounted and foot companies of Florida volunteers; and by act of June 30, 1859 (11 Stat., 429), an appropriation of $413,600 was made for pay of certain Florida volunteers in 1857–'58. The accounts of the United States paymasters and quartermasters, by whom these two appropriations were disbursed, show that their payments were exclusively for the periods after the muster of volunteers into the United States service. This claim by the State is confined to the period prior to such muster and to pay and expenses of troops never so mustered, and was not embraced to any extent in those disbursements.
> The report of the Secretary of War upon this claim was in great detail, and is printed in executive document above referred to. To avoid needless recapitulation I have taken that report as my basis, examining the items in the order therein observed, and specially commenting only upon a few, in respect to which I differ from the conclusions of the War Department.

It is a fact that these volunteers for whom pay is now asked were as much a part of the volunteer forces operating against the Indians in the State of Florida in 1855, 1856, 1857 as those volunteers mentioned in the report of the Secretary, to which the gentleman from Indiana has referred and which were paid by an appropriation by Congress in the years 1856, 1857, 1858. And the only reason, as I have indicated clearly, why they were not mustered into the service of the United States and paid as the other troops were mustered and paid, and why they were not included in those appropriation bills referred to by the gentleman from Indiana, was unquestionably due to the fact that they were disbanded before the mustering officer reached them and they could not be reassembled.

To overcome that difficulty the Secretary of War wrote to the governor that the officer of the Army could not make a constructive muster, the governor having suggested that they take the official rolls of the State, the Secretary adding that the officer was not authorized to make a constructive muster, but that they could accept the official rolls of the State on which to form a basis for coming to Congress for the appropriation and pay, the President having recognized the services rendered by these troops, and having considered them in correspondence in reference to the matter as much volunteer troops in the service of the Federal Government as any other troops engaged in that war.

Mr. HOLMAN. If that is correct, if the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him, when this last legislation was enacted in 1859, and the $413,600 was being appropriated to pay these volunteers, how did it happen that these men were not included?

Mr. BULLOCK. The matter is very clear, and I will answer the gentleman conclusively. I have already stated in the opening of my remarks how this happened, but I will restate it. It happened in this way: The amount of the estimates which went to Congress for an appropriation to pay the Florida volunteers was based on the regular muster rolls of the War Department. The other volunteers, not having been mustered, could not have been included in the estimate of the appropriation.

The claim for the allowance of their pay was even then pending before Congress. It went before Congress in the Thirty-fifth Congress and has been pending at different times between the two Houses upon the suggestion of the Secretary of War as to what course to take to obviate the difficulty. But because of the fact that the mustering officer did not reach the ground in time before they were disbanded they could not be incuded in the regular muster rolls.

These other volunteers were paid. I myself was one of them. I commanded a mounted company, one of the five mounted companies in that war, as the record will show. Then, as you will see, by regular progression the amount has been increasing. And why? Because, as I said before, Gen. Harney, when he reached the scene of operations, recommended not only that these troops be paid, but that the force be increased and doubled; that they would not get the Indians out of the country with that force at hand. Then after that came the mounted companies—the five additional companies added to those which were already mustered in. Hence the increase in the appropriation.

But this claim was never settled, and simply for the reason that it could not be, because the men had not been mustered in. The claim was not in such shape that the Secretary of War could recommend it to Congress. It was pending before Congress for special legislation and has been ever since. That is the truth of the matter.

Why, Mr. Chairman, never was a juster claim presented on the face of the earth. Do you not see what these men say about it here? Some suggestion was made as to the number of men required to settle the Indian difficulties in Florida at that time. Let us see what those men capable of understanding the subject and knowing what was required say about it.

What did Gen. Taylor say in reference to his expedients and methods to endeavor to get those Indians out up to 1839? He had proceeded with the policy of dividing the State off into squares of 20 miles each, and to establish a post in the midst of each space, and he said it would take 40,000 troops to get those Indians out of Florida. And what does the officer say who was last in charge of the Indians, after they had been allowed to occupy that section of the country, and advising the people to keep peace with them? Here is what that officer said:

If this enemy could be crushed and annihilated there would be enough to participate, but as they are, 90—

That was the estimated number, and subsequent information proved that there were nearer 300 than 90. An educational institution in Florida, now trying to educate these Indians, has reported the present number of warriors there at 150. Yet we did not believe when this last outbreak occurred that there were 40 left in the State—but as they are, 90 may be secured, and the remaining 10 would sweep the frontier from one extent to the other, assailing at any moment men, women, and children in the transaction of their daily occupations.

Mr. GREENLEAF. Who was the officer who makes this report?

Mr. BULLOCK. The officer left in charge by Gen. Worth, J. T. Sprague.

Now, it does seem to me that it is rather a small business for this Government to defer this payment for thirty years, when Florida has exercised every energy and due diligence to present this claim and have it paid, and that you should say now, "If we pay you anything at all we will only pay you the principal of the expenses that were incurred;" the principal of a debt that was recognized by the Secretary and the President and would have been paid at the time but for this accident of being disbanded so that they could not be mustered, and no officer being authorized under the law to make a constructive muster.

Mr. BOATNER. Did the State pay these men?

Mr. BULLOCK. Yes, by borrowing the money, and is to this day paying 7 per cent interest—the principal part of the State debt.

The compromise suggested, but not proposed by the gentleman from Indiana, is that of a settlement, as follows:

Claim of the State of Florida	$261,934.31
Amount of bonds held in trust for Indians	132,000.00
Leaving the balance of the claim of Florida	129,934.31

Such a compromise would do manifest wrong to the State as well as to the Indian trust fund. By such a compromise the State would lose $586,732.85, and the Indian trust fund would lose $148,712.66. The integrity of the Indian trust fund can only be restored by the payment of $132,000 principal and $148,712.66 of interest, making together $280,712.66. Any diminution of that sum will be equivalent to looting the Indian trust fund.

The United States authorities loaned the funds of the Indian trust upon the faith of the indebtedness of the United States to Florida for these expenditures—the very loan was an acknowledgment of the indebtedness—and any compromise which does not secure the whole of that loan, principal and interest, would be that of an unfaithful trustee. As a member of Congress, in part responsible for the preservation of the integrity of the Indian trust fund, I am not willing to make such a compromise. Nor can I as a Representative from Florida, consent to the deliberate and palpable robbing of the State by a compromise which deprives her of the same interest on what is due to her that is charged against the State in her settlement of this mutual account.

The Third Auditor, in his restatement of the mutual account presents very just and correct views. He says:

The question now arises in respect to interest upon the demands of the State. If this were a case wherein the accounting officers had been directed to make a final settlement I would be compelled to say that the Executive Departments have no power to award interest upon claims against the United States unless expressly so provided by statute. But this proceeding is not of that nature. Congress has reserved to itself the determination what shall be the plan and terms of the general and final settlement between the United States and the State, and has merely called upon this Department to aid its deliberations, by examining into the details of any mutual demands and by suggesting some equitable mode of settlement.

In the debate upon this provision in the act of March 2, 1889, it was assumed in the Senate that mutual interest would be the rule in the final adjustment, and the general tenor of the provision for a final settlement of all mutual demands seems to indicate that Congress intends eventually to make or provide for a settlement upon the broad and equitable principles applicable to settlements between individuals of their mutual accounts and demands.

It is not clear in what precise sum the funds for these expenditures were provided by loans effected upon interest. It is, however, evident that the amount borrowed upon 7 per cent bonds and thus applied went much beyond the $132,000 procured from the United States; and it is highly probable that the entire bulk of the funds for these expenditures was borrowed upon interest.

It also appears that the State was compelled to put its bonds (except those sold to the United States) on the market at a heavy discount.

It would be impossible to fix with strict precision upon any equated date from which an aggregate due the State should draw interest. The payments by the State were, in a vast number of small sums, scattered through the period 1855-'59, and the exact day of payment in many cases is not known; also the exact dates at which the State effected loans or sold bonds (except those sold to the United States) are not known. The two purchases by the United States were about midway of this period, viz, $125,000, July 1, 1857, and $7,000, January 1, 1858.

Under the circumstances, absolute precision being impossible, I have assumed that January 1, 1858, would be fair to each party as a date from which to reckon interest on the amount due the State.

And then the auditor reccommends the settlement provided in the bill now under consiedration.

Why gentlemen, you do not know anything about the Seminole character, and the advantages they had over the people. Nor can you form the slightest conception of the ruin that has been done to Florida by reason of the Government making this temporary arrangement—for they were there only temporarily. It was understood that they were only to occupy that Territory temporarily. They were under treaty to leave there, and their remaining there prevented the settlement of that country which now all of you gentlemen are so ready to visit, from which you get so much benefit. And we all stand with open arms, to restore you to health and to return you to your homes vastly benefited by visiting us. We want to see as many of you as possible. (Applause).

By just such action as this you were deprived of having this sanitarium for the United States opened to you twenty years sooner. Then was poor Florida, struggling as she was to protect this immense frontier, compelled as she is to maintain an expensive board of health, to establish which was required the convening of an extra session of the Legislature. She is now maintaining that board of health at an expense of $50,000 a year, with her treasury depleted and with her bonds out, bearing interest, on this very debt, both to the United States and to the other creditors from whom she borrowed the money, amounting to about $500,000.

Now, gentlemen, it is narrow, it is small, it is unjust. It is not magnanimous for a Government like this to leave Florida struggling in her condition as she is. Why, the whole United States is interested in Florida. Every man who is suffering to-day from any ailment, feels as though the balmy atmosphere of Florida would give him health if he could go there. And everybody in Florida wants to see every man, from whatever part of these United States he may come, without regard to where he comes from. No questions are asked now as to whether you are from the North or the South, when you come to Florida.

We are all reconstructed. I was a rebel, and I am not ashamed of it; but I was the first man to take the oath of allegiance in my county, and I meant every word of it when I took it. [Applause.] I believe to-day I am a reconstructed rebel. My convictions were honest when I was in the war, but when I sheathed my sword and took the oath of allegiance to that flag, I meant every word that I said without mental reservation or equivocation. [Applause.]

I appeal to you now to do my State justice, and you can only do it by paying this claim. Do not quibble about it because you can not get a quorum. Why, these volunteers would have been paid; there never would have been any question but for this accident of not mustering them, and that was all purely an accident.

Gentlemen will excuse me if I exhibit this feeling and interest, when gentlemen say that this claim is unjust. I know it is just, every dollar of it. It is authenticated by the State agent under his seal, that he paid over all this money which is claimed here.

Mr. BURROWS. If my friend will allow me, I would like to ask him a question for information. The gentleman has stated it was a pure accident that these troops were not mustered in by the Government.

Mr. BULLOCK. It was an accident.

Mr. BURROWS. What does the gentleman mean by that, when the gentleman must know that the National Government refused to muster them in?

Mr. BULLOCK. That was before their services were recognized. But after that they were received in the service of the Government, and it did accept these troops.

When they first organized and equipped the governor tendered them to the United States. The Government at that time, not realizing the magnitude of the undertaking they had on their hands, declined to receive the troops, but subsequently they were accepted, and the service was recognized and adopted.

Mr. BURROWS. When were they accepted?

Mr. BULLOCK. In May, 1857—as will appear by letter of Secretary of War to Governor James E. Broome, of date May 22, 1857.

Mr. BURROWS. After the war was over?

Mr. BULLOCK. No, sir; right then and there. I will read it to you:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., May 21, 1857.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 8th instant, asking an approval of the services of certain volunteers called out by you, and in reply to inform you that the explanation as to the necessity of their services is satisfactory, and orders have been issued to the officer commanding in Florida to muster them in and out of the service of the United States.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN B. FLOYD,
Secretary of War.

His Excellency JAMES E. BROOME,
Governor of Florida, Washington.

The official order mentioned in the foregoing letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 21, 1857.

SIR: I have the honor herewith to transmit a copy of a letter addressed by the governor of Florida, under date of May 8, 1857, to the Secretary of War, respecting volunteers called out by the former to suppress Indian hostilities in Florida, but never regularly mustered into the service of the United States.

The services of these volunteers having been recognized and approved by the President, the Secretary of War directs that you cause one of the officers of your command to muster into and out of the service of the United States, as soon as practicable, the troops indicated by Governor Broome, to the end that they may be paid whenever Congress shall make the necessary appropriation for the purpose. A supply of blank muster-rolls will at once be sent to your address.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. COOPER, Adjutant-General.

COMMANDING OFFICER,
Department of Florida, Tampa, Fla.

Mr. BURROWS. I think you will find it was in 1859 when Secretary Floyd said that they should be mustered in, nunc pro tunc. I want you to explain that.

Mr. BULLOCK. You will see that it was in 1857. The question of mustering was raised in that letter.

Mr. BURROWS. The Government did not receive them at all.

Mr. BULLOCK. Adjutant-General Cooper's letter which I have read shows that "the services of these volunteers having been recognized and approved by the President" they were received.

Mr. BURROWS. The Government never accepted them.

Mr. BULLOCK. It did. The adjutant-general says otherwise.

Mr. BURROWS. Afterwards they were ordered to be mustered in and mustered out.

Mr. BULLOCK. They were never mustered.

Mr. BURROWS. They were to be mustered in and mustered out at the same time.

Mr. BULLOCK. Now, let me again read you the language of the Adjutant-General, stating to the governor he had written to the officer to muster them in and out of the service.

Mr. BURROWS. What year was that?

Mr. BULLOCK. May 21, 1857.

Mr. BURROWS. Was not that after they had disbanded?

Mr. BULLOCK. It was after they had rendered the service recognized by the President, and after their disbandment because of the delay of the mustering officer. I will state to the gentleman that I would not advocate this claim if I did not believe it was an honest debt of the Government if it was for even ten times as much money. There is nothing in this claim that is not exactly right. If it was not an honest claim I would not advocate it, so help me God.

Mr. BURROWS. I have no doubt about that.

Mr. DAVIS. Were they ever actually mustered into the service.

Mr. BULLOCK. They were never mustered in. You have not caught on to that yet. (Laughter). The Adjutant-General recommended that an officer be sent as soon as possible to muster them in and out of the service of the United States, which recommendation was approved by the Secretary of War, who notified the governor as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., May 21, 1857.

His Excellency JAMES E. BROOME,
Governor of Florida, Washington:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 8th instant, asking an approval of the services of certain volunteers called out by you, and in reply to inform you that the explanation as to the necessity of their services is satisfactory, and orders have been issued to the officer commanding in Florida to muster them in and out of the service of the United States.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN B. FLOYD,
Secretary of War.

Then follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 21, 1857.

SIR: I have the honor herewith to transmit a copy of a letter addressed by the governor of Florida, under date of May 8, 1857, to the Secretary of War, respecting volunteers called out by the former to suppress Indian hostilities in Florida, but never regularly mustered into the service of the United States.

The services of these volunteers having been recognized and approved by the President, the Secretary of War directs that you cause one of the officers of your command to muster into and out of the service of the United States, as soon as practible, the troops indicated by Gov. Broome, to the end that they maybe paid whenever Congress shall make the necessary appropriation for the purpose.

S. COOPER, Adjutant-General.

Mr. TUCKER. Who was it that signed that?

Mr. BULLOCK. That is signed by S. Cooper, Adjutant-General, and was addressed to the commanding officer of the Department of Florida.

Now, here comes the difficulty. You see that the service was recognized and adopted, but the actual muster did not take place because of the absence of the mustering officer.

But the services had been rendered, accepted, and approved, and the responsibility of the United States for their expense absolutely acknowledged, but could not be paid until Congress appropriated money therefor, and to obviate the difficulty arising from the disbandment, the Secretary, writing to the governor, uses the following language:

Under the circumstances the only course left for the Department is to receive as official the State rolls, duly certified by the State authorities, and to base upon them a recommendation to Congress for the appropriation necessary to pay off the troops. This course will obviate the difficulties mentioned by you on account of the disbandment of the volunteers in question.

And that course was followed and the rolls sent up and a bill prepared, as appeared in the Thirty-fifth Congress.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. If the fact to which he now refers constitutes this a good claim against the Government, why was not the claim recognized and paid when this matter was before Congress, as it was three or four times?

Mr. BULLOCK. In reply to that I will just ask the gentleman why not one claim in five thousand that comes before Congress is considered and paid? [Laughter.]

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. But this matter did come before Congress, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has shown, on four different occasions, and appropriations were considered and passed by the House. The money was appropriated.

Mr. BULLOCK. No; no money was appropriated for this claim, which was not considered when the appropriation acts read by Mr. HOLMAN were being considered. The bill for this claim has passed both Houses, but not in the same Congress.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. But why was not this amount embraced and paid when the other claims were settled?

Mr. BULLOCK. The others were paid in appropriation bills, but this required special legislation on the part of Congress. It was required that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Treasury should make reports as to what was found to be due, and special legislation was required and that was the reason.

Mr. BURROWS. My friend [Mr. BULLOCK] started awhile ago to state the reason why this muster was delayed, and he read a communication, signed by Adjutant-General Cooper, directing the muster to be made. He then desisted from reading. I desire to read just a word further.

On the 7th of July following the governor wrote to the Secretary of War stating that it had been found to be impracticable to muster these troops as directed by the Secretary, they having long since disbanded, and it being impossible again to assemble them at any one point.

The governor suggested that the muster be made from the properly certified rolls of the State. To this the Secretary replied that no officer could make a constructive muster as suggested, but that, to certify the rolls, he must have mustered the troops present.

The Secretary adds:

Under the circumstances the only course left for the Department is to receive as official the State rolls, duly certified by the State authorities, and to base upon them a recommendation to Congress for the appropriation necessary to pay for these troops.

But the reason why these troops were not mustered was not the reason assigned by my friend [Mr. BULLOCK]. They were not mustered and discharged simply because they had been already disbanded.

Mr. BULLOCK. That is what I have stated.

Mr. BURROWS. Disbanded absolutely.

Mr. BULLOCK. Yes; they were disbanded, and they were incorporated into the additional troops recommended by Gen. Harney and went again into the service of the United States under a different organization.

Mr. BURROWS. But you are asking pay for these troops at a time when they were not mustered into the service, and when the National Government had declined their services on the ground that they were not needed.

Mr. BULLOCK. The gentleman seems to misapprehend the facts. The National Government, through the Secretary of War and the President, seem to have afterwards recognized that they had made a mistake. If not, why did they say that they would adopt the State rolls and order the muster? That is how that action on their part was always understood. The troops had been disbanded because the Federal Government had then assumed absolute control of the war and was willing to put a sufficient force into the field to protect the people of Florida and remove the aggressive Indians.

Mr. DOAN. Had these men actually performed service?

Mr. BULLOCK. Yes, sir. The commanding officer, Col. Monroe, in his report, said that these volunteers while in the employment of the State, had rendered the most satisfactory and efficient service in coöperation with the United States forces, and it was this fact which induced the Government to order them to report for muster. Nothing can be more just than this claim. The hiatus which had occurred made it necessary for us to go to Congress to get an enabling act, and that is the reason the claim was not paid at the time.

The appropriations referred to by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] were appropriations based upon the returns of troops actually mustered into the service: appropriations which were recommended to Congress by the War Department, such recommendations being based upon the rolls of the United States paymasters. That is the difference between the two claims. This case is as plain as A B C.

Now, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] will please listen to another statement which I omitted to make awhile ago, but which I would be glad to have everybody hear.

To show you that the State has acted with absolute and scrupulous honesty, I will say that there are now out against the State, for services rendered by volunteers during these very periods, obligations to the amount of $156,000, which have not been recognized as obligations binding upon the Federal Government—obligations for which the State has assumed the responsibility as they grew out of little temporary organizations in different neighborhoods for the purpose of protecting those neighborhoods from the Indians. There is an indebtedness of about $200,000 on account of which comptroller's warrants to the amount of $168,000 have been issued against the State.

The estimates on which this bill is based include only the troops regularly in the service, recognized as troops for whose payment the General Government is responsible. I say nothing of the $54,000 excluded by the secretary in his report which the State had paid for Indian services in 1849. The State of Florida is a loser to the extent of $200,000 or $300,000 for which she is today making no claim against the Government. I know all about that service; for I had command of one of the companies.

Mr. HOLMAN. As no gentleman desires to discuss this question further, I will ask that the gentleman from Florida, on whose motion the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, move now that the committee rise.

Mr. BULLOCK. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CHIPMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar had had under consideration the bill (S. 1391) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the account stated between the General Government and the State of Florida by the said Secretary, under the authority of the act approved March 2, 1889, known as the deficiency appropriation act, and to pay the balance found to be due said State, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON HON. E. T. STACKHOUSE.

Mr. MCLAURIN, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That Saturday, the 7th day of January next, beginning at 3 o'clock p. m., be set apart for paying tribute of respect to the memory of Hon. E. T. Stackhouse, late a member of this House from the Sixth district of the State of South Carolina.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CAPEHART, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. FORMAN, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. LAWSON of Georgia, for a few days, on account of important business.

DEATH OF SENATOR R. L. GIBSON.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Speaker, since our last meeting the Congress of the United States and our whole country have suffered an irreparable loss, and it becomes my painful duty to announce to this House the death of Hon. Randall Lee Gibson, a Senator from Louisiana, which occurred on Thursday last, at Hot Springs, Ark., after a prolonged illness. His remains will be interred at Lexington, Ky., where he was born, and where his earlier years were passed in the midst of a numerous and affectionate kindred.

For many years a conspicuous member of this body, there are many of his former colleagues who can appreciate the great grief this loss brings to his family and the personal bereavement it causes to his friends.

As a soldier, a scholar, and a statesman—in the field, on the rostrum, and in the council chamber—the best energies of his life were consecrated to his State and to his country. He loved her devotedly, strove to serve her unselfishly, and beyond interests of family, or friends, or party, made her welfare the chief object of his desires.

Occupying, as I do, the seat once so illustriously held by him, I share in the pride of my State for having had as a Representative in this honorable House, and in the Senate of the United States, one so high-toned, so spotless as Randall Lee Gibson, and the luster which his civic virtues reflected on his people, and the honor which his public career conferred upon his whole country, but exceeded his earlier services as a soldier, battling for what he believed to be the right.

At the proper time, Mr. Speaker, I shall ask this House to set apart a day, as is its custom, to be devoted to the portrayal of his lofty character, and when this Chamber will resound with eloquent tributes to the admirable traits and eminent public services of the deceased it will make those who listen the better, it will afford them a higher conception of American manhood and American statesmanship, and it will cause them to rejoice that attributes so noble, qualities so pure and patriotic, should have been so continuously recognized by his fellow-citizens. I send to the Clerk's desk resolutions for which I ask immediate adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That this House has learned with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. Randall Lee Gibson, a Senator of the United States from the State of Louisiana.

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House appoint a committee of eight members, to act in conjunction with such committee as may be appointed by the Senate, to attend the burial.

Resolved, That, as a further tribute and mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, this House do now adjourn.

The question being taken, the resolutions were unanimously adopted.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. BLANCHARD, Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana, Mr. PRICE, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky, Mr. ELLIOTT, Mr. CARUTH, Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois, and Mr. DALZELL as the committee on the part of the House under the resolutions just adopted; and, in accordance with the concluding resolution, the House (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes) adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. COBB of Missouri, from the Committee on War Claims: The bill (H. R. 9929) for the relief of the Protestant Episcopal Church of St. Paul, at Franklin, Tenn., in lieu of the bill (H. R. 2587) of the same title. (Report No. 2165.)

By Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee, from the Committee on Industrial and Foreign Commerce: The bill (H. R. 8799) to restore Lieut. Samuel Howard to his proper rank. (Report No. 2166.)

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1031) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Michael Baker, and the same was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HERBERT: A bill (H. R. 9932) to amend the act approved June 8, 1880, relating to the pay of the Judge-Advocate-General of the Navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. STORER: A bill (H. R. 9933) admitting free of duty sundry painted glass windows imported for the Church of the Assumption in Cincinnati, Ohio—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HERBERT: A bill (H. R. 9934) to authorize the Montgomery Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Alabama River near the city of Montgomery, Ala.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BACON (by request): A bill (H. R. 9935) for the protection of minority stockholders in certain national banks—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. COGSWELL: A bill (H. R. 9936) for the relief of the heirs of James Mugford—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. COVERT: A bill (H. R. 9937) granting a pension to Annie A. Townsend—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DURBOROW: A bill (H. R. 9938) to grant a pension to Elizabeth Sadler—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOLMAN: A bill (H. R. 9939) for the relief of John Maholm—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PICKLER: A bill (H. R. 9940) to pension Adra A. Spaulding, widow of Justin L. Spaulding—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. POWERS: A bill (H. R. 9941) granting a pension to Frances Parmelee—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STONE of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 9942) for the relief of W. J. Mays—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9943) for the relief of Nathaniel McKay—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 9944) granting a pension to Sophronia Garrison—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILSON of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 9945) for the relief of the Reginer and Shoup Crockery Company, of St. Joseph, Mo.—to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BOWERS: Petition of the Los Angeles County Medical Association of California, for an appropriation to pay the expense of the Pan-American Medical Congress—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. COX of Tennessee: Communication from the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of I. T. Leneaux against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 19, 1892.

Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D., the Chaplain of the Senate, offered the following prayer:

Lord God Almighty, Thou art the dwelling place of Thy people in all generations. From everlasting to everlasting Thou art God.

Look in mercy upon us as we again stand in the shadow of death thrown over this Chamber. We bless Thee for the pure, gentle, faithful life of Thy servant, our departed brother. Sustain and comfort all who are bereft, and so fill with Thy Spirit our hearts, that day by day we may walk obediently and humbly and prayerfully and trustingly before God, charitably and kindly, and faithfully toward each other, meeting every day's responsibility in Thy fear and in view of the account we shall render to Thee.

Hallow to us, we pray Thee, the rest and labor of the holy Sabbath day. Purify our hearts by the indwelling of Thy Spirit. Grant victory in every time of temptation, and help that the truth of God may reign in us and rule over us, guiding our steps in the paths of righteousness and of peace.

Regard in great mercy Thy servant toward whose sick bed so many eyes and hearts are now turned. We thank Thee for his long and useful life. If it please Thee, spare this life, restore and strengthen, above all sustain by the power of a living faith in this hour of trial, and give peace to him and to his who watch so tenderly in this time of darkness.

Guide us by Thy counsel. Teach us heavenly wisdom. O God, pity us amid life's infirmities and temptations, and help us to meet daily responsibilities in the fear and strength of God faithfully, as we shall wish to have done when we come to the end of our earthly pilgrimage.

We ask these mercies, with forgiveness and grace and help, in Jesus' name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

DEATH OF SENATOR GIBSON, OF LOUISIANA.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE], who is engaged in rendering affectionate services to his late colleague, it is made my painful duty to announce to the Senate the death of Hon. Randall Lee Gibson, the senior Senator from the State of Louisiana. After a lingering illness he expired peacefully at Hot Springs, in Arkansas, on Thursday last.

I can not, sir, make this sad announcement without expressing something of the sorrow which this intelligence has brought to the Senate. Senator Gibson held a very high place in the esteem and affections of his associates on this floor.

His great personal worth and his eminent public services had made their impressions on our hearts and judgments. We feel and deplore the unspeakable loss which the Senate, his State, and the country bear in his death.

His inestimable value as a Senator and as a man is well known to all of us. His death is a profound affliction to us and a serious bereavement to his people and the country.

He was a great and a good man. His mental faculties and his moral qualities were of a very high order. It is not too much to say that his love for Louisiana had no limit, and that his large heart embraced in its patriotism the whole Union.

He has left his countrymen the example of a useful, honorable, and patriotic life, and he has left to us, his survivors here, the memory of a friendship unalloyed by regret.

Mr. President, in behalf of the absent Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] I submit the resolutions which I send to the desk, and ask their adoption.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Hon. Randall Lee Gibson, late a Senator from the State of Louisiana.

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed by the presiding officer, to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to attend the funeral at Lexington, Ky., and that the necessary expenses attending the execution of this order be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints as the committee to represent the Senate, provided for in the second resolution, the Senator from Louisiana, Mr. WHITE; the Senator from South Carolina, Mr. BUTLER; the Senator from Georgia, Mr. GORDON; the Senator from South Dakota, Mr. PETTIGREW, and the Senator from Idaho, Mr. SHOUP.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I move, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 20, 1892, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 19, 1892.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION, ASSISTANT UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of letter from the Attorney-General, submitting estimate of deficiencies in appropriation for pay of special assistant United States attorneys for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PROPERTY IN HANDS OF DOORKEEPER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, transmitting inventory of property belonging to the United States in his possession December 18, 1892; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

IMPROVEMENTS, RIVERS AND HARBORS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of preliminary surveys by the Chief of Engineers of the following improvements, namely: Brazos River, Texas, from its mouth to the town of Richmond; mouth of Little Wicomico River, Virginia; harbor of refuge on Lake Pontchartrain, Louisiana, and Sabine River, from Suddith's Bluff, Texas, to Logansport, Louisiana; and Homochetto River, Mississippi, from mouth to Louisville, New Orleans and Texas Railroad bridge; which were severally referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

STATISTICAL ABSTRACT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following concurrent resolution of the Senate:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 20,000 copies of the Statistical Abstract of the United States for the year 1892, prepared by the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department; 6,000 copies for the use of the members of the Senate, 12,000 copies for the use of the members of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Bureau of Statistics, Treasury Department.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate concurrent resolution, authorizing the printing of this Statistical Abstract. It is one of the regular publications, and a similar resolution has been reported favorably by the House Committee on Printing. I ask that the resolution be considered at this time.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered and agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid upon the table.

OLD DOMINION STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Mr. CAUSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3059) for the relief of the Old Dominion Steamship Company.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Old Dominion Steamship Company the sum of $1,166.16, being the amount with $100 additional paid by it involuntarily and under protest to the collector of the port of New York as a fine imposed for a violation of section 2809 of the Revised Statutes, said money having been covered into the Treasury, and said fine, less $100, having upon due application been authorized to be remitted by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. Is that simply the amount of a fine to be remitted?

Mr. CAUSEY. This is a case where the Government of the United States collected a fine, which was paid under protest, and after investigation the Government, finding it was wrong, Secretary Windom authorized the collector of the port to pay it back.

Mr. DINGLEY. And it can not be repaid, having been covered into the Treasury.

Mr. CAUSEY. It can not be paid for that reason.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is the amount covered by the bill the amount of the fine?

Mr. CAUSEY. The amount of $100 is retained by the Treasury out of the total amount of the fine.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has it been reported by a committee of the House?

Mr. CAUSEY. Yes, sir; favorably.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading; and, being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. CAUSEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid upon the table.

CITADEL ACADEMY, CHARLESTON, S. C.

Mr. BRAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2981) for the relief of the Citadel Academy, of Charleston, S. C.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to relieve the Citadel Academy of the State of South Carolina, at Charleston, S. C., from all money responsibility for so much of the ordnance and ordnance stores issued to said Citadel Academy under its bond dated May 8, 1891, as was destroyed by fire on March 14, 1892.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. May I inquire of the gentleman from South Carolina the amount of value involved in this proposition?

Mr. BRAWLEY. I think it is only a few hundred dollars, though I am not able to state the exact amount. There were some guns loaned by the General Government to the Citadel Academy for the use of the students, which were destroyed by fire. I am not able, however, to state the exact amount.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Has the gentleman no means of informing the House of the amount covered by the bill?

Mr. BRAWLEY. I have not, sir, except what is set forth in the report. I do not think it will exceed a thousand dollars, though.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I think we ought to have some knowledge as to the amount involved.

Mr. BRAWLEY. It would be safe to state that it would not exceed a thousand dollars. These were old guns which were loaned to the students and destroyed by fire in the academy. It is precisely similar to a bill passed at this session for the relief of the University of Missouri.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Is there any report from the Department upon it?

Mr. BRAWLEY. I have in my hand the report of the committee, which will explain the matter.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I hope it will be read.

The report (by Mr. BUNN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2981) for the relief of the Citadel Academy, Charleston, S. C., beg leave to report:

Your committee have carefully considered the same and adopt the Senate report, which is as follows:

"The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2981) for the relief of the Citadel Academy, of Charleston, S. C., having considered the same, report as follows:

"On the 14th of March last the Citadel Academy of the State of South Carolina, at Charleston, was partially destroyed by fire, and among other property consumed were certain arms and equipments issued by the War Department to that institution under existing laws. The fire occurred without fault on the part of the officers of the academy, and there was no insurance on the articles referred to.

"This bill authorizes the Secretary of War to relieve the academy from all money responsibility for the articles destroyed under its bond, dated May 8, 1891.

"The bill is in the form of an act passed at the present session of Congress for the relief of the University of Missouri, the facts in that case being substantially the same as in this.

"Your committee attach hereto a communication from the War Department in relation to this subject, and recommend the passage of the bill."

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., April 21, 1891.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith a letter from the superintendent of the South Carolina Military Academy and the affidavits which accompanied it. Some time ago an effort was made to relieve one of the colleges from responsibility for arms destroyed by fire. The Chief of Ordnance recommended that this should be done, and his recommendation was approved by the Secretary of War. It was discovered subsequently, however, that relief could not thus be given, and that the only method of obtaining it was by act of Congress. I inclose a copy of an act recently passed for a similar purpose, with the name of the college and dates changed to correspond with the case referred to by Mr. Coward.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHARLES SHALER,
Captain, Ordnance Department, U. S. A., Acting Chief of Ordnance.

Hon. M. C. BUTLER,
United States Senate.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading; and, being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. BRAWLEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

THOMAS CHAMBERS.

Mr. STEPHENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1095) for the relief of Thomas Chambers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Thomas Chambers, of Mackinac, Mich., the sum of $3,654.56, in full compensation for the additional expenses incurred by him in carrying the Canada mails, as contractor on route numbered 24413, from Sault de Ste. Marie, Mich., to Mackinac, Mich., from July 1, 1875, to June 30, 1879, inclusive, he having contracted to carry United States mails only.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, let us have the report read, subject to objection.

The report (by Mr. BYRNS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1095) for the relief of Thomas Chambers, beg leave to report the same with the recommendation that it do pass.

A similar bill was favorably reported by your committee in the Fifty-first Congress, and has also passed the Senate this session, and report No. 9, made by Senator MCMILLAN, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, so fully sets forth the facts that your committee adopts the same and makes it a part of this report.

Your committee further recommend that H. R. 2148 lie upon the table.

[Senate Report No. 9, Fifty-second Congress, first session.]

A bill similar to this under consideration was introduced at the first session of the Fifty-first Congress and received a unanimously favorable report from this committee. That report is now adopted by your committee, and is as follows:

"This is a bill to reimburse Thomas Chambers, of Mackinac Island, Mich., for losses sustained by him as contractor on mail route No. 24413, from Mackinac to Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., for the four years ending June 30, 1879.

"In response to the invitation of the Post-Office Department, made in October, 1874, for bids for carrying the mail on this route, the claimant filed his proposal in conformity with the departmental instructions, and his bid of $1,675 was accepted. The contract was completed, and at the designated time he entered upon the service. In the course of events the weight of his mail matter was largely increased by foreign mail put up at Windsor, Canada, in through pouches, to be delivered on the border at Sault Ste. Marie, and it was incumbent upon the United States to transport this mail in pursuance of a postal arrangement concluded subsequent to the execution of the contract between this claimant and the Department. There was nothing in the invitation to bid nor in the contract itself contemplating this extra service.

"The Department avers that the claimant 'made oath that in bidding for the work he did so with full knowledge of the distance of the route, weight of mail to be carried, and all the particulars in reference to the route and service.' He was obliged to do this under the forms prescribed, nevertheless he did it with the full knowledge of the facts, knowledge derived from experience in carrying the mail over this same route as subcontractor or employé when there was but one pouch to carry, when its weight was light, and it could be transported with the use of dogs or one saddle horse.

"Again, the Department refers to certain stipulations contained in the contract as to 'celerity, certainty, and security, using therefor such means as may be necessary to transport the whole of said mail, whatever may be its size, weight, or increase during the term of the contract.' These again are the usual and formal stipulations, but in enumerating them the Department concedes that the contract contained no clause relative to carrying foreign mail; that it was not until 1883 that such clauses were inserted in contracts. Plainly no such extra service was contemplated by either party to this contract, and especially by the party of the second part.

"This man made his bid in good faith. His practical experience convinced him that he could fulfill his obligation without loss to himself or injury to his bondsmen. His estimate was based upon the cost of employing one man and one horse to carry one pouch. He knew that there could be no local increase. It came, but not by reason of any circumstance that he could have foreseen. It came in the form of foreign mail, not contemplated by the terms of the contract, as the Post-Office Department admits; and it tripled his service, his expenses, his responsibility.

"In the opinion of the committee this case does not involve a mere question of technicality. It is one of equity and justice. Even by the terms of the contract the Department did not hold an advantage whereby it could demand this extra service for which there was no adequate compensation.

"If the Department, as it is assumed, has not the power to reimburse this man, it is the imperative duty of Congress to do it.

"The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope if the bill comes before the House, it will be with the understanding that there shall be an explanation of it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to have a little explanation of this bill before action is taken thereon. I have some views in regard to it, but would like to hear from those in favor of the bill first. I do not wish to yield the floor, but if some gentleman can explain the point of this bill, I would like to hear the explanation, and I will yield time for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The bill is before the House. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BUTLER] has the floor, and can yield time if he wishes to.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BYRNS] made the report in this case, but is not present. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BUTLER] that if he listened to the reading of the report he would be fully advised as to the nature of the claim. The gentleman will observe that the last House passed this bill, and the bill has also passed the Senate in the present Congress. It is now unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims of this House. It will be seen therefore that the bill has passed both bodies at different times.

The gentleman will observe, if he listened to the report, that this contract was for carrying the mails at a time when they were of a domestic character entirely and required only one horse and one man for their transportation. Subsequently, after the contract was let and the contractor entered upon the performance of the duties involved, the mails were heavily increased by the addition of Canadian mails, so that he was obliged to triple the expense incurred by him in carrying the mails, thereby incurring a loss of about $3,000 actually expended to carry out his contract. This bill, which has passed the Senate and been reported unanimously by the committee in this House, is to reimburse him. It was also reported unanimously in the last Congress, as I understand, by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. OATES. Would it not be a rather dangerous precedent to establish if we should pass this bill? Do you not suppose there are a great many contractors who lose money by their contracts, and could they not with equal propriety come here and ask to be reimbursed for their losses?

Mr. BURROWS. I do not think it would be dangerous. We could consider each case by itself.

Mr. OATES. Is there any precedent already established?

Mr. BURROWS. I do not know and have no interest in knowing whether there is any precedent or not. If this man's services were increased by the obligations imposed upon him subsequent to the making of the contract, so that he is really out the $3,000, it seems to me, as a matter of equity, as the committee say in their report, he ought to be reimbursed.

Mr. OATES. But is it not simply a case of a bad contract on his part, which he asks Congress to make good?

Mr. BURROWS. No. When he made the contract he supposed there were no mails to be carried except our domestic mails. Subsequently the service was increased by these foreign mails.

Mr. OATES. His compensation ought to have been increased then.

Mr. BURROWS. That is what this bill is for.

Mr. OATES. But the increase ought to have been made by the Department, and not here.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, this bill is one the particulars of which I understand something about, and I wished to get the explanation in order that I might be sure that it was the case that I have in mind. This foreign mail which is said to have been increased under this contract was increased by an arrangement with Canada in 1873, whereby the mail from Sault Ste. Marie, Canada, was carried over this route from Sault Ste. Marie to Mackinac. That was in 1873. This man Chambers made his contract in 1875, two years later, it being a contract for four years, whereby he was to carry the mail from Sault Ste. Marie, via Stephensburg and St. Ignace, to Mackinac, a distance of 66 miles, three times a week, the route being numbered 24387; but the next year, the 14th day of July, 1876, the contract was so changed that the mail, instead of going over the whole line during the time that navigation was open, only went from St. Ignace, Mich., to Mackinac, a distance of 6 miles.

The Department then reduced the amount that was to be paid in the sum of $761.36. The original contract was $1,675. This reduction of the amount of work to be done made a reduction in the price, and he received after that $913.64. He was paid one month's extra pay on account of the reduction. Now that was the mail that he carried. He carried this during the four years of his contract, and then the next man who took it, who was Hawkins Taylor, of Washington, took the contract for carrying the same mail at $23.64 less than the other man had been carrying it for during the four years.

And now he comes here, after another contractor carried it for four years for less than he did, and asks to be reimbursed for money he claims to have expended in excess of his contract.

Mr. DOCKERY. Do I understand the gentleman from Iowa to say that the present contractor carried this mail for $23.64 less than the claimant in this case?

Mr. BUTLER. I can not say anything about the present contractors. I know that the party, Thomas Chambers, had a contract to carry the mail from 1875 to 1879, and that his successor, Hawkins Taylor, carried it from 1879 to 1883 for $23.64 less annually than Thomas Chambers carried it. It was a moderate mail, and the only material increase was an increase made two years before this Chambers had this contract at all.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then the succeeding contractor in fact carried the mail for less than the beneficiary in this bill?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; for less than Chambers carried it.

Mr. HEARD. Less than this man absolutely received.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; and there is no reason whatever why he should be paid this increased compensation. I know the route very well, having been over it, and it is simply because of that fact that my attention was first called to it. There is no report from the Post-Office Department concerning it. They do not recommend its payment, and because there was no such recommendation I looked up the case and found the facts as I have stated. There is no justification for the claim, and this man ought not to receive one single dollar; and further than that, he was paid one month's salary more than he contracted for.

Mr. DOCKERY. That seems to be clear.

The question was taken on ordering the bill to be read the third time, and the Speaker announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. STEPHENSON. Division.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 22, noes 60.

Mr. STEPHENSON. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STEPHENSON] makes the point that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STEPHENSON] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BUTLER].

The House again divided, and before the result was announced

Mr. STEPHENSON said: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum, and ask that the bill go over until some other time.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum being withdrawn, the "noes" have it, and the House refuses to allow the bill to be read the third time.

LATE ENSIGN D. F. TERRELL.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 570) to provide for the removal of the remains of the late Ensign D. F. Terrell, United States Navy, from Sitka, Alaska, to his home in the State of Mississippi.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to make such arrangements as he may deem necessary and proper for the removal from Sitka, Alaska, to Crystal Springs, Copiah County, Miss., of the remains of the late Ensign D. F. Terrell, United States Navy, who died on board the United States steamer Pinta at Sitka, Alaska, on the 15th of April, 1891; and such expense as may be necessarily incurred thereby shall be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated upon duly certified bills therefor.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississipi. Mr. Speaker, the report accompanying this bill is a unanimous report from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BURROWS. It is all right.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the report ought to be read.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Very well, let it be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to the bill.

The report (by Mr. PAGE of Maryland) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 570) providing for the removal of the remains of the late Ensign D. F. Terrell, United States Navy, from Sitka, Alaska, to his home in the State of Mississippi, have had the same under consideration and beg leave to report it back and recommend its passage, for the reasons stated in the report from the Committee on Naval Affairs in the Senate of the United States and the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, dated the 23d day of February, 1892, herewith appended.

[Senate Report No. 277, Fifty-second Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 570) providing for the removal of the remains of the late Ensign D. F. Terrell, United States Navy, from Sitka, Alaska, to his home in the State of Mississippi, have had the same under consideration and beg leave to report it back and recommend its passage, your committee concurring in the view held by the Secretary of the Navy in this case, as per letter of the 23d of February, 1892, herewith appended.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 23, 1892.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 2d instant, inclosing a copy of Senate bill No. 570, "to provide for the removal of the remains of the late Ensign D. F. Terrell, United States Navy, from Sitka, Alaska, to his home in the State of Mississippi," and requesting the opinion of this Department as to the merits of the bill, I have the honor to state that while, under the provisions of section 1587 of the Revised Statutes, the funeral expenses of a naval officer who dies in the United States can not be allowed, it would seem that, in view of the great distance of the ports of Alaska from any other ports of the United States, and of the long sea voyage which must be made in returning from Sitka, the port at which Ensign Terrell died, the case is not substantially different from that of an officer who dies while on duty in a foreign port.

Very respectfully,

B. F. TRACY, Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. M. C. BUTLER,
Committee on Naval Affairs, United States Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. REED. I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi if there is any provision by which the body of an American officer dying abroad can be brought to the United States?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. There is a statute on that subject to-day. The remains of an officer are allowed to be brought from abroad, but as Alaska is a Territory, though very distant from the United States, that statute would not apply in this case. This officer was buried in the ice and mountains, and we wish to bring his remains to the United States and have them buried in a warmer climate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ROBERT CARRICK.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1861) for the relief of Robert Carrick, late first lieutenant, Eighth United States Cavalry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint or reinstate Robert Carrick (late a first lieutenant of the Eighth Regiment of United States Cavalry, a first lieutenant in the Army, and to place him upon the retired list of the Army in the rank and grade of first lieutenant of cavalry, from the date of approval of this act, any provision of the law limiting the number of officers on said list to the contrary notwithstanding.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, the report——

Mr. KILGORE. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the regular order, which is equivalent to an objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE], from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, desires to submit a report from that committee. As the day for the consideration of bills reported from that committee will soon be here, he asks to submit a report now.

Mr. WISE. It is very important to get it in.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE-COMMERCE ACT.

Mr. WISE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 7003) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,'" approved March 2, 1889; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being the third Monday of the month, it is in order to move to suspend the rules by committees. On July 17, when the committees were being called for supension, the call rested with the Committee on Patents, which committee called up the bill (H. R. 9160) for the relief of William L. Winans. A second was ordered, debate was had, a vote was taken, the point that no quorum had voted was made, tellers were appointed, and in that condition the House adjourned. The Clerk will now report the bill so that the House may understand what the bill is.

The bill was read for information.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAUGEN] will take their places as tellers.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman from South Carolina to consent to a few minutes' debate. I would suggest that there be fifteen minutes' debate on each side, and I will withdraw the point of no quorum. I think that some of the facts were not developed when this matter was discussed before, and the House ought to have a little more light in relation to this bill. Will the gentleman consent to an additional fifteen minutes' debate on each side?

Mr. TILLMAN. If the House will agree to it, I have no objection to illimitable debate.

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent. Debate has been closed, a motion has been made to suspend the rules and pass the bill, tellers have been appointed and the fact of no quorum has been developed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that by unanimous consent a reasonable time will be allowed for debate.

Mr. HAUGEN. I suggest fifteen minutes on each side.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent is asked that fifteen minutes' debate upon each side of the pending proposition be permitted before the vote is taken. Is there objection?

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAUGEN] to say that if his suggestion for debate should be agreed to he would withdraw the point of no quorum. Will that preclude its renewal by any member?

The SPEAKER. It will not. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to control the fifteen minutes in favor of the proposition and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAUGEN] to control the fifteen minutes against it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], state the particular features of this bill which ought to recommend it to the House.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. LAPHAM], who was chairman of the special subcommittee that had charge of the bill. I will merely say to the House that after thorough investigation and consideration of this bill time and again it was reported unanimously by the committee.

Mr. LAPHAM. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand exactly the inquiry made by the gentleman from Wisconsin as to this bill. I will say to the House, however, that the bill was carefully explained when it was up for consideration before, and that the report contains, as we conceive, a very clear statement of the nature of the measure and of what it is intended to accomplish. As I understand, the only objection, or the principal objection that is now raised to the passage of the bill is that it may interfere with somebody's rights in connection with what are called "whaleback" steamers used upon the Great Lakes. This bill is for the relief of an inventor who has been at work for over thirty years inventing and developing a new type of ocean-going steam-vessel which, if his experiments prove to be finally successful, will be the greatest step ever taken in ocean navigation.

It is positively stated, as a matter of experiment and experience covering years with the experimental boats, that a vessel built according to the invention and construction of this Mr. Winans will cross the ocean in four days, that it will pass over the roughest waters without pitching, and that in very few cases does it roll in rough water. It can be readily understood that it is not an ordinary matter to so revolutionize the construction of ocean-going steamers. This invention, therefore, does not come under the ordinary rules of the patent law which require an inventor to develop his invention within a reasonable time. This is an enormous undertaking. It has occupied, as I have said, the life of a generation. It is a wonderfully exceptional case. If it be objected that this bill is an innovation in the nature of the extension of a patent, I say that the invention itself is an innovation, such a thing as has never occurred before in the history of civilization, and that it is well worth while for the Congress of the United States to extend encouragement and help to such a marvelous development as has been made by this inventor in recognition of the ingenuity and the tremendous perseverance manifested, and the limitless expense that has been incurred in connection with it.

Mr. SIMPSON. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. This patent was applied for by these gentlemen some twenty years ago, was it not?

Mr. LAPHAM. I will give that history briefly if the gentleman desires.

Mr. SIMPSON. I wish to ask another question. Have not the gentlemen on the lakes who have developed these whaleback vessels and made them successful done it all within the last five years?

Mr. LAPHAM. I will state that several successive patents have been applied for and taken out from time to time for this invention by the Winan family, many of them by this same William L. Winans. Many of those patents, I do not know but all of them, have already expired.

Subsequent experiments have proved many of the ideas embodied in those patents to be crude and not available in practice. The inventor himself did not at first comprehend the scope and magnitude of the field upon which he had entered. Not one of these patents, I understand, is of any use to any living man; but in each or in several of these expired patents there are fragments which, united with what has now been developed, will make one perfect complete system of naval construction and navigation; and this applicant only asks that those prior patents may not stand as a bar to his taking out one patent possessing the integrity of a patent that is capable of application and use.

Mr. TILLMAN. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. LAPHAM. The committee, carefully weighing the possibilities that some rays of dim light may have been thrown on this subject by the patents to which this bill refers and which have now expired, realizing the fact that somebody else may have caught an inspiration from what those patents showed, have carefully incorporated in the bill a provision covering all such cases as the whaleback, and cases which may be unknown to us where any man or firm or corporation anywhere in the United States may have begun to study and lay out money upon any fragment of those inventions. Such a man is wholly protected in what he has done; he may continue the use of all that he has begun to use.

It is provided that as to any person who has used any part of these expired patents the patent contemplated by this bill, if granted, shall be void. There is thus careful protection for everybody, including the whaleback makers, should they come within (as I do not believe they will) any of the inventions of Mr. Winans.

Mr. HAUGEN. Does the proviso in the bill protect anybody except patentees under the Winans patents?

Mr. LAPHAM. The proviso protects everybody in the United States.

Mr. HAUGEN. It protects those who are protected by the patents recited in the bill; that means the Winans patents.

Mr. LAPHAM. That is all that this patent can refer to. The provision in this bill is that Winans may apply to the Commissioner of Patents; the bill does not grant him any patent; he is permitted to apply to the Commissioner and to take out a patent for anything in this line that he has himself invented or developed. This bill simply removes the bar which the prior patents might oppose to his getting a complete patent for his entire invention. No patent can be issued to him if this bill be passed unless he shows before the Commissioner of Patents what any inventor applying for a patent is required to show, that he is the originator or inventor of what he asks to have covered by his patent.

We go further, however, in this bill and provide that if the patent be granted by the Commissioner under the authority of this bill, such patent shall not interfere with the rights of anybody else who may have availed himself of anything in the expired patents; that such persons may go on with their business unmolested. If the whaleback makers are using this same principle, they may go on with their business exactly as if this patent were not granted.

Mr. LOUD. Provided, of course, that they do not infringe. That question would have to be determined, would it not?

Mr. LAPHAM. There can be no infringement in such case.

Mr. LOUD. Do you believe that the persons who are now building those whaleback vessels would still be allowed to build them if this patent were granted?

Mr. LAPHAM. Absolutely and positively I do believe it. In the first place I do not know that anything which Winans would claim would interfere with the construction of those vessels. If it did, the proviso of the bill would absolutely prevent him from interfering with the construction of those vessels. That is the very object of the proviso—that the patent to be granted to Winans should not interfere with anybody who has availed himself of anything in the prior patents.

Mr. LOUD. Has not the building of those whaleback vessels on the lakes tended more to the development of this patent than anything Mr. Winans has ever done?

Mr. LAPHAM. I do not think it has had anything to do with the development of Mr. Winans's invention, because he has been pursuing the development of his form of vessel over thirty years, until he has now, by innumerable trials, proved that his construction, his combination of parts, his proportions, his methods of propulsion and of steering, can all be relied on, and that a person can more safely trust himself upon the broad ocean in a vessel thus constructed than in any other vessel.

Mr. ATKINSON. Will the gentleman please state what inventions are covered by the patents which this bill proposes to extend?

Mr. LAPHAM. In the time I have it is impossible for me to give an analysis of those prior patents; and though I have carefully examined them heretofore I should require more time than I have to review their provisions.

Mr. ATKINSON. Does the gentleman think that this bill should be considered and acted on with only fifteen minutes' debate on each side, when he has not time to state the patents which will be extended?

Mr. LAPHAM. I will say to the gentleman that the United States can not be in any manner harmed by the passage of this bill; and that no individual can be harmed, for it is so carefully framed as to provide all proper protection in every possible case, such as the gentleman suggests.

Mr. Winans, in going before the Committee of Patents under the authority of this bill, will be subject to all the limitations which control any other inventor applying for a patent, except the single case of his own prior patents. This is the only exception which the bill makes in favor of Mr. Winans. If he had never taken out a patent he would ask for a patent to cover his whole invention, but having already disclosed fragments of the invention, which subsequent developments proved to be useless without more, and having now arrived, after unprecedented perseverance, at a completed system of construction, by which he has conquered the ocean for our benefit, he asks that he may go before the Patent Office with the same rights he would have had if he never appeared there before.

If there is anything exceptional in this, it is far less exceptional than the achievement of this inventor. Can not this Congress afford and well afford, to do an exceptional thing for the purpose of securing an exceptional blessing to the people whom we represent?

It is not for the sake of Mr. Winans that the Patent Committee advocates this bill, but it is for the sake of the ocean commerce of 65,000,000 of people. For years we have deplored the decadence of American shipbuilding. Once our sails whitened the seas. We pointed with pride to our fast-sailing clipper ships, the product of American ingenuity. Now, steam has supplanted the sailing vessel and our exports go to foreign markets in foreign bottoms. Shall we, when an American citizen comes forward and offers to restore us to our former proud position at the head of the mercantile fleets of the world, carp and quibble, and say no, it would be exceptional, it would be special legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I welcome such special legislation. Such strides in advancing civilization do not occur with sufficient frequency to be alarming. When a special opportunity offers itself to put ourselves again at the head and front of ocean navigation I would not repel it because it is to be obtained through special legislation.

The bill is a private bill only in name. It is general and national in its scope and purpose. We can not afford to turn the cold shoulder to our countryman who brings us this invention and send him to our commercial rivals.

Mr. TILLMAN. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, when this matter was before the House in July last for consideration I did not then believe that a single member of the House outside of the Committee on Patents was familiar with the provisions of the bill, or, in fact, knew anything about it. Now, I do not know but that the gentleman from Rhode Island may be entirely correct when he says that there is nothing in the bill to interfere with any rights of any citizen of the United States. But there are citizens of the United States with large sums of money invested, with large capital employed in building vessels, who do think that their rights would be seriously interfered with if this bill should be enacted into law. In their behalf, therefore, I appeal to this House that this bill ought not to pass.

Now as to the equities of Mr. Winans, of which we have heard so much from the gentleman from Rhode Island. About thirty years ago or more, Mr. Ross Winans, the father of William L. Winans, took out letters patent for what he called a "spindle-shaped" vessel, and the gentleman in his remarks says that during the last thirty years the Winans family has been unable to develop and complete one of these vessels. The whaleback vessel was invented about ten years ago, and since that time Mr. McDougall, who invented it, and the American Steel Barge Company, the purchasers of the patent, have put on the waters thirty-six of these vessels which are now engaged in the carrying business for the people of this country.

This Mr. Winans, I am informed, went to England something over thirty years ago. He has resided there ever since. He has not spent any money or any time in the development of the invention on this side of the water, except perhaps a sufficient amount to build a small model vessel at Baltimore and the $4,000,000 spoken of by the gentleman from Rhode Island, as having been expended by him in the development of the invention was expended in the employment of English workmen and English material, and none of it in the United States. The laborers employed by him have been employed in England and not here. Is that not true? I ask the members of the committee if that is not a fair statement of the case?

Mr. TILLMAN. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that experiments have been carried on in Baltimore, in Russia, in England, and I think also in France.

Mr. HAUGEN. I understand that there was a small model built in Baltimore, and that is all of the experimental work that has been going on in the United States. The bulk of the work has been carried on, as I am informed, on the Isle of Wight, and not in the United States. That is where the money was expended, and that is where the labor was employed.

Mr. LAPHAM. The report shows, if the gentleman will permit me, that a vessel 256 feet in length was built in the city of Baltimore.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I have tried in vain to get a copy of the report, but am informed that the supply is exhausted and that it is not available to members of the House. I am unable, therefore, to speak except from recollection of what the report contains. I do not remember what the report states in that respect, but I am informed by Mr. McDougal, the inventor of the whaleback vessel, that no boats were built in Baltimore, but on the contrary were built across the ocean on the Isle of Wight, and this is information from a man who has given his attention to the matter and who is well informed upon the subject.

So that I repeat I can see no equities here in Mr. Winans's behalf that ought to appeal to the generosity of the House.

I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], if he desires to occupy the time.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, this is a remarkable bill, in many respects the most remarkable that I have ever known to be presented to this or to any other House. It is not a proposition simply to extend an existing patent, which occasionally have appeared in the House and have been passed by it, but it is a very different proposition. Even such propositions are viewed with suspicion. This, however, is a proposition practically to revive a patent which was granted in 1858, and which expired in 1879—for although in form a new patent yet in effect it revives a patent long since expired—and not only to revive but to extend it for the period now authorized by law for new patents.

In 1858 Mr. Ross Winans was granted what, under the circumstances at that time, may have been a justifiable patent, but which if granted to-day would certainly not be granted in the broad language used in the original patent. It gave a general patent right to Ross Winans to construct spindle-shaped vessels. That simple description of the spindle-shaped vessel is one which covers cigar-shaped vessels, all torpedo vessels of the present day, the whaleback vessels that have since been invented and used, and may be made to cover almost an innumerable multitute of new classes of vessels. If the patent were granted to-day it should be granted not in such general terms as the bill proposes, but specifically for a distinct thing, that should be distinctly presented to this Congress and clearly specified in the law.

But the proposition to revive a patent which expired thirteen years ago and give it a life of seventeen years, is an extraordinary one, in the face of the fact that whaleback vessels have been invented within the past ten years, and are being built on the Great Lakes in large numbers; and certainly whaleback vessels are of the type known as spindle-shaped vessels. It is extraordinary in the face of the fact that Mr. Winans, the father of the beneficiary of this bill, was in 1858 given a patent for all vessels built on the spindle-shaped idea that continued for twenty-one years, and during this period evolved nothing practical; and now, since others have taken up the idea and evolved something practical in the shape of the whaleback vessel, he seeks to be given the same standing that he had before his patent expired. Indeed, I noticed in the papers of yesterday that a vessel of the whaleback class—the Christopher Columbus—has been launched on the Great Lakes, to run between the city of Chicago and the World's Exposition.

I trust that this House will not at this time, and in the face of all the progress that has been made in the development of spindle-shaped, cigar-shaped, or the whaleback class of vessels, undertake by special act to direct the Commissioner of Patents to practically revive an old patent that expired thirteen years ago and give it a life of seventeen years, for a type of vessel which the would-be beneficiary confesses he (or rather his father) was unable to make practicable during the twenty-one years in which he held the sole right to build. It would be such special legislation as I have never before heard of in the history of Congress, and I can not believe that it will be entertained for a single moment. It will be contrary to all the ideas of existing patent laws to give any one a patent to-day for an idea that has been carried out in practice by others, and on which vessels have been constructed.

If this gentleman has invented something useful, is really the inventor of it, and has made his invention practical, he may apply to the Patent Office under existing laws and obtain his patent; and the fact that this legislation is asked is a confession on the part of the beneficiary of this bill that he desires the Congress of the United States to give him special legislation, erecting a monopoly in his name, of the right to construct a vessel to which he is not entitled to a patent under the liberal patent laws of the nation—confessedly as liberal as justice and the public interests admit. It is contrary to all ideas of justice, it is contrary to all ideas of progress to grant special legislation of this kind, and I can not believe that this House will favor it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] two minutes.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Patents, I only desire to say that if I believed the statement made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] to be correct I would not, as a member of this House, vote for this bill. His statement is in great measure outside of the facts; and the object of the bill, as he positively states it, is certainly different from the object which the committee itself understand it to have. It is not a proposition to revive a patent, and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] must know it.

As has been explained by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. LAPHAM], it is a proposition to permit the Commissioner of Patents to entertain an application which would contemplate the obtaining by this inventor of a patent for ideas in construction which were once patented to him, but have not been availed of by any other person. When this proposition was before the committee, I myself raised the point that it might interfere with the construction of these whaleback vessels, and that point was thoroughly gone over before our committee, and to our satisfaction it was made perfectly plain that there would be no such interference.

Therefore we reported the bill to this House with a proviso which would completely and fully protect the inventors and constructors of these vessels and of all other vessels now in use; and, as I say candidly to this House, if I entertained any doubt on the proposition I should not vote for the bill. But I believe, having examined the question thoroughly, having myself called the attention of the committee to the possible interference with the construction of these whaleback vessels, the importance of which to commerce I fully understand—having, as I say, called the attention of the committee to the point, it was gone over; and the committee believe that we have fairly protected the whaleback and every other form of construction that has been adopted by any living inventor and constructor of vessels.

Mr. HARRIES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEARD. I have not the time remaining.

Mr. LAPHAM. We can not take anything that is in existing patents.

Mr. HEARD. The proposition is simply to authorize the Commissioner of Patents to entertain an application for the patenting of an invention, once patented by this man, which has never been appropriated by any living mortal. If any of his ideas have been appropriated, they are by the express language of the bill excepted.

Mr. LIND. Is not that the extension of a patent?

Mr. HEARD. Not at all.

Mr. LIND. What is it then?

Mr. HEARD. It simply gives the Commissioner authority to entertain an application to do this if in his judgment it is new to the balance of the world, and has not been availed of by other persons than the original patentee.

Mr. HAUGEN. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBOROW] desires to occupy any time I will yield to him. [After a pause.] I understand the gentleman does not desire to say anything, and unless some gentleman wishes to occupy the time, I will reserve it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Patents adopted a resolution at its very first meeting that under no circumstances would it even consider a proposition to extend a patent. That committee has been pursuing that course for several years; but the proposition offered on behalf of the Winans patentee was so comprehensive, I might say it was so startling, it was so revolutionary to ocean navigation, and promised so much for the good of mankind, that the committee felt compelled to suspend its resolution as to that case.

Now, sir, we feel our responsibility as members of the Committee on Patents, to which work has been assigned, I hope, as much as the members of any committee of this House.

We spent several months investigating this bill, and, as I said awhile ago, we unanimously came to the conclusion that it ought to be reported to the House. Yet here is the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAUGEN] who has addressed the House and assumed to argue against this bill while at the same time he confesses that he never read the report on it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Excuse me. I read the report last summer, but I said that I had been unable to get a copy of the report to-day, because the supply is exhausted.

Mr. TILLMAN. I understood the gentleman to say that he had not read the report, but if he did read it he does not remember it, or he would not talk about the bill as he has. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAUGEN. It might not state the facts.

Mr. TILLMAN. The truth is, that all this palaver against this bill is simply an advertisement of the whaleback steamer; and I can see no other ground for it. Why, sir, the essence of the Winans patent is that the whole hull shall be a perfect circle from stem to stern. Your whaleback hull has no circle about it except at the center. It is shaped slabsided, like a fish, with the tail of a fish stuck up at one end [laughter], while the Winans steamer is a circle all the way from end to end. That is the essence of the Winans patent. It does not violate a single principle in your whaleback vessel.

Three members of the committee went to the Patent Office and examined the whaleback patents. The whaleback steamer is based on at least seventy-five patents; and if this bill passes it could not violate the whaleback patents. Besides, the bill does not propose outright to grant a patent to Winans. On the contrary, it refers the matter to the Commissioner of Patents, and all rights, as mentioned by the two speakers who preceded me, are protected, even the rights of the heirs of Ross Winans and Thomas Winans, the original patentees, much less those of the public. The bill also proposes to give the United States Government the right to build war ships according to the Winans patents.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish I had a few minutes more, as I am sure the House would pass the bill if all its merits were understood.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR].

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, my objection to this bill particularly is, that it is the rankest and most inexcusable of special legislation. I do not understand how people who are opposed to special legislation can favor this bill. The patentee has had all he can get under the law, and now his son asks for a special law by which he will get more than any other inventor. To that feature of the bill, without reference to anything else, I have an objection that can not be overcome. No provisions in the bill, no carefully drawn wording, can affect and overcome that character of objection.

Again, it may be that the whaleback ship, of which I know nothing, is not a circle throughout all its length; but it may be, nevertheless, a violation of these original patents to be circular anywhere, and thus be an injury to the patentee.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? Do you not know that nobody can patent a principle, and do you not also know that a circle is a principle of mathematics and mechanics, and that no one can monopolize it?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I know a man can patent one idea, and I also know that no man can infringe or appropriate a part of that idea.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Winans patent, I will state, if the gentleman will allow me, is a circle from stem to stern, merely a new arrangement or application of a general principle.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, the report in this bill and the bill itself both admit that there are some interests——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I have not time.

It is admitted that there are some interests outstanding, although there are provisions guarding against any violation. Now, if I remember rightly the reading of the bill, although I do not think that it is designed, an injustice may be done. Suppose that in the whaleback are introduced some of the patents that would violate the rights obtained in this case. It is provided in the bill, as I understand it, that these existing rights shall not be interfered with by this bill. I construe that to mean simply this and nothing more; that so far as the whaleback is already provided to corporations or individuals that are now using them, and to that extent alone this provision protects them, but beyond that that they are not protected. What in the world does this patentee desire this extension for if it affects nobody? What is his claim? What is his right that he seeks to patent? What advantage will it be to him, or anybody outside of him, without the extension of this patent? Mr. Speaker, I protest against this legislation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina, to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds had not voted in favor thereof.

Mr. TILLMAN. I call for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 27, noes 75.

The SPEAKER. Two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof, the motion is lost.

LIGHT-HOUSES.

Mr. BRICKNER, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as a substitute for House bill 8007, a bill (H. R. 9955) providing for sundry light-houses and other aids to navigation; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MEXICAN WAR PENSIONS.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill which I send to the desk, with the amendment indicated.

The Senate bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to increase the pension of every pensioner who is now on the rolls at $8 per month on account of services in the Mexican war and who is wholly disabled for manual labor, and is in such destitute circumstances that $8 per month are insufficient to provide him the necessaries of life, to $12 per month.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase to the sum of $12 per month the pension of every pensioner, including widows and the officers and enlisted men of Powell's Battalion of Missouri Mounted Volunteers, who is now on the rolls or entitled to be pensioned at $8 per month under the act of Congress entitled 'An act granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war, and for other purposes,' approved January 29, 1887, and the act of Congress entitled 'An act granting pensions to Powell's Battalion of Missouri Mounted Volunteers,' approved March 3, 1891: Provided, That the increase of pension provided herein shall begin from and after the date of the passage of this act."

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, is not that a proposition to substitute a private bill for a public measure? I understood that the Senate bill was a general one, while the amendment relates to certain Missouri troops.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. No, sir; it simply embraces certain Missouri troops.

Mr. BURROWS. I understand that the proposition is to strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and substitute that amendment.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. It is.

Mr. BURROWS. The original bill provided for an increase to $12 per month for those who are indigent and unable to support themselves, but the amendment contains no such restriction.

The SPEAKER (having examined the bill). The Chair will state to the gentleman from Michigan that the amendment is general in its scope, but it also contains a provision specifically including a certain battalion of volunteers, which the Chair supposes would not be included under the general law. The Chair will have the bill and the amendment read again for the information of the House.

The Clerk again read the bill and proposed amendment, as above.

Mr. BURROWS. Now, if that amendment relates to anything but the Missouri volunteers I fail to understand it.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. Oh, yes, it is a general bill.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BURROWS. I demand a second.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I should like to propose an amendment to this bill so as to include the name of Henry B. Wood, of Primrose, N. Y. He was a Mexican soldier——

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered; I have no objection to that.

Mr. BURROWS. I have no objection to that.

There being no objection, a second was considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILSON] to control the fifteen minutes in favor of the bill and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] to control the fifteen minutes in opposition to it.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say in this connection that the Senate reported and passed a bill which pertained merely to dependent Mexican soldiers. The House Committee on Pensions have extended the provisions of that bill to all the Mexican veterans, and that is the only difference between the Senate bill and the amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. Why then does your amendment indicate certain Missouri volunteers?

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. It is not special to those volunteers; it applies to all volunteers of the Mexican war. The only difference between the amendment and the bill passed by the Senate is that that was confined to the dependent Mexican veterans, while this extends the provisions of the bill to all of them. They are all, or nearly all, over 70 years of age, and a large proportion of them are before your committee with private bills.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. Then why do you not agree to admit the name which I propose? He is a very old veteran.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. All of them are old, and this bill covers them all.

Mr. HARRIES. Why have you specified Powell's Battalion of Mounted Volunteers?

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. They are mentioned in the bill because at the last session there was an act passed putting them upon the same basis as other soldiers who enlisted for the Mexican war.

Mr. HARRIES. Will not this bill increasing the pensions of soldiers of the Mexican war cover that battalion without their being specifically named?

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. Well, I do not know; there was some question about that; and as a matter of precaution in the last Congress they were included by a special act among those entitled to Mexican war pensions.

Mr. HARRIES. Do I understand that the effect of this bill is simply to increase from $8 to $12 the pensions of those who are dependent upon their own manual labor and who are now in indigent circumstances?

Mr. DINGLEY. It increases the pension of all these pensioners.

Mr. BURROWS. The amendment increases the pension from $8 to $12 a month without regard to the condition of the pensioner.

A MEMBER. Whether he be rich or poor.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. Well, there are very few rich men among them.

Mr. DINGLEY. And the bill includes also the members of this Missouri battalion who are not on the Mexican roll.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. There are not many of these pensioners living, and from the information which has come to the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman there are no rich people among them. Individual applications of this kind have flooded the committee room for years and years. These men are all old men; I presume you can not find a Mexican veteran under 70 years of age, for it is forty-six years since they enlisted.

Mr. DINGLEY. Will the gentleman give us some information about this Missouri battalion the members of which are placed on the pension roll by this bill?

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. Powell's battalion was raised for the Mexican war in 1846, and rendezvoused at Fort Leavenworth; but instead of being sent to Mexico they were sent out upon the Oregon trail to fight the Indians, taking the place of regular troops.

Mr. DINGLEY. Were they mustered into the United States service?

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. Yes, sir, certainly; they were regular volunteer troops.

Mr. DINGLEY. And they were sent out to the Indian war instead of the Mexican war?

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. Yes, sir; they were sent out to take the place of regular troops. They enlisted for the Mexican war, but the scene of their service was changed by order of the Secretary of War.

Mr. DINGLEY. This bill increases the pension of every soldier of the Mexican war from $8 to $12 without regard to his condition?

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. Yes, sir; that is the effect of the amendment.

Mr. TRACEY. Has the gentleman from Missouri, the chairman of the committee, any estimate as to the extent to which the next general appropriation bill for pensions will be increased by this change of the law?

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. Our estimate is that it will be increased about one million dollars. I will read from the report:

From figures submitted to your committee by the Commissioner of Pensions it appears that the number of survivors of said war now on the pension roll is 15,398, and the number of widows 7,286, making a total of 22,684. If all of these pensioners were to receive an increase of $4 per month pension, the aggregate additional expenditures for the first year would be $1,088,832, but, as is well known, the beneficiaries are all now greatly advanced in years, and the number of pensioners is being rapidly reduced by death, so that if this bill becomes a law the annual cost will not be so great as to add, to any very appreciable extent, to the pension expenditure.

Mr. MILLER. The members of the battalion referred to are now receiving $8 a month?

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. I desire to offer the amendment I have already indicated.

The SPEAKER. No amendment is in order.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. But the gentleman who presents this bill may accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILSON] yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. Yes, sir; I yield to him for three minutes.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. I desire to offer in good faith an amendment to include in this bill Mr. Henry B. Wood. He was a citizen of Philadelphia who enlisted in the Second Pennsylvania Regiment for service in the Mexican war. Subsequently he removed to the State of New York, where he now lives, in the town of Primrose. He has been seeking an increase of pension in the Pension Department, but I do not expect the increase will be granted there, because he is on the roll at $8 a month as a soldier of the Mexican war.

On hearing this bill read, I thought that it applied simply to Missouri volunteers——

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. Oh, no.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. If it does, I do not see why the House should not assent to this amendment to allow the name of Henry B. Wood to be inserted after the words "Missouri volunteers."

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. Henry B. Wood, if he was a soldier of the Mexican war, is included in the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Missouri states that Mr. Wood is included in the bill; but I would like to have him included by name [laughter], just as the Missouri volunteers are specifically included. Mr. Wood was a volunteer from Pennsylvania, a gallant soldier who served his country faithfully. Now, in his old age, he being 74 or 75, he is in very reduced circumstances. I should be very glad if the House would allow this amendment to go on the bill by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that a motion to suspend the rules is not amendable.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. I understand that, Mr. Speaker, but we can suspend the rules by unanimous consent, I think, even to-day.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Missouri is not amendable.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. I intend to vote for the gentleman's bill, but would like to have this old Philadelphian to go in by name.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. I told my friend this man was already included in this bill.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. But I want him included by name.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let me ask the chairman of the committee how long did this Missouri battalion serve in the Mexican war?

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. During the Mexican war.

Mr. DINGLEY. During the entire war?

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. I thought they served on the plains against the Indians?

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. They did.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then why do you propose to include soldiers who served against the Indians in a Mexican pension bill, and give them the same pension that you propose for other Mexican veterans? Why select this battalion out, for instance?

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. The gentleman from Maine will perhaps remember that the act granting a pension to Powell's battalion was passed on March 3, 1891. This battalion was raised for service in the Mexican war, and were en route to the scene of war when they were stopped on the way, and orders were issued countermanding the original order sending them to the seat of war, and they were sent out on the plains to replace the regulars who were operating there against the Indians. This battalion was sent out on what was known as the Oregon trail, and were there engaged while the regulars were sent to Mexico.

Mr. HEARD. If my colleague will allow me a moment, I will state for the information of the gentleman from Maine, and anyone else who has any difficulty in his mind upon this subject, that there were several other military organizations which were in exactly the same condition as these Missouri troops. Morgan's Iowa battalion, for instance, enlisted just like this Missouri battalion for service in the Mexican war, but in place of being sent into Mexico they were sent out on the frontier to hold the forts while the regulars, who had been performing this service before, were sent into Mexico.

The gentleman will remember the language of the general act provided for pensioning the Mexican volunteers who had served for sixty days, I think it was, in the actual operations of war or en route to the seat of war. That language, however, did not embrace this Missouri battalion, nor would it have embraced the battalion of Iowa troops. It was necessary, therefore, to supplement this act by the provision which my colleague from Missouri has submitted to bring these soldiers within the purview of the general pension law granting pensions to the Mexican soldiers.

Now, the soldiers of Powell's battalion and Morgan's battalion and a half dozen other organizations of the same kind were not actually sent to the seat of war. They enlisted for the purpose of going into Mexico, but in place of being sent there their services were used on the frontiers to replace the regulars who were sent in their stead into Mexico; and we have been granting special pensions from time to time for all of these people.

Mr. DINGLEY. Have we ever granted as large a pension as this?

Mr. HEARD. Yes, sir; just the same as was granted by the general act for the same kind of service.

Mr. DINGLEY. But this provision raises these pensions to $12 a month.

Mr. HEARD. If the gentleman will pardon me, this is a proposition to raise the pension, I understand, for all Mexican soldiers now covered by the general law.

Mr. DINGLEY. Or their widows.

Mr. HEARD. Now, Mr. Speaker, the reason why my colleague and the committee embraces Powell's battalion in the bill is because it was not embraced under the general law, but under a special act which was passed since the general law was enacted.

Mr. DINGLEY. My inquiry, if the gentleman will permit me, was whether this would not give a larger pension to Powell's battalion than is now given to other soldiers who served in the Indian wars?

Mr. HEARD. I am not sufficiently familiar with the phraseology of the act to say that that would be the result. It is not, however, designed to do so, but simply to put the members of this Missouri battalion, who performed these services, on the same footing with the Mexican soldiers.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Has the committee made any statement or estimate as to what additional amount would be added to the pension appropriation if this bill should pass?

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. Yes, sir; $1,088,832.

Mr. BURROWS. Who makes that estimate?

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. It is an estimate sent from the office of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. BURROWS. Then it will cost a little over a million of dollars a year?

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. In round numbers.

Mr. PICKLER. This bill, as I understand it, gives the soldiers of the Mexican war an advantage over those engaged in the last war. This gives $12 a month to each soldier engaged in the Mexican war, while as to those engaged in the last war there must be a certain disability before a pension can be granted at all. Is that the difference?

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. Yes, that is the difference.

Mr. HEARD. Then I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. These men volunteered forty-six years ago, and the others about thirty years ago. There is a great difference in the ages of the men. This House is full of those who served in the late war, hearty, strong men yet; but I do not believe there is a Mexican veteran here.

Mr. ANDREW. Would it be necessary for these Mexican veterans to show any injury as the result of the service?

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. No; the presumption is that they are dependent, being mostly men between 70 and 80 years of age. I do not think anybody ought to object to this bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. Has the committee considered the question of the revenue to meet this increased expenditure?

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. Let that take care of itself. This is a measure which ought to be passed, and I have no doubt that means will be found to raise the revenue to meet the just obligations of the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Let them do about that as they did about the rest of the increases in pensions.

Mr. HEARD. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that my understanding of the bill pending before the House was that it was designed to place the Mexican veterans on a footing with the soldiers of the late war. That is to say, that upon a showing of disability or dependency the Mexican veterans should have the same status as the veterans of our late war.

Mr. PICKLER. But the bill does more than that.

Mr. HEARD. If that was the case I would vote for the bill to-day; but, as the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] says, it goes further than that, and I am not in favor of giving these men an advantage beyond that enjoyed by those who fought in the late war. I think the general understanding was that this bill was to put the Mexican soldiers on an equal footing with the soldiers of the late war in that regard. I am perfectly willing to vote to raise their pensions to $12, under the conditions applied to the soldiers of the late war. If my colleague from Missouri [Mr. WILSON] will allow me, I concede the force of what he has said, that in most cases old age prevents their being able to earn a living, and, if that is the case, then their disability may be the more easily shown. Let them show it. Let us not appear by legislative enactment to prefer those veterans to the veterans of the late war. Let us treat them all alike. Let there be no discrimination, at least so far as appearance goes, in our legislative action.

Mr. DINGLEY. This would give higher pensions to the soldiers of the Mexican war than to the soldiers of the late war, unless they came in under the total disability clause.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. Yes, that is true, but the presumption is that most of these men, being over 70 years of age, are dependent anyway.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not care to occupy any time. I think the bill speaks for itself.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILSON] to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill with the amendments which the Clerk has read.

The question being taken, and the Speaker being in doubt, On a division there were—ayes 58, noes 17.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, there does not seem to be a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] makes the point of no quorum voting, and the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILSON] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS].

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, we might have the yeas and nays perhaps.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILSON] proposes to modify his motion.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the committee amendment and ask for the passage of the Senate bill as it comes from the Senate, that being simply a dependent pension bill.

Mr. BURROWS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. I do not want to jeopardize the interests of these old men on account of objections which I did not anticipate. I ask unanimous consent on the part of the committee to withdraw this amendment.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection that can be done.

Mr. DICKERSON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can reach it by moving to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The motion of Mr. WILSON of Missouri was agreed to.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Now I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Mississippi that debate is exhausted.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Yet I should suppose the gentleman might be allowed to explain the object of his bill.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. I now withdraw the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILSON] withdraws the amendment and asks to pass the bill as it came from the Senate.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. I now call for the reading of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to increase the pension of every pensioner who is now on the rolls at $8 per month on account of services in the Mexican war, and who is wholly disabled for manual labor and is in such destitute circumstances that $8 per month are insufficient to provide him the necessaries of life, to $12 per month.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves to suspend the rules and pass this bill.

The question was taken: and on a division (demanded by Mr. DICKERSON) there were—ayes 104, noes 0.

Mr. DICKERSON and Mr. ANDREW. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILSON] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DICKERSON].

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 172, nays 8, not voting 149; as follows:

Mr. BLANCHARD with Mr. DALZELL, from December 17, 1892, to January 10, 1893.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 172, the nays 8; two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules are suspended and the bill is passed.

COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. BUNN (when the Committee on Claims was called). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Claims be passed without prejudice, to be called on the next suspension day. The reason I do that is, I am instructed by the committee to bring up Senate bill 43. The author of that bill is detained from the House on account of death in his family, and in justice to him I ask that it be passed over. I hope unanimous consent will be given.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER (when the Committee on War Claims was called). Mr. Speaker, I desire to make precisely the same request and for substantially the same reason.

The SPEAKER. Without objection this request will be granted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CATHEDRAL FOUNDATION OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL (when the Committee on the District of Columbia was called). Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 9417) to incorporate the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That William Paret, John S. B. Hodges, William Keyser, of Maryland; Melville W. Fuller, Walter S. Cox, George William Douglas, Randolph H. McKim, Thomas Lincoln Casey, John G. Parke, John M. Wilson, Henry E. Pellew, John A. Kasson, Charles C. Glover, George Truesdell, Edward J. Stellwagen, Alexander T. Britton, Calderon Carlisle, Henry E. Davis, Theodore W. Noyes, of the District of Columbia; Levi P. Morton, William C. Whitney, of New York; George W. Childs, Brinton Coxe, of Pennsylvania; John S. Lindsay, of Massachusetts; Marshall Field, of Illinois; George F. Edmunds, of Vermont; George W. Custis Lee, William Wirt Henry, of Virginia, their associates and successors, are hereby constituted a body politic and corporate by the name of the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia, with power to sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, and have perpetual succession; to acquire, take by devise, bequest, or otherwise, hold, purchase, encumber, and convey such real and personal estate as shall be required for the purposes of its incorporation; to make and use a common seal and the same to alter at pleasure; to choose a board of trustees consisting of not more than fifteen, of whom five shall constitute a quorum to do business, and which board shall be authorized to fill any vacancies in their number; to appoint such officers and agents as the business of the corporation shall require, and to make by-laws for the accomplishment of its purposes, for the management of its property, and for the regulation of its affairs: Provided, however, That the bishop of the diocese of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States of America of which the District of Columbia shall or may form the whole or a part shall be ex officio one of said trustees and shall be chairman thereof: And further provided, That no part of the property of said corporation shall be aliened or encumbered without the written concurrence of the bishop of the diocese aforesaid. Said corporation is hereby empowered to establish and maintain within the District of Columbia a cathedral and institutions of learning for the promotion of religion and education and charity. The said corporation shall have power to grant and confer diplomas and the usual college and university degrees and honorary degrees, and also such other powers as may be necessary fully to carry out and execute the general purposes of the said corporation as herein appearing.

SEC. 2. This act may be amended or repealed at any time by the Congress in its pleasure.

No second being demanded, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

THE JURISDICTION OF DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. CULBERSON (when the Committee on the Judiciary was called). Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 456) to limit the jurisdiction of the district and circuit courts of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the district and circuit courts of the United States shall not take original cognizance of any suit of a civil nature, either at common law or in equity, between a corporation created or organized by or under the laws of any State and a citizen of any State in which such corporation at the time the cause of action accrued may have been carrying on any business authorized by the law creating it, except the court having jurisdiction of the domicil of the corporation, except in cases arising under the patent or copyright laws, and in like cases in which said courts are authorized to take original cognizance of suits between citizens of the same State; nor shall any such suit between such a corporation and a citizen or citizens of a State in which it may be doing business be removed to any circuit court of the United States, except in like cases in which such removal is authorized by the existing law in suits between citizens of the same State: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to affect suits pending in the courts of the United States at the time this act shall take effect.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. REED. I ask for a second.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request that a second be considered as ordered? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] to control the time in favor of the proposition and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] the time in opposition.

Mr. REED. I desire to say to the Chair that I asked for a second in order to have an explanation of the bill. I do not know what the bill is.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill has passed the House several times. The effect of it is to prohibit suits in courts of the United States by or against corporations except in the legal domicile of the corporation in cases where jurisdiction depends upon citizenship only. Under the law a corporation organized in one State and doing business in another State may sue in the courts of the United States, because under a decision of the Supreme Court it is held to be a citizen of the State under whose laws it is organized.

The purpose of this bill is to make a corporation doing business in a State a citizen of such State for all judicial purposes, notwithstanding it was organized under the laws of another State. To make the matter entirely clear, a corporation organized in Maine under the laws of that State is, under the decision of the Supreme Court, a citizen of Maine. It may open an office in the State of Georgia and do business there as such corporation, and, when sued, it may remove the cause to the district or circuit court of the United States, as the case may be; or if a controversy arises between it and a citizen of Georgia, although the cause of action accrued in Georgia, and although the corporation is doing business in Georgia, yet it may claim to be a citizen of Maine and may bring suit in the Federal courts. Now, this bill in effect provides that, for judicial purposes, a corporation shall be considered a citizen of the State in which it does its business. That is all there is in the bill.

Mr. REED. In other words, the purpose of the bill is to reverse the decision of the Supreme Court with regard to the citizenship of corporations.

Mr. CULBERSON. Not at all. The Supreme Court decided originally that the citizenship of a corporation depended upon the residence of the stockholders, and that all the stockholders must reside in a State in order to make the corporation a citizen of that State for judicial purposes. That was the law for fifty years. The court later overruled that decision and held and now holds that a corporation, without regard to the residence of its stockholders, is, for judicial purposes, a citizen of the State under whose laws it is organized, without regard to where the residence of the stockholders may be.

This bill does not propose to change the decision of the Supreme Court as to the citizenship of corporations. Under this measure, if it becemes a law, corporations will still continue to be citizens of the States under whose laws they are organized, but if a corporation does business in another State it provides that the courts of the United States shall not take cognizance of any controversy arising between it and a citizen of the State in which it is carrying on its business.

Mr. REED. Does the Constitution provide that a citizen of another State shall have that right?

Mr. CULBERSON. The Constitution provides that the judicial power of the United States shall extend to controversies arising between citizens of different States, but there is no obligation upon Congress to carry out that jurisdiction either in whole or in part.

Mr. REED. The Constitution does not confer this right upon any citizen unless Congress effectuates it by legislation.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is so.

Mr. REED. Is it the duty of Congress to carry out the provisions of the Constitution?

Mr. CULBERSON. The gentleman well knows that from 1789 to 1875 more than half the powers of Congress relating to the judicial powers of this Government never were put in force.

Mr. REED. Then the gentleman thinks it is not the duty of Congress to carry out the Constitution?

Mr. CULBERSON. I think it is not the duty of Congress to confer this jurisdiction. Upon the contrary, it has overloaded the courts with business which may be better disposed of by the State courts.

Mr. REED. And that, having conferred it, it is the duty of Congress now to withdraw it?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes, sir; in the interest of justice and fair dealing it is very desirable to do so.

Mr. REED. Though the Constitution secures it to the citizen?

Mr. CULBERSON. I will illustrate my position about that. Under the act of 1789 Congress provided that the assignees of a chose in action should not bring suit in the circuit courts of the United States unless the suit might have been maintained upon that chose in action had no transfer been made. That remained the law from 1789 until 1875, when Congress struck out that exception, and the Supreme Court held in those cases that, although the Constitution provided that an assignee of a chose in action might bring the suit if Congress by law should provide for it, yet a limit might be put upon the jurisdiction.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the Constitution recognizes a corporation as a legal citizen at all.

Mr. CULBERSON. We are bound by what the Supreme Court says upon that point.

Mr. BLAND. But the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] spoke about a constitutional provision with reference to it. Now, I ask where does the Constitution make a corporation a citizen?

Mr. REED. But the gentleman [Mr. CULBERSON] had said expressly that he did not propose by this legislation to reverse the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not; that is, in regard to the question of citizenship. That is all.

The question was taken; and two-thirds voting in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

WILLIAM SMITH AND OTHERS.

Mr. OUTHWAITE (when the Committee on Military Affairs was called). On behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the desk.

A bill (H. R. 5597) for the relief of William Smith and others.

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to credit Lieut. Col. William Smith, deputy paymaster general, United States Army, in the settlement of his public accounts, with the sum of $3,015.15; and to credit Maj. William F. Tucker, paymaster, United States Army, in the settlement of his public accounts, with the sum of $5,461.61; and to credit Assistant Surg. John O. Skinner, United States Army, in the settlement of his public accounts, with the sum of $199.14; and to remove the charge of $2,185.92 standing against Maj. John S. Billings, surgeon, United States Army; and to remove the charge of $1,020.60 standing against George M. Wheeler, captain, on the retired list of the Army; and to remove the charge of $64.42 standing against Lieut. P. Henry Ray, Eighth Regiment of Infantry, United States Army; the said amounts having been paid out and received in accordance with the orders of the Secretary of War or the provisions of the regulations for the government of the Army of the United States prescribed by the President.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded on the motion to suspend the rules?

Mr. HOLMAN. For the purpose of having some explanation, I ask for a second.

The motion was seconded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] to control the time in favor of the passage of the bill, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to control the time against it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I only wish to have some explanation of the bill, as I could not hear it read.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. This bill covers amounts paid by Col. Smith as paymaster under the order of the Secretary of War. Among these were the following:

Voucher 120. April, 1879. Payment to Lieut. C. W. Carrow, Seventh Cavalry, for April, 1879	$125.00
Voucher 57. May, 1881. Payment to W. E. Hagen, expert witness in the case of Cadet Whittaker	1,550.00
Voucher 52. May, 1881. Payment to D. T. Ames, expert witness in same case	936.00
Voucher 70. July, 1881. Payment to E. A. Cochrane, stenographic reporter in same case	404.15

Members of the House will recollect that the case in which it became necessary to make these payments was one in which a cadet at West Point claimed to have been severely mistreated by other cadets; and an investigation was set on foot to ascertain who had mistreated him. During the course of that investigation it was necessary to examine experts on handwriting; it was also necessary to have a stenographic reporter. It was necessary, too, to bring one of the witnesses from some distance. These witnesses, together with the stenographer, were paid by Col. Smith upon an order of the Secretary of War. Col. Smith felt that upon receiving such an order from his superior officer he had no alternative but to pay these amounts for these services. Subsequently some question was raised by the Comptroller as to the amounts paid.

In some cases it was claimed that a greater rate was paid than should have been; but it will be understood that so far as Col. Smith was concerned he had no authority to pass upon any such question; he had no right to raise any such issue whatever, but was bound to obey his superior officer. So he issued these vouchers; and these people were paid long ago—one in 1879; two or three of them in 1881. So much for those.

As to the amount charged against Maj. John S. Billings, surgeon of the United States Army, that is for a sum paid to him by the Pay Department for mileage on account of certain journeys made by him in obedience to the orders of the Secretary of War. Payment of this sum having been disallowed by the Second Comptroller, the matter was transmitted to the Court of Claims. The court held that the War Department had authority to order Maj. Billings to make the journeys in question at the expense of the Government, and that therefore the case came under the law providing for the allowance of mileage. One of those journeys was made to Europe upon the order of the War Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. What Secretary of War made that order?

Mr. OUTHWAITE (after a pause). I do not find the name here.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not urge the question if the gentleman has not the name before him.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I can not recall the name, and I do not find it in the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would be glad if the name of the officer who made such an order as that could appear on the record.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I should be very glad to furnish it to the gentleman, but the report in this case, which was made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROCKWELL], does not contain the statement.

The charge against Capt. Wheeler is for the recovery of the amount paid to him for mileage and disallowed by the Second Comptroller. The case is analogous to that of Surg. Billings and involves the same questions of law. It was transmitted to the Court of Claims, and the court referred to the opinion in the Billings case, which it reaffirmed and adopted. That opinion will be found in 23 Court of Claims Reports, page 167.

There is no money to be returned to these gentlemen; the object of the bill is simply to relieve them from charges standing against their accounts, charges as to the origin of which they had no control whatever.

The charge against Lieut. P. H. Ray, Eight Infantry, is for the recovery of a sum paid to him as mileage and disallowed by the Second Comptroller. The mileage was for journeys made under the orders of the Secretary of War, orders which he could not disobey.

The history of the stoppage against Capt. J. O. Skinner, assistant surgeon, of $199.14, is as follows: May 15, 1885, the post surgeon at Fort Myer, Virginia, made a requisition for medical supplies for the post hospital, including, among other things, six "Demorest's water-closet porcelain hoppers (movable), with other articles pertaining thereto." The requisition was duly approved, proposals invited, and the articles purchased, the vouchers being duly certified and approved and forwarded to the accounting officers of the Treasury for payment from the appropriation "Signal Service, Medical Department" for the year ending June 30, 1885. The vouchers were disallowed by the accounting officer on the ground that the water-closet hoppers were fastened to the ground.

There is no question as to the necessity for these appliances—no question as to the propriety of their purchase; but the accounting officers raised the objection that they ought to have been purchased out of some other fund, because they were fastened to the ground instead of being movable.

After numerous appeals from the contractors who had furnished the supplies, the Secretary of War, in view of the fact that the terms of the act expressly authorized him to expend the appropriation cited above, directed that the sum of $500 from that appropriation be placed to the credit of the disbursing officer of the Medical Department in Washington, and gave orders that the vouchers be paid by Assistant Surgeon J. O. Skinner, acting medical storekeeper. In pursuance of this express order the vouchers were paid by Capt. Skinner February 8, 1886.

Notwithstanding the rulings of the Court of Claims the then Second Comptroller declined to remove the charges covered by this communication, and the present Second Comptroller decides that he is without power to reopen cases finally passed upon and closed by his predecessor.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the aggregate amount of the items?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I did not add them up, but I should say it was somewhere in the neighborhood of $13,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. You have a report here, I suppose?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes; but it does not give the aggregate. The gentleman from Indiana will please understand that this is not to pay anything out of the Treasury.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But to relieve these gentlemen from charges, after having paid money in their hands as disbursing officers, for articles obtained or secured by the Government at proper and reasonable prices, and over which they had no control whatever.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should have been glad if the record showed what Secretary of War gave the order for these two trips to Europe.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do not know, but take it from the date of the order that it must have been Secretary Lincoln.

I ask a vote.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

SWAMP-LAND GRANTS.

The Committee on the Public Lands was called.

Mr. McRAE. I am instructed by the Committee on the Public Lands to call up, move to suspend the rules, and pass the bill (H. R. 9072) to finally adjust and settle the claims of Arkansas and other States under the swamp-land grants, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when the State of Arkansas shall relinquish, release, and quitclaim to the United States all her claims and demands against the United States for the 5 per cent fund allowances under the act approved June 23, 1836, for keeping prisoners under the executive order of February 5, 1867, for a portion of the distribution fund under the act approved September 4, 1841, for indemnity under the acts approved March 2, 1855, March 3, 1857, or this act, and for all swamp and overflowed lands under the act approved September 28, 1850, not approved to the State, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, in consideration of said relinquishment, release, and quitclaim of said claims, demands, and lands, require the Treasurer of the United States to cancel and deliver to the governor of the said State of Arkansas all the bonds and coupons issued by the said State now in the possession of the said Treasurer and owned or held in trust by the United States, as a full and final compromise and settlement of accounts between the said State and United States.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the proper officers of the Departments of the Interior and of the Treasury, as soon as practicable, to adjust and settle the claims of the other States against the United States for all lands which have been, or may hereafter be, sold or otherwise disposed of that were included in any grant of swamp and overflowed lands to such States.

SEC. 3. That for all of said lands in any State which were sold for cash the said State shall have credit for the full amount of the purchase money received by the United States, and the same shall be paid over to the governor or treasurer of said State; and for all of said lands in any State otherwise disposed of, and for which indemnity has not heretofore been allowed, such State shall have indemnity in cash, the amount thereof to be limited to the price at which the lands were held at the date of their disposal by the United States, the said indemnity to be paid as herein provided in the cases where lands were sold for cash: Provided, however, That under no circumstances shall more than $2,000,000 be paid under the provisions of this act for lands sold or otherwise disposed of since March 3, 1857.

SEC. 4. That as soon as practicable after the expiration of the time limited by this act for the filing of claims thereunder, the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall ascertain and determine by States the amount of cash indemnity due for lands actually swamp and overflowed within the meaning of the swamp-land grant, and disposed of since March 3, 1857, and shall allot the $2,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, among the several swamp-land States, pro rata, according to the area of land found to be swamp or overflowed, and disposed of since said date: Provided, That the cost of examining and adjusting tracts claimed, but found not to be swamp or overflowed lands, shall be taxed to the State or county presenting the fraudulent or erroneous claim.

SEC. 5. That the agent appointed by the Department of the Interior to investigate claims under this and prior acts shall have the power to administer oaths and to compel the attendance of witnesses both on behalf of the State and of the United States, and witnesses swearing falsely before them shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall, on conviction, be punished as now prescribed by law.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Interior shall, when adjustments and allowances are made by him under this act, report the same to the Secretary of the Treasury, showing the amount ascertained to be due from the United States to such State on account of lands sold or otherwise disposed of, and a description of the lands for which such indemnity is allowed, with the names of the persons to whom sold or patented, and the date the same was sold or patented; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the amount or amounts so allowed and reported by the Secretary of the Interior over to the governor or treasurer of the State.

SEC. 7. That the acceptance by any State or its legal representative of indemnity for any of the lands sold or located shall be deemed a relinquishment and waiver of all its right, title, and interest in and to such lands in place, and an acknowledgment and confirmation of the title thereto in the grantees of the United States.

SEC. 8. That all claims for land, or other indemnity, under the swamp-land laws or under this act, shall be forever barred, unless presented to the Secretary of the Interior within one year from the passage of this act, or within one year after the survey of the township has been completed.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman is to suspend the rules and pass the bill just read——

Mr. TRACEY. Pending that motion, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DINGLEY. I reserve the right to demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McRAE. Before the motion to adjourn is acted upon, can we not have a second considered as ordered?

Mr. DINGLEY. I think not to-day.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 74, noes 22.

So the motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

He also presented the petition of Henry M. Everest, late a member of the Fifteenth Massachusetts Battery, praying for the passage of a bill to remove from his record the charge of desertion which lies against him; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAWES. I have received a petition from St. Louis and have been requested to present it to the Senate. I do not know why it has been sent to me. It is headed by the name of a gentleman from Massachusetts, but all the other names upon it are those of citizens of Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, etc. This petition is of such a peculiar character, reflecting, I suppose, upon distinguished members of the House and Senate, that I desire to call the attention of the Senate to it before I present it.

The petitioners say that they are the wives, sons, and daughters of farmers and grain-growers; that all of them are citizens of Minnesota, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Arkansas, and Texas. They represent that their petition is indorsed by the leading officials of the Farmers' Alliance in all the Western States, and go on to say that "after years of robbery and oppression, in order to appease their complaint, the cry of 'stop thief' was raised by the introduction of the Washburn-Hatch option bill, the twin production of statesmen representing the dominant though different political parties in two States," and that they are informed that this bill "first originated in the counting room of the combine, in the very home and lair of the robber," and experience has taught them that they should "beware of Greeks bearing gifts."

They pray "that a committee be appointed by your honorable body to visit Minneapolis and St. Louis and all places where the combine between the elevators, millers, and railroads exist, with power to examine witnesses, and that further action on the Washburn-Hatch option bill be postponed until the robbery and fraud as now practiced by the great combine are thoroughly investigated, to the end that whatever legislation is needful may be enacted," and they say they "will ever pray."

The petition was sent to me, as I say, although but a single name is upon it from my State, I suppose in recognition of the desire on my part to render all the aid I can to suffering humanity. I do not know to what committee it should be referred, but I call attention to it.

Mr. WASHBURN. There are about a million such petitions, all of which originated in the Chicago Board of Trade, and have been sent here, artificially made up. They should be referred to the Committee on Agriculture, where all this rubbish has heretofore gone.

Mr. DAWES. This petition is in print, and I suppose it indicates an uprising of the people in behalf of the prayer of these petitioners. They represent that all the other petitions were manufactured in Washington and sent out in that way.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to know if reading a petition at length, and commenting upon it, is the "brief statement" which the rules require in presenting petitions?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that it is not.

Mr. DAWES. I do not feel called upon myself to answer the question of the Senator from Tennessee, and I submit the petition to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PASCO presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Jacksonville, Fla., praying for the passage of the Torrey bankruptcy bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Jacksonville, Fla., praying for the passage of legislation authorizing the early completion of the Nicaraguan Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Jacksonville, Fla., remonstrating against the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of J. L. Inglis, president of the Dunnellon Phosphate Company, of Florida, and 8 other citizens of Florida, praying that an appropriation be made to continue the harbor improvement of Cumberland Sound and protect the entrance to the port of Fernandina from the danger of obstructing and perhaps closing the channel, which now appears to be imminent; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PROCTOR presented the memorial of Rev. N. R. Nichols and other citizens of Norwich, Vt., remonstrating against the passage of legislation repealing the provision closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. CULLOM. I present resolutions adopted by the National Transportation Association, held in Buffalo, November 16, 1892, favoring only such amendments to the interstate-commerce law as will effect—

1. Enhancement of public service;
2. Compliance with the law upon the part of transporters;
3. Simplification of methods of procedure;
4. Conclusive or progressive force to the findings and rulings of the Interstate Commerce Commission;
5. The removal of obstacles to the transaction of business.

I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of the Wilton United Presbyterian Church of Peotone, Ill., praying for the closing of the World's Fair on Sunday, and the prohibition of the sale of liquors thereat; also, for the passage of the Hatch-Washburn antioption bill; also, that immigration be restricted; also, for the submission of the proposed sixteenth amendment forbidding the union of church and state and all sectarian appropriations; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of W. S. Keller and 20 other citizens of Macon; of W. D. Oliver and 17 other citizens of Madison County; of Henry Bath, of Madison County; of E. T. Garrison and 16 other citizens of Clark, and of J. W. Barnes and 19 other citizens of Jacksonville, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the appointment of a Senate committee to investigate the combine formed to depreciate the price of grain, and now existing between the elevators, millers, and railroads at Minneapolis and St. Louis, and asking for the postponement of the Washburn-Hatch option bill until that committee reports; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Ministerial and Epworth League Convention of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Freeport, Ill., held at Milledgeville, Ill., November 28-30, 1892, favoring the closing of the World's Fair on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of members of the Board of Trade of Chicago, Ill., praying for the speedy construction of the Nicaragua Canal by American capital and under American contract which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HOAR. I present a petition of like tenor to that presented by my colleague [Mr. DAWES]. I shall not state its contents more at length unless my honorable friend from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] insists upon it.

Mr. HARRIS. I excuse the Senator from that duty.

The petition was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of Walter Foss and 22 other citizens of Haverhill, Mass., praying for the appointment of a Senate committee to investigate the combine formed to depreciate the price of grain and now existing between the elevators, millers, and railroads at Minneapolis, Minn., and St. Louis, Mo., and asking for the postponement of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill until that committee reports.

He also presented a petition of the officers and members of the National Woman's Suffrage Association of Massachusetts, praying for the passage of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which shall secure to the women of the several States the citizen's right to vote; which was referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of the united congregations of the Methodist Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches of Amesville, Ohio, praying for the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill; that the sale of intoxicating liquors be prohibited at the World's Columbian Exposition; that Congress pass laws restricting immigration, and that the Constitution of the United States be amended to prohibit sectarian appropriations; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Irwin B. Wright, late first lieutenant and brevet captain United States Regular Army, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, praying that he be granted a pension of $25 per month; which was referred to to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of Rank and File Garrison No. 77, Regular Army and Navy Union of Cleveland, Ohio, praying for the passage of a bill to retire enlisted men of the regular Army after twenty-five years' service; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Greentown Farmers' Alliance, of Greentown, Ohio, praying for the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Freedman Council, No. 63, Junior Order of American Mechanics of Ohio, praying for the enactment of more stringent laws for the restriction of immigration; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of the New Orleans and Memphis Packet Company and the United States Mail Line Company, praying that the Steamboat Inspection Service below the grade of supervising inspector be wholly nonpartisan; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the memorial of Marion Lawrence, secretary of the Ohio Sunday School Union, and the memorial of R. Frank Allender and 126 other citizens of Martins Ferry, Ohio, remonstrating against the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented the petition of J. P. Raymond and 17 other citizens of Hamilton County, Ohio, and the petition of J. W. Hesitt and 22 other citizens of Lucas County, Ohio, praying for the appointment of a Senate committee to investigate the combine formed to depreciate the price of grain, and asking for the postponement of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill until such committee shall report; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. DAVIS. I present the petition of William Milner and 23 other citizens of Cass County, Minn., praying for the appointment of a Senate committee to investigate the combine formed to depreciate the price of grain now existing between the elevators, millers, and railroads at Minneapolis, Minn., and St. Louis, Mo., and asking for the postponement of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill until that committee reports.

I wish to remark in this connection that the petition is similar to perhaps hundreds of others heretofore presented at the present session, which are exactly like it, corresponding in statement, statements which if true would serve as no warrant for defeating the most meritorious measure now being pressed by my colleague [Mr. WASHBURN]. These petitions evidently emanate from some central source, whence they are sent out for signatures. I move the petition be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS presented a memorial of the Editors and Publishers' Association, of St. Paul, Minn., remonstrating against the passage of any legislation looking towards the Post-Office Department furnishing stamped envelopes at the cost of the stamps; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MANDERSON presented petitions of R. T. Lain and 23 other citizens of Saline County; of M. N. Jenkins and 22 other citizens of Lancaster County; of George F. Phillips and 25 other citizens of Woodbury, all in the State of Iowa, praying for the appointment of a Senate committee to investigate the combine formed to depreciate the price of grain, and asking for the postponement of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WILSON. I present resolutions adopted by the twelfth annual session of the Farmers' National Congress, lately convened at Lincoln, Nebr. Accompanying these resolutions is a request from the secretary that the various resolutions passed by that body with reference to agricultural legislation and other interests affecting the production and industries of the country be referred to the Agricultural Committee, ordered printed, and placed on the desks of the members of the Senate.

In response to the request of the secretary of the congress, I move that the memorial be printed as a document, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK presented petitions of Henry Hollis and 23 other citizens of Otoe County; of E. D. Applegate and 24 other citizens of Sabine County; of G. H. PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 16th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1661) granting an increase of pension to John Hallam;

An act (S. 139) terminating the reduction in the numbers of the Engineer Corps of the Navy; and

An act (S. 1940) for the relief of R. B. Woodson.

The message also announced that the President had yesterday approved and signed the act (S. 2612) granting a pension to Tendoy, chief of the Bannocks, Shoshones, and Sheepeater tribe of Indians.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MCMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 110) conferring the control of the bridges in the District of Columbia on the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3316) to restore the Fort Jupiter military reservation, in the State of Florida, to entry, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9758) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 119) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to retain and cover into the Treasury certain moneys, etc., reported it without amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There was a joint resolution to the same effect, passed by the House of Representatives, which was a few minutes ago referred to the Committee on Appropriations. If there is no objection I should be glad to have that reference canceled and the joint resolution lie on the table.

Mr. HALE. The reference was made at my suggestion. I have no objection to the course proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. PLATT. There is no objection to that, but I desire to say, as one member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I do not concur in the report which has been made by the Senator from Arkansas upon the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The House joint resolution will be recalled from the Committee on Appropriations and lie on the table, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3537) for the relief of M. P. Deady, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (H. R. 9487) to amend an act approved April 22, 1890, authorizing the Natchitoches Cane River Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across Cane River, in Louisiana;

A bill (H. R. 8602) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mobile River by the Chicago, Mobile and Gulf Ports Railroad Company;

A bill (H. R. 9488) to amend an act approved March 2, 1891, authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River, Louisiana, by the Rapides Bridge Company, limited; and

A bill (H. R. 5752) to amend an act approved August 6, 1888, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Alabama River."

SAFETY OF METZEROTT HALL.

Mr. MCMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, who were instructed by resolution to report to the Senate whatever information they may have received relating to complaints made concerning the safety of Metzerott Hall, submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

LANDS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6644) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the sale of title of the United States in lot 3 in square south of square 990," approved March 3, 1891, to report it favorably, without amendment. Inasmuch as the bill is very brief and a similar Senate bill is on the Calendar reported by the same committee, I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

After reading, the Senate, by unanimous consent, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend the act by adding the following proviso:

Provided, That the conveyance authorized and directed by this act shall be a quitclaim and relinquishment only of any title that the United States may have in and to said lot, and that in no event shall the United States be liable for any costs, expenses, damages, or taxes in relation to said lot, and that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to so quitclaim, release, and convey the title of the United States in said lot to the said Baker & Sanborn upon the payment into the Treasury by them of $3,200.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the bill (S. 3453) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the sale of title of the United States in lot 3 in square south of square 990," approved March 3, 1891, be taken from the Calendar and indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

PAY OF EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. DAWES. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 170) to pay the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1892, on the 21st day of said month, to report it favorably, without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. DAWES. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report favorably the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives providing for a holiday recess, and I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE, December 15, 1892.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, December 22, they will stand adjourned until Wednesday, January 4, 1893.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it go over for to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the concurrent resolution will go over.

REPORT ON LABOR IN EUROPE.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Immigration, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to transmit to the Senate the report on the condition of labor in Europe recently made by Mr. Walter T. Griffin, United States commercial agent at Limoges, France.

JOHN MALLOY.

Mr. SAWYER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8907) to increase the pension of John Malloy, to report it without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be now considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to increase the pension of John Malloy, late a seaman on the sloop-of-war Preble, in the war with Mexico, from $8 to $15 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SENATE PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, who were instructed to cause to be prepared for the use of the Senate a new edition of the book entitled "Senate Election Cases," with an addition in regard to the privileges of the Senate, to report that they have complied with the order of the Senate, and the same is offered to the Senate for its acceptance. I suppose the document will lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the Chair). It will be so ordered.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound, in addition to the usual number, 3,100 copies of the compilation entitled "Senate Privileges and Elections" prepared by the Committee on Privileges and Elections under resolution of the Senate passed February 28, 1891, of which 1,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 1,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives and 100 for the compiler.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF FISH AND FISHERIES.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution, submitted by him on the 13th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, covering the operations of the Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, be printed; and that there be printed 8,000 extra copies, of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries; the illustrations to be obtained by the Public Printer under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.

REGENTS OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. MORRILL. I introduce a joint resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 123) to fill vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than members of Congress, shall be filled by the reappointment of James B. Angell, of Michigan, whose term of office expires on January 19, 1892.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. VEST. What is the measure?

Mr. MORRILL. It is a joint resolution providing for the reappointment of President Angell to the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

There being no objection; the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In this connection the Chair appoints the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] to fill the vacancy on the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution caused by the death of the late Senator Gibson of Louisiana.

HERBERT CUSHMAN.

Mr. PALMER. I move that the vote by which the bill (S. 1754) for the relief of Herbert Cushman was indefinitely postponed be reconsidered with a view to its recommittal to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to by unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be recommitted in the absence of objection.

COUNT OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. TELLER. I submit a concurrent resolution for reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 8th day of February, 1893, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to the requirement of the Constitution and laws relating to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States, and the President of the Senate shall be the presiding officer; that two persons be appointed tellers on the part of the Senate, and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to make a list of the votes as they shall be declared; that the result shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall announce the state of the vote and the persons elected, to the two Houses assembled as aforesaid, which shall be deemed a declaration of the persons elected President and Vice-President of the United States; and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the journals of the two Houses.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to state that after examining the statutes it seems to me that the statute executes itself. But this was the course pursued four years ago, and I thought it better to introduce the resolution and have it referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, so as to take the opinion of the committee upon the subject.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say to the Senator from Colorado, the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, that the provision of the Constitution that each House may prescribe the rules of its own proceeding has been sometimes thought to prevent Congress from enacting by law provisions for the direction of either House as to the time or mode of its proceeding without the special assent of that particular House in the particular Congress. Without suggesting for a moment that that is a sound view, the committee four years ago thought it the safer way, in a matter of such transcendent importance, to avoid that question by having the provisions of the statute also made a joint rule of the two Houses.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

MRS. MARY A. MERRITT.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Mrs. Mary A. Merritt, widow of John G. Merritt, deceased, late a messenger acting as assistant doorkeeper of the United States Senate, the sum of $900, being an amount equal to six months' salary at the rate per annum allowed by law to the aforesaid messenger acting as assistant doorkeeper, said sum to be considered as including the funeral expenses and all allowances.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs have authority for the employment of a stenographer to report the hearing before said committee on the 16th instant relative to payment of Indian depredation claims; also that said committee be authorized to employ a stenographer to report hearings before said committee whenever the committee shall so order; the expense of such employment to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

Mr. FAULKNER. I submit a resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate the total number of Indian depredation claims already filed in the Court of Claims, with the total amount claimed therein; the number of cases claimed as entitled to priority of consideration and the amount claimed therein; the number to which such consideration has been given and the amount claimed therein; and the number and amount of judgments rendered in such cases; with a list of the cases in which the Department of Justice has made a defense, and the reason and result thereof.

A list of all cases in which there has been allowed by the Secretary of the Interior or the Court of Claims or by either, or has been conceded by the Department of Justice an amount greater than the amount recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with a statement of the differences between such allowances and recommendations; and a statement of the judgments, if any, which, after they were paid, were found to be unjust; and, in addition, to inform the Senate whether any attorneys for claimants have also been employed as agents or counsel for the Government in other cases; and whether any claims have been at any time allowed by the court or their priority of consideration conceded by the Department which were not covered by the clause in the act of March 3, 1891, providing that only such cases shall have priority, as were allowed by the Secretary of the Interior under the act of March 3, 1885, and subsequent Indian appropriation acts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection to the resolution. When I introduced a resolution the other day, calling upon the Secretary of the Interior for some similar information, it was laid over at the request of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER]. He now proposes to call upon the Attorney-General for some information which relates to the same subject. I have no objection to the passage of the resolution, and I suppose he will have no further objection to the adoption of the resolution I offered when it comes up.

Mr. FAULKNER. After examining the resolution of the Senator from Connecticut, I became satisfied that it would not be proper for me to offer this as an amendment to his resolution, and therefore I submit it as an original resolution. I have no objection to the adoption of the resolution of the Senator from Connecticut.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is no objection to the consideration of the resolution submitted by the Senator from West Virginia, the question is on agreeing to the same.

The resolution was agreed to.

INDIAN TRUST FUNDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there are no further concurrent or other resolutions the Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], coming over from a previous day. The resolution will be read.

The resolution submitted by Mr. PLATT on the 15th instant was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate:

First. Of the amounts of the different funds held in trust by the United States for the benefit of the Indian tribes.

Second. Of the amounts of Indian depredation claims which has hitherto received the approval of the Department of the Interior.

Third. If within his knowledge, the whole amount of Indian depredation claims which have been presented to the Court of Claims.

Fourth. Whether any judgment rendered by the Court of Claims against Indian tribes for depredations have yet been paid out of funds held in trust by the United States for the benefit of Indian tribes.

Fifth. To what extent the funds held in trust for Indian tribes by the United States are likely to be depleted by the payment of judgments rendered or to be rendered by the Court of Claims for Indian depredations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to amend the resolution by adding at the end of line 4, after the word "tribes"—

And the approximate amount which will be added to such trust funds under agreements recently made with Indian tribes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills this day received from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 6798) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Warrior River by the Montgomery, Tuscaloosa and and Memphis Railway Company;

A bill (H. R. 9176) relating to contracts of common carriers, and to certain obligations, duties, and rights in connection with the carriage of property; and

A bill (H. R. 9930) for the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 6753) for the relief of Nimrod J. Smith, ex-chief of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians; and

A bill (H. R. 7633) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Kickapoo Indians in Oklahoma Territory, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect.

The bill (H. R. 5597) for the relief of William Smith and others was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 456) to limit the jurisdiction of the district and circuit courts of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NOTICE OF EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask for a brief executive session, but I understand the Senator from Tennessee——

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not ask for an executive session now. My colleague——

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will allow me to complete what I was going to say he will not find any occasion I think to make a suggestion. I was about to state that I understand the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] desires to address the Senate this morning, and I shall therefore postpone the motion until the Senator concludes his remarks; but when they are concluded I give notice that I shall ask for a two or three minutes' executive session.

Mr. BATE. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that I shall not occupy more than twenty-five or thirty minutes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee is recognized as entitled to the floor.

SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS AND SPECIAL DEPUTIES.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, a few days since I gave notice that I would to-day ask the permission of the Senate to call up from the table Senate bill 3504, for the purpose of submitting some remarks thereon. I ask that the bill may be laid before the Senate at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill indicated by the Senator from Tennessee, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 3504) to repeal all statutes relating to supervisors of elections and special deputies.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, it is the fundamental law of government by the people that the will of the people expressed at the polls is not only the law of our existence as a Congress, but also the rule for the guidance of our actions in legislation. It is the recognition of and obedience to that will so plainly indicated in the late elections that I have introduced this bill to repeal all Federal laws relating to elections of members of Congress.

Those laws had their origin and inception under circumstances and conditions different from those existing to-day. They were inspired by animosities engendered by a great war; they embodied the purposes of a triumphant political party animated by passions that are fortunately subsiding; they voiced a sentiment of alleged purpose on the part of a portion of the people to deny full scope to the amendments of the Constitution adopted at the close of the late war.

None of the reasons which underlie these Federal election laws have force and efficacy at this time. The animosities of our sectional conflict are buried forever; the passions excited by the late war have passed away, and full force and effect are now given to the whole Constitution and to all of its amendments. The bloody shirt, the scalawag, and the carpet-bagger have played their alleged parts in elections, and have gone never again to return. There are no substitutes for them. It was the alleged influence of such forces as those in elections that called into existence all the sections of the Revised Statutes which stand on the books under the title of elective franchise.

The reason for the law having ceased, the law ought to cease also. I do not believe that either the title "elective franchise" or any of the laws which bolster it have any justification under the Federal Constitution. Whether the title had any place in the Revised Statutes, the first edition prepared by Mr. James, I have not examined; but it appears that this title was invented by Mr. Boutwell in his edition of the Revised Statutes of 1878.

I can not find that any law by Congress for the purification or supervision of the elective franchise in the States has ever had the sanction or approval of a single one of the great fathers of our Federal system, or that any one of those grand statesmen who were the immediate successors of the fathers ever countenanced the proposition that Congress could or should supervise the election of members of the House of Representatives.

The right of suffrage is defined and irrevocably fixed in the Constitution; Congress can not enlarge, impair, alter, or regulate it. Whoever in the States vote for members of the State Legislature shall vote for members of the House of Representatives of Congress. That is the constitutional mandate, obligatory on the States, and never questioned or denied by any State. Hence, the "elective franchise" has no proper place as a title to Federal laws and is supererogatory, useless, and reflective upon the States. That title is the assertion of a power by Congress hostile to the spirit and intent of the Federal Constitution.

It is the remark of the historian, Mr. Henry Adams, that "the great object of terror and suspicion to the people of the thirteen provinces was 'power;' not merely power in the hands of a president or a prince, of one assembly or of several, of many citizens or few, but power in the abstract, wherever it existed and under whatever name it was known." Their public men of the Colonies had read in Blackstone that, "there is and must be in all forms of government, however they began or by what right soever they exist, a superior, irresistible, absolute, uncontrolled authority, in which the jura summi imperii, or the rights of sovereignty reside." And that Parliament is the place "where that absolute despotic power which must in all governments reside somewhere is intrusted by the constitution of the British Kingdoms."

It was the European political belief that supreme, irresistible authority must exist somewhere in every government. America, on the other hand, asserted that the principle was not true; that no such supreme power need exist in a government; that in the American Government none such would be allowed to exist, because absolute power in any form was inconsistent with freedom; and that the new Government should start from the idea that the public liberties depended upon denying uncontrolled authority to the political system in its parts or in its whole.

Everyone knows with what logic this theory was worked out in the mechanism of our Constitution. Not only were rights reserved to the people never to be parted with, but rights of great extent were reserved to the States as a sacred deposit to be jealously guarded. Even in the General Government the States' great depositories of power were made independent of each other; checks on each other's assumption of authority, separately responsible to the people, that each might be a protection and not a danger to the public liberties.

Such an exhibition of jealousy of absolute power precludes the idea that authority would be conferred by the convention which framed the Constitution of 1877 on the central Government to interfere with and control the States in the election of their Representatives to Congress. The authority given to Congress in the fourth section of the first article of the Constitution to make or alter the "regulations" of the States in elections was to be exercised only for the preservation of the existence of Congress; to secure elections should any State refuse or fail to discharge its Federal duty.

This is confirmed by the discussion in the sixty-ninth number of the Federalist (page 448), where Mr. Hamilton discusses "that provision of the Constitution which authorizes the National Legislature to regulate, in the last resort, the election of its own members." Having quoted the clause emphasizing the "times, places, and manner," and "such regulations," he adds and emphasizes in italics:

> Its propriety rests upon the evidence of this plain proposition that every government ought to contain in itself the means of its own preservation.

The power was to be used "in the last resort," and then only for the purpose of "its own preservation."

He says that there "were only three ways in which this power (of preservation) could have been reasonably organized; that it must either have been lodged wholly in the National Legislature, or wholly in the State Legislatures, or primarily in the latter (the States), and ultimately in the former" (the National Legislature).

> The last mode has with reason been preferred by the convention.

That is to say, the States were to regulate the times, places, and manner of elections, and the Congress only in the event of a failure on the part of the States, for he adds:

> They have submitted the regulations of elections for the Federal Government, in the first instance, to local administrations, which in ordinary cases, and when no improper views prevail, may be both more convenient and more satisfactory; but they have reserved to the national authority a right to interpose whenever extraordinary circumstances might render that interposition necessary.

It was for the preservation of the existence of the National Government that the power was granted, and for no other purpose. It never was contemplated that officials of the Federal Government should supervise and oversee the elections held in the States. It was a power granted to be used "in the last resort" to preserve the House of Representatives, and not to purge the elections in the States. The convention apprehended that the "exclusive power of regulating elections for the National Government in the hands of the State Legislatures would leave the existence of the Union entirely at their mercy," and that by merely not holding elections they could annihilate the Union. It was, in Mr. Hamilton's language, "the constitutional possibility" of nonaction by the States which this power was intended to guard against.

It is impossible to read the discussion of this article in the number of the Federalist referred to without observing that the power to regulate Congressional elections was granted to Congress solely from apprehensions that "combinations" might be made between States not to elect Representatives, and it was to guard against such combinations that Congress in the last resort was to use the power for its own preservation.

The idea of supervising by Federal officials elections in the States is never once presented in the discussion. The power was granted solely for the purpose of preservation. For, continues Mr. Hamilton:

> If the State legislatures were to be invested with an exclusive power of regulating these elections, every period of making them would be a delicate crisis in the national situation, which might issue in a dissolution of the Union, if the leaders of a few of the most important States should have entered into a conspiracy to prevent an election.

It was to prevent a "combination" of leaders of public opinion in a few States effecting a dissolution of the Union by not electing Representatives that this clause of the Constitution was inserted. It had no reference whatever to purifying the ballot or to protecting the State's voter in his right of suffrage. That was a latter-day subterfuge invented to secure party ascendency, and not an honest exercise of a power designed solely to prevent a dissolution of the Union.

The time when this interference by Congress in the elections in the States first took effect was in the dark days which followed the late war between the States. Federal supervisors of elections were unknown to the laws prior to 1871 and special deputies cropped out of politics in the same year. Each set of officers came into being for the purpose of checking and checkmating the revulsion of the popular feeling from the animosities of the late conflict to a more kindly sentiment between the sections. Though the laws applied to all the States, their enforcement was peculiarly severe in Democratic localities. Its purely partisan character is confirmed by the fact that its harshest application was always where Democrats were most numerous, which was in New York and the South. It was one party using Federal means to defeat another.

These laws are further illustrations of Mr. Jefferson's apprehension, to use his own language, that "parchment barriers would be inefficient against the encroaching spirit of power." They were enacted in order that a political party might perpetuate its hold on national offices by distorting and twisting constitutional provisions to the ends of party supremacy.

Mr. Hamilton dreaded the "intrigues of foreign powers patronized and abetted by ambitious leaders in the States," but he never contemplated that "an uncontrollable national power over the elections of the Federal Government" would come out of this clause, and be used for the perpetuation of a political party in power. On the contrary, his argument is to show that this power would not be used by Congress "to promote the election of some favorite class of men in exclusion of others." He argues to show that this power could not be exerted between merchants and landowners, commerce and agriculture, or to elect the "wealthy and well born" over the "rest of society." He never dreamed that it was to be invoked to elect negroes and scallawags over what he called "the wealthy and well born," the merchant and farmer.

The authority given to Congress by said section 4 to make or alter the regulations of elections was confined to time, place, and manner. To time Mr. Hamilton says:

> Because "if each State may choose its own time of election it is possible there may be at least as many different periods as there are months in the year. The times of elections in the several States, as they are now established for local purpose, vary between extremes wide as March and November. The consequence of this diversity would be that there could never happen a total dissolution or renovation of the body at one time. If an improper spirit at any time should happen to prevail in it that spirit would be apt to infuse itself into the new members as they came forward in succession. The mass would be likely to remain nearly the same; assimilating constantly to itself its gradual accretions."

Uniformity in the time of elections was necessary for executing the idea of regular rotation and for conveniently assembling the Congress at a stated period in each year. To that end the power to regulate the time of election was given. The power to regulate the places of holding elections was given in order to prevent the spirit of hostility to the Union from effecting its dissolution by appointing places of elections distant and inconvenient to the voters, and thus preventing an election.

The discussion in the Federalist of this clause of the Constitution plainly shows that the grant of a power to Congress to regulate elections was to be used only "in the last resort," and then only for the "preservation" of the House of Representatives. Such was the opinion of the great leader of that party in American politics, which is known as the liberal or latitudinarian construction party.

If we consult Mr. Jefferson we find him in his first inaugural counseling his party to "support the State governments in all their rights," among which he regards "a jealous care of the right of elections" as the best means of keeping "all things within the pale of constitutional powers," and as most compatible with "cherishing the Federal Union as the only rock of safety." The most diligent search of the contemporaneous debates on the Constitution will fail to discover an expression in support of the exercise of this power beyond that of the existence of the House of Representatives.

The power to regulate the manner or the form or method of voting, whether by ballot or viva voce, was likewise conferred for the same high purpose of preserving the existence of the House of Representatives, but to be used only in the last resort and only to meet extraordinary circumstances which threatened the existence of the Union. Mr. Hamilton nowhere explains the purpose of conferring the power to regulate the manner of elections. It may be purely verbal criticism to attempt to draw a distinction between the "manner of elections" and "the manner of holding elections," but neither phrase is broad enough to embrace the twenty-four sections of the Revised Statutes which for several years past have proved the fecund cause of election broils, riots, murder, and crime in many of the States. The mischievous machinery of these Federal election laws, distorting the Federal courts to purposes never contemplated in the scope of the Federal judiciary, has brought some of those high tribunals into popular disrespect and suspicion. Their power and disposition to dispense justice, preserve and protect rights, punish crimes and misdemeanors, have been compromised, in the esteem of the people, by having them converted to the ends of party supremacy.

The great and important powers intrusted by the Constitution to the Federal judiciary to adjudicate "cases in law and equity" under treaties, and affecting ambassadors; of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; controversies between the States; between citizens of different States; such high powers are by these laws put in motion (under section 2011) by two citizens in any city of 20,000 inhabitants who may express their desire to have the circuit court opened and kept open and to appoint new and strange officers, with extraordinary powers, to the end that registration of voters under the laws of the States may be watched and guarded by Federal officers. Criminal jurisdiction has been conferred by those statutes on Federal courts for violations of State laws.

Federal supervisors of elections are made supervisors of State registration and authorized and empowered to "affix their signatures to the original lists," which are peculiarly State papers. They are authorized to challenge any State's voter; to scrutinize the manner of voting under the State's law. Positions within the State's voting places are assigned (by section 2019) to these Federal officers. Then there are special deputy marshals provided by these laws (section 2021) to aid the supervisors in disturbing the peace at the polls, and breeding riot and disorder within the precincts of a State's election. This whole machinery of Federal supervision of State elections is incongruous with that division of powers between the Federal and State governments which distinguish our complex system. Its constitutionality is questioned and disputed; its necessity or propriety is denied; its operations are productive of riot and disorder. It purifies neither the ballot nor the counting. It secures no man his rights and serves no purpose other than that of a partisan and dishonest advantage for a political party.

By late ruling in the Federal courts Congress has been denied the power to make the Federal courts adjuncts or auxiliaries to the Interstate Commerce Commission on the ground that Congress "can not make a judicial department the mere adjunct or instrument of either of the other departments of the Government." If this be correct ruling, can it make the circuit courts the adjunct or auxiliary of any two citizens in a city of 20,000 inhabitants who may desire to be supervisors of elections? If so much of the law of the Interstate Commerce Commission as requires the courts to use their powers in aid of inquiries before the Commission is unconstitutional and void, because the Interstate Commerce Commission is a nonjudicial body, it can not be held that two citizens in a town, or ten in a county, can invoke powers which are denied to a great commission created by act of Congress.

Mr. President, these laws have been in operation for over twenty years, and have not reconciled the people to their harsh interference with affairs belonging exclusively to the States. It is not surprising that the late political revolutions of 1890 and 1892 swept from power the party which enforced the machinery for interfering with the elections of the States. The force bill was a potent factor in the late overwhelming defeat which has overtaken the party that invented and perfected the machinery of Federal supervisors and deputy marshals. This law which I propose to repeal is the germ or protoplasm of the force bill. It is that bacillus which has poisoned our elections and inoculated them with fraud under the color of law until it had well-nigh resulted in a force bill.

From the supervisor of elections and the armed deputy marshal the step was but a short one to the army at the polls, to domiciliary visitation, as in New York, and all the other provisions which so incensed the people, that the last election is recognized as a political revolution which has no doubtful or uncertain meaning. It carries the people's mandate to reform every law put upon the statute books under the influence of the animosities which grew out of the late war. We are at peace with each other, and all laws which had their origin and inception in the spirit of conflict shall give place to milder measures and more liberal purposes.

Neither "race, color, nor previous condition of servitude" plays now any part in elections, if either ever did. We have changed all that, and colored and white exercise the same rights and enjoy like privileges. The day has come to bring the Federal Government back to those duties for which it was provided, and the late elections have brought into power a party pledged to reform, not only fiscal, but elective: not only the tariff, but supervisors and deputy marshals and all the Federal machinery that interferes with State affairs, to wipe out absolute power, which has no rightful place in our Federal system.

So great has the public dissatisfaction with this Federal supervision of elections become, that the House of Representatives has been constrained to appoint a committee to investigate the election methods of Mr. John I. Davenport, of New York. The report of the committee has not yet been made, but the public press for years has kept the public mind agitated with the irritating interference of this supervisor in the elections of New York City Throughout the South the deputy marshals have played police, often exhibiting their arms around the polling places, to the great provocation of riot and disorder. Not one man's franchise has been better protected or guarded by these Federal officers than by the officers of the States. The conflict between the two jurisdictions, between Federal and State officers, is not only unseemly but unnecessary.

That conflict between Federal and State officials involves a conflict between the election laws of the States and the election laws of Congress. The necessity for the repeal of these laws is emphasized by the threatened conflicts between the United States and State officials, which occasioned so much apprehension immediately before the late elections. In New York, Alabama, Georgia, and Arkansas grave and serious conflicts threatened the public peace, and were prevented not so much by the discretion of Federal officials as by the forbearance of the people. Both Federal and State officers marshaled their respective forces under instructions, each based on laws in direct conflict.

New York's law forbid intrusion by any person not authorized by the statutes within the polling places. The United States marshal instructed his deputies that they could not be prevented from being inside the guard rail on election day. Both parties quoted decisions of the Supreme Court to sustain their respective pretensions, the State citing "Brewer, J." (U. S. Supreme Court, 22 Fed. Rep., 153), and the marshal denouncing that as "dicta of one of the judges" and not binding on his deputies.

In Alabama the State authorities insisted that the State's laws were paramount, while Marshal Walker asserted the supremacy of the Federal law.

I shall not here discuss who was right or wrong. It is the cause and the occasion for these unseemly contentions at the time of intense excitement that the public voice now demands shall be removed by the repeal of these Federal election laws. The States protect the elections by provisions of their laws which are deemed proper and necessary to guard the great rights which the States confer.

Since the election in 1888 a very large number of the States have endeavored to give additional protection to the right of suffrage by adopting the Australian ballot system, or a kindred one to suit different conditions. Instead of neglecting or failing in their duty to guard all elections, these States have adopted a most expensive and complete system of preserving the secrecy and the integrity of the ballot

As soon as the States became impressed with the fact that the ballot box had, especially in large cities, become a vehicle for fraud at elections, and an instrument by which lucrative offices were wrongfully secured and the free will of the voter paralyzed by the dominant influence of employers and political bosses—perverting the ballot from the service it was intended to perform—when all this became patent, the States in discharge of their duty seized upon the Australian system as the remedy for these evils. They were quick to discharge their duty of regulating the times, places, and manner of elections. They did not by indifference or neglect offer to Congress the occasion, the extraordinary circumstance, which Mr. Hamilton designated as justifying Congress to interfere, but discharged their full duty, in order that Congress could have no excuse for intermeddling with their elections.

The whole trend of public thought throughout the States was towards peace, quiet, and orderly elections. To that end the secrecy of the ballot was secured by booths in which the voter could alone, secretly, without supervision by any one, discharge his elective duty. That system is elaborate, full, and complete; protects the voter from espionage of every man except the Federal supervisor, who, under sections 2017 and 2018, is authorized and required to "personally inspect and scrutinize, from time to time, and at all times, on the election day," "and to personally scrutinize, count, and canvass each ballot." How and in what manner these Federal officers are to "scrutinize" and "canvass each ballot" is left to the discretion of these officers. The power to scrutinize and canvass is conferred by Federal law, and the officer is left to select the mode and manner of his scrutiny and canvass.

If his judgment prompts him to invade the booth and stand by the voter while he marks the ballot, then the Federal laws lay no restraint upon his violation of the secrecy of the ballot.

These Federal election laws were enacted before the Australian ballot system was understood, and the powers they conferred to be used under the old have not been modified or changed under the new system. If these laws are constitutional, if they ever were necessary, they are harmful under the Australian ballot system, which now prevails in many—I know not how many—of the States. If no other reason suggested their repeal, their inapplicability to the Australian ballot system, which now prevails in most of the States, would suggest their material modification and adjustment to the new mode of ascertaining the public will. But the public voice demands their repeal, because grave offenses against the elective franchise have been committed under color of these laws.

The representatives of the States in Congress are appointed agents by the States for Federal purposes. Those representatives are elected by citizens of the States under the laws of the States; the voters are citizens of the States. Illegal voting is a crime against State laws and punishable in State courts. The illegal conducting of an election is also a crime against State laws. The whole machinery of the election belongs exclusively to the State, and so long as the State provides its machinery for conducting the election of the members of Congress the occasion for making regulations of elections by Congress has not arisen.

"The last resort" which Mr. Hamilton said must arise before Congress can act, until that failure on the part of the States, it can not arise. Hence all the provisions of Federal law for supervising elections in the States are without reason and justification. More than that, those laws authorize acts by Federal supervisors and deputy marshals which contravene provisions of the State's laws; for instance, positions to Federal officers within the polling booths are authorized by the Federal laws, which are forbidden by the State's laws. The officers of the State assert their right to be alone in the polling booths. The Federal officers assert the right under the Federal laws to be present within the booths, "to take, occupy, and remain in such position, from time to time, whether before or behind the ballot boxes, as will, in their judgment, best enable them to see each person offering himself for registration or offering to vote."

Here arises a conflict unnecessary and provocative of disorder. This conflict is often intensified by the Federal official exhibiting arms and evincing a purpose to use them, while section 2002 forbids military and naval officers of the United States from having "any troops or armed men at the places where any general or special election is held in any State," and section 2003 forbids all officers of the Army and Navy from interfering "with the freedom of any election in any State." These supervisors of elections and deputy marshals, selected often from the worst characters in the community, are authorized by law to invade the voting and registering places, and have on several occasions brandished their revolvers with threats of violence directed at citizens and State officials.

Under the monarchy of England no armed troops can remain within miles of voting places, and under our Federal laws no military or naval officer dare approach a voting place with "armed men;" but these rowdies, bummers, and political roughs, clothed with Federal authority and armed with revolvers, can molest the State's officials in the discharge of their duty; are authorized to attach their signatures to the voting lists, to arrest citizens obnoxious to them or their party leaders, and interfere with the election by personal scrutiny of each voter, and by act of irritation and insult provoke conflicts, and then arrest the citizens they have provoked into conflict, arraign them before a Federal judge or commission for alleged crimes, trumped up to prevent voting, to intimidate citizens, and to influence the election according to their party predilection.

Some idea of the unwarranted power conferred on those Federal officers is presented in section 2022, where authority is given to the deputy marshal "to arrest and take into custody, with or without process" any person who may, in the opinion of these officers, have violated any provision of these laws, thus violating all the provisions of the Constitution guaranteeing personal security against unreasonable searches and seizures.

These supervisors of elections are authorized, "when molested"—and they are made the judges of the molestation—to set on foot an "examination of the facts," to certify to those alleged facts, to forward their own version of the molestation to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, to be made evidence for contesting the election if unfavorable to their political friend, and often their employer. (Section 2020.) The law empowers these partisan supervisors to organize, if I may so speak, a mob, and to excite a riot, by the authority given them "to summon and call to his aid the bystanders;" that is, to summon his partisans, to collect his political clan, and with his political "posse comitatus" to arrest any and all opponents whose votes he may desire to prevent being polled.

For all and each of these acts of violence against the election rights of the States and against the persons of citizens, the law provides ample pecuniary reward. It invites, by compensation of $5 per day and numerous fees, any impecunious bummer to become a Federal officer. Any two citizens in a city of 20,000 inhabitants may invoke the courts to open to them and their friends a way to be employed at $5 per day, not exceeding ten days; that is, may reward partisans in cities with $50 each for active work around the polls, and the Federal Treasury is made to pay these expenses for Federal interference with State elections. Heavy and enormous as these expenses have been, they are the least of the evils which have arisen under this law.

If the States can not be trusted to guard and protect the integrity of the elective franchise which comes directly from the States, and which the Federal Government can not confer, then popular government is a failure. If the very foundation of popular government, the elective franchise conferred by the States, has to be watched and guarded by Federal officers from assaults of the very people by whom it is exercised, then some other mode of ascertaining the public will must be invented. Our dual system of Government is a failure if the States can not keep pure the very elections which maintain the organization of the Federal system.

If this be so, the autonomy of the States is gone, local self-government is swallowed up in paternalism, and "home rule" is a myth, known only to the past—"a schoolboy's tale, the wonder of an hour." The whole Federal election scheme of laws is a slander upon the States—implying that their laws are not stringent enough to protect the franchise, that their officers are not vigilant enough to guard its exercise, but that a power outside the State must send its officers to the voting places to guard the State's franchise from the fraud and violence of the State's citizens.

This power of Congress over elections having been conferred only, in the language of Mr. Hamilton, "to intrust the Union with the care of its own existence"—and there being no apprehension for the permanency of the Union—the laws have no constitutional warrant, however much they may find a pretended authority. They are useless for any purpose; they serve no good; they do much harm, and their remaining on the statute books is in direct disregard of the spirit and purpose of the late elections and of the peace and quiet of the country.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3298) authorizing the sale of land in the vicinity of Fort Mifflin, on the Delaware, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate providing for the printing of 23,000 copies of the ninth annual report of the United States Civil Service Commission, with appendixes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 170) to pay the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1892, on the 21st day of said month, and it was signed by the Vice-President.

WILLIAM M'GARRAHAN—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, what is known as the McGarrahan bill has the right of way, and I simply ask that that bill may go over until to-morrow and that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] may have the floor to-morrow after the conclusion of the regular routine business of the morning hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senator from Colorado asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the bill known as the McGarrahan bill may be taken up and proceeded with immediately after the routine business to-morrow morning. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

SALE OF NAVY-YARD LANDS IN BROOKLYN.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. HOAR. Let my motion be considered as having been informally waived.

Mr. McPHERSON. I wish to ask for the immediate consideration of House bill 8760, Order of Business 1153, a bill which will only take the time necessary to read it. It is a short but an important bill.

Mr. HOAR. Let the bill be read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title of the bill will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8760) to provide for the sale of navy-yard lands in the city of Brooklyn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent of the Senate that the bill, the title of which has been read, be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. HOAR. I desire to have the bill read at length for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read at length, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF LANDS NEAR FORT MIFFLIN.

Mr. HOAR. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. 7845) defining "options" and "futures," imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and requiring such dealers and persons engaged in selling certain products to obtain license, and for other purposes, pending which the Senator from Massachuetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CAMERON. With the consent of the Senator from Massachuetts, I ask that the Senate take up at this time a bill which has come from the House of Representatives, with amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CAMERON. The bill will take but a moment.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask that the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 3298 may be laid before the Senate, and that the amendments made by the House of Representatives be concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3298) authorizing the sale of land in the vicinity of Fort Mifflin on the River Delaware.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were, in line 1, after the words "Secretary of War," to insert "and the Secretary of the Navy;" in the same line, after the word "being," to strike out "is" and insert "are;" in line 3, to strike out the word "himself" and insert "themselves;" and in line 13, after the words "Secretary of War," to insert "the Secretary of the Navy."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

DEALING IN "OPTIONS" AND "FUTURES."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7845) defining "options" and "futures," imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and requiring such dealers and persons engaged in selling such products to obtain license, and for other purposes. The pending question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], to strike out section 10.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the pending bill be laid aside, and that the Senate proceed at this time to the consideration of the bill (S. 2626) to authorize the New York and New Jersey Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Hudson River between New York City and the State of New Jersey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. WASHBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the motion of the Senator from Kentucky prevails, do I understand that the antioption bill would lose its place on the Calendar as unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the motion of the Senator from Kentucky prevails it would displace the unfinished business.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Before making the motion, I will ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill I have indicated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the bill indicated by him be now considered, the unfinished business being informally laid aside.

Mr. FRYE. I object.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I renew my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2626.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Senator from Kentucky will withhold the motion until after the holiday recess.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I should like to know upon what ground that request is based.

Mr. FRYE. I have just received——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair indulges this colloquy by unanimous consent. The question pending is not a debatable one.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I understand it, sir, and I do not desire to debate it.

Mr. FRYE. I have a telegram dated December 19——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I object to any debate unless we are to be heard on both sides.

Mr. WASHBURN. I call for the regular order, and demand the yeas and nays upon the motion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. BLACKBURN. I second that call.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BATE. I have just come into the Chamber. Will the Chair let us know what we are to vote on?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2626) to authorize the New York and New Jersey Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Hudson River between New York City and the State of New Jersey. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the motion, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered? The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VEST (when Mr. COCKRELL'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. COCKRELL] is absent on account of affliction in his family. He is paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. BERRY (when Mr. IRBY'S name was called). The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] requested me to state that he was necessarily compelled to be at home, and I understood him to say that he is in favor of the antioption bill, and would vote against the pending motion.

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE]. I understand that if he were present he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER]. I am not aware of his opinion on the bridge bill, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. DUBOIS (when Mr. SHOUP'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SHOUP] is absent, having been appointed by the Vice-President a member of the committee to attend the funeral of the late Senator Gibson, of Louisiana.

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON], who is absent on account of illness in his family. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. I do not know how he would vote on the pending motion, and I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CAMERON. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HILL (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] on the anti-option bill. I am told that the effect of the pending motion is to displace the antioption bill. I have no desire to do that. Possibly I ought to withdraw my vote and not vote at all upon this question. I think I will withdraw my vote under the circumstances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York withdraws his vote.

Mr. WILSON. I am informed that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT], if present, would vote "nay." I will therefore vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced yeas—13, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—13.

Aldrich,	Gibson,	Mills,	Vilas.
Blackburn,	Gray,	Sanders,
Blodgett,	Harris,	Stewart,

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] to strike out section 10.

Mr. FRYE and Mr. MORGAN. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The Secretary read the section proposed to be stricken from the bill.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I have no embarrassment in regard to my position on this measure. During my canvass for Senator in Illinois I was asked publicly by a body which claimed to represent the farmers of Illinois whether I would vote for a bill like this, and by a public letter, or a letter which was published, and in speeches made in various parts of the State I said no.

The option clause, the first section of the bill, is much less satisfactory and comprehensive to my mind than the statute of Illinois on the same subject. We have in that State a well considered statute which covers all and much more than the first section of this bill. The statute of Illinois does not attempt to define options, but it is assumed in the statute that the word "option" is one that has a known legal signification, and dealing in options is prohibited and is punished in addition by adequate fines and penalties.

I therefore said to those who asked me that there being a law in the State, a careful, well-considered statute, nothing more could be gained by mere legislation. It was said to me by gentlemen who differed with me that the law of Illinois was not thoroughly enforced. I admitted that to be true, and I said, and say here, it is not wise to enact laws simply to be disregarded. I apprehend that this proposed law would like that be disregarded, if it were free from any constitutional objection.

I regret, Mr. President, this disposition on the part of the people, for it is with them, and a disposition which I find echoed by their representatives in the States and in Congress, to multiply criminal or penal statutes. It may be said, and seems contradictory, too, to say it, that the enactment of a law which public opinion will not sustain and enforce is of itself demoralizing. The example of the disregard of law is of itself an evil; it is demoralizing. Legislation, in my judgment, to be wise must be but the mere expression of the public will and supported by the public conscience.

If we are to believe the reports we have through the press, option dealing is regarded in most of the large cities as absolutely free from offense. I regret that it is so, but it is the case; and while that state of public sentiment exists it seems to me to be unwise to multiply mere formal declarations, frequently declarations or claims made by the people without understanding them very clearly; and frequently laws of that sort are passed in the States and in Congress from a mere suspicion that they are demanded by the people when really they are not.

In view of a section of the pending bill to which I will refer, I regret that the definition of options in the bill is so imperfect and unsatisfactory. The twelfth section of the bill provides—

That neither the payment of the taxes hereinbefore provided nor the certificate issued by the collector of internal revenue under this act shall be held to exempt any person, association, copartnership, or corporation from any penalty or punishment now or hereafter provided by the laws of any State or Territory for making, transferring, or assigning contracts or agreements such as are hereinbefore defined as "options" or "futures" contracts or agreements, or in any manner to authorize the making, transferring, or assigning of such contracts or agreements within any State, Territory, or locality contrary to the laws of such State, Territory, or locality; nor shall the payment of the taxes imposed by this act be held to prohibit any State, Territory, or municipality from placing a tax or duty on the same trade, transaction, or business for State, Territorial, municipal, or other purposes.

I supposed that the options defined by the first section of the bill were transactions condemned by the laws of Illinois, and I was inclined to oppose the bill upon the ground that this exception destroyed its uniformity. If the bill receives the construction contended for by those who favor it, the section I have read does destroy its uniformity, because its effect would be to take out of the operation of the bill all the States in which options are forbidden, as in many of the States, or futures, which are forbidden I believe by the laws of but one of the States of the Union. I am inclined to think from a very cursory examination that in the State of Georgia there is or was a law forbidding transactions in futures.

But in examining this bill more carefully I am inclined to think that the options of the bill are not the options of the courts and the Legislatures. I am inclined to believe that the options of the bill are a harmless transaction which has never been made the subject of judicial or legislative discussion or reprehension. For the purpose of making myself understood, I will read the first section:

That for the purposes of this act the word "options" shall be understood to mean any contract or agreement whereby a party thereto, or any party for whom or in whose behalf such contract or agreement is made, acquires the right or privilege, but is not thereby obligated, to deliver to another or others, at a future time or within a designated period, any of the articles mentioned in section 3 of this act.

As I suppose contracts precisely such as are defined in this section are unknown in commerce it would be valueless; it would do no harm and no good. I know of no instance in which such contracts have been made. The options of the books and the law are contracts for the sale and delivery of articles at a future time with an express or implied agreement that particular articles are not to be delivered according to the contract, but that the differences between values at the two periods, the time of the sale and the time of the supposed delivery, are to be adjusted by the parties. Those are the options of the text-books.

In this case nothing more is necessary, I suppose, to convict a party than that a contract or agreement shall be produced "whereby a party thereto, or any party for whom or in whose behalf such contract or agreement is made, acquires the right or privilege, but is not thereby obligated to deliver to another or others, at a future time or within a designated period, any of the articles," which are named in section 3. I suppose the essential element of options is entirely wanting in the definition of options furnished by the bill for its own purposes. The essential element of an option, whether the contract is in the form of a privilege or in any other of the forms recognized in trade, is that there shall be an agreement or understanding, either expressed in the contract or implied outside of the contract, that the differences in value shall be adjusted between the parties at the time fixed or at some time to be agreed upon.

If there was an indictment under this section and a contract was shown in evidence whereby in addition to the privileges the party was obliged to deliver, I suppose that would satisfy the requirement of the proposed statute and would necessarily meet the charge of a violation of this bill if enacted into law. It seems to me therefore that the section is of itself without meaning, and I am quite sure it is not covered by any of the statutes of any of the States in which options are defined or punished.

I wish to state, in addition, that options, as understood, are contrary to the laws of all the States, and if the bill did, in fact, define options, it might be said that it would have no operation in any State, because in every State, I believe (if there are any exceptions I do not know what the exception is), option contracts, wager contracts, are forbidden; I do not mean by statutes, but the courts have held them to be wager contracts, contrary to public policy and public morality; and in every instance the courts have refused to enforce them. I think that is the law of all the States in the Union.

If, then, the first section did in fact define the options to which I refer, options within the meaning of the laws or the wager contract which is condemned by laws and by judicial decisions, it could have no effect in any State or Territory, because options are contrary to the laws of all the States and all the Territories, I understand either made so by express statutes or condemned by judicial action. Therefore, if the bill did in point of fact define options it would have no operation in any State according to the saving clauses of the twelfth section of the proposed act. I call the attention of the friends of the bill to this most manifest want of comprehensiveness in the definition of options contained in the bill. My objection to the bill would be greatly mitigated if I were satisfied that the first section does in fact define the options which are contrary to the laws of all the States and Territories. Then, in point of fact, there would be no interference with the law of any State or Territory; no license could be issued for the sale of options in any State or Territory.

The futures of this proposed act are recognized commercial transactions. The futures of the bill are not only such transactions as are known in the commercial associations or in the great cities and markets of the country, but such sales are practiced everywhere in all the States in some form or at some time or other. I venture to say that no active citizen of any State can be found who has not at some time made agreements or contracts which are defined and prohibited by the bill; so that the scope of the measure is incomprehensible. It affects the interests of every man in the country who is engaged in the most simple agricultural, mechanical, or mercantile pursuits. All sell futures as futures are defined in the second section of the bill.

I deplore my inability to comprehend the limitations and restrictions and exceptions of the second section. In order to make myself understood I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate while I read the section, and ask especial attention to its language in order that if I have failed in comprehending it some friend of the bill may be more fortunate and may analyze it and give us its true effect and meaning, and explain to the country what its operation would be in case it should become a law:

SEC. 2. That for the purposes of this act the word "futures" shall be understood to mean any contract or agreement whereby a party contracts or agrees to sell and deliver to another or others at a future time, or within a designated period, any of the articles mentioned in section 3 of this act, when at the time of making such contract or agreement the party so contracting or agreeing to sell and make such delivery, or the party for whom he acts as agent, broker, or employé in making such contract or agreement, is not the owner of the article or articles so contracted or agreed to be sold and delivered, or has not theretofore acquired by purchase, and is not then entitled to the right to the future possession of such article or articles under and by virtue of a contract or agreement for the sale and future delivery thereof previously made by the owner thereof.

That is the definition of futures found in the second section of the bill, which disturbs and forbids a thirty-days' legal transaction, because all the courts so far as I know have held that contracts for the sale and future delivery of property are valid, whether the vendor is or is not the owner or possessor of the thing sold. Therefore, this bill interferes to suppress—for that is the purpose of it—transactions which are lawful and common, transactions which have been found convenient and useful by men engaged in every employment in the country, either as producers of things or as dealers, for all are interested and all have participated in this class of contracts, which will be forbidden if this bill is passed.

The exceptions to the proposed law are exceedingly confusing. Under the bill the agents of the United States, or of any State, Territory, county, or municipality may buy for future delivery from those who have neither the ownership nor the possession of that which they sell; nor shall the law apply—to any contract or agreement made by any farmer or planter for the sale and delivery at a future time, or within a designated period, of any of said articles belonging to said farmer or planter at the time of making such contract or agreement, and which have been grown or produced, or at said time are in actual course of growth or production, on land owned or occupied by such farmer or planter.

That, I suppose, would be an entirely unnecessary provision, for I presume any man may sell that which he owns or that which is in his possession even in an immature state, but the exception for the benefit of farmers and planters is useless, to say no worse of it. Then the bill proceeds:

Nor to any contract or agreement made with any farmer or planter.

Mr. President, the passage of this bill is urged in the supposed interest of planters and farmers. I apprehend that the purpose of introducing these special provisions for their benefit is intended for the country, and they are not supposed to be particularly necessary to the effectiveness of this bill; but any person dealing with a farmer or planter may sell to or buy of that farmer or planter for future delivery. There the right to sell and deliver, or this exception of this proposed statute does not go, as the others do, to the character of the thing sold or the thing bought, but it is a privilege conferred upon a class; it is the exemption of all dealings and transactions of a class, and that class or those classes are relieved from the operation of a general law; that is, under the construction of this exception a farmer may buy or sell for future delivery, as any and all persons may do now, a planter may buy or sell for future delivery, as all persons may do now. So that this class of persons are excepted from the operation of the general law, not because it is impossible or improbable that farmers and planters may deal in "futures" either as buyers or sellers, but because that class is selected as being objects of special favor by Congress, and all the operations of all the farmers and all the planters, whether they are buyers or sellers, are excepted from the operation of this general law. It may contribute to the popularity of the bill; but whether it contains in itself the elements of justice and right I leave for others to determine. The bill proceeds:

Nor to any contract or agreement made with any person to furnish and deliver to such person at any time, or within any designated period, any of said articles for the use, consumption, or traffic of such person in his business, occupation, or manufacture.

This bill permits, then, if I interpret it correctly, the purchases for future delivery from persons who have neither the possession, actually or potentially, of the thing sold, when the person who buys or who contracts has occasion for any of the articles bought for his own use, for his own consumption, or for his traffic. These terms "use," "consumption," and "traffic" are words of exceeding broad comprehension. But that is not all.

For the use, consumption, or traffic of such person in his business, occupation, or manufacture.

Mr. President, it has been said—I by no means indorse the statement, for I know nothing about its truth—that this bill, if it passes, will exactly meet the necessities and the interests of a very large class of purchasers of agricultural products in this country; it has been said that there is in the Northwest and the West extensive combinations of manufacturers of flour, of meal, and of other products in which the use of the production of the farm is necessary; and it has been said that this bill is intended to benefit that class of persons. I am not authorized to say that such is the intention of the bill, but I feel justified in saying that such is its effect.

The manufacturers of flour represent an important interest in this country, important because they are in a very large measure the purchasers and consumers of wheat and corn and oats. This bill allows the manufacturers of flour to buy for future delivery from the farmer or to buy at their discretion, precisely as they may buy now. The idea is that such persons are not within this proposed statute, and that the rights of the manufacturers of flour or dealers in pork or dealers in any other of the products named in the bill after its passage will be precisely as their rights are now that the bill has not yet passed.

I have personal knowledge of the course of trade in the agricultural products of the Northwest. The buyer, the miller, the manufacturer of flour under this proposed law may do then as he may now.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. PALMER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. I have been absent from the Senate during nearly all the time this bill has been pending, and I suppose there is no Senator whose mind is so uninstructed in regard to it as mine, and so I wish to ask a simple question.

Mr. PALMER. I yield to the Senator with pleasure to ask his question.

Mr. HOAR. Do I understand the Senator thinks that the manufacturer of flour or the miller would be permitted under this bill to engage in speculation, that is in buying and selling and dealing in futures, etc., as a speculator, where the profit came from such transaction?

Mr. PALMER. At the present I am only insisting that under the bill he may as a buyer contract as he may now.

Mr. HOAR. Would not that be only true when the buyer of an article intended it to be delivered to him?

Mr. PALMER. I think not.

Mr. HOAR. An article either in actual existence or expected to be in actual existence and delivered to him for the purpose of his traffic or manufacture as a miller? That is what I wish to call attention to.

Mr. PALMER. I invite the attention of the Senator to the proviso to be found beginning in line 15, on page 2:

That no provision or requirement of this act shall apply to any contract or agreement for the future delivery of any of said articles.

I may proceed now, omitting a few words of the bill, to the point, beginning with line 34, on page 3:

With any person to furnish and deliver to such person at any time, or within any designated period, any of said articles for the use, consumption, or traffic of such person.

Mr. HOAR. The next two or three words the Senator has omitted should be read also.

Mr. PALMER. Yes, sir; because I seem now to have presented the idea clearly.

Nor to any contract or agreement made with any farmer or planter, nor to any contract or agreement made with any person to furnish and deliver to such person at any time, or within any designated period, any of said articles for the use, consumption, or traffic of such person in his business, occupation, or manufacture.

Mr. HOAR. Now, my question is whether that would permit a contract, to use the slang phrase of the market, to "sell short" to a miller if he were a miller in the ordinary way? Must it not be a contract in good faith, a genuine contract, so that the article should be used in his occupation or traffic as a miller or manufacturer?

Mr. PALMER. I submit to the Senator that this proviso excludes contracts made with manufacturers. I use that word alone. This bill expressly excludes contracts made with persons of that class where the purchase is for the use of the buyer either in his traffic or in his business, his occupation, or for manufacturing purposes. The provision of the bill excludes all contracts made with those persons for those objects. What the construction of the proposed statute may be I leave to the Senator, whose experience as a lawyer will no doubt guide him much better than anything I can say.

I do maintain—and I ask the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts particularly to it—that no contract made with any person for the sale and future delivery of any of the articles named in the bill for his use, consumption, or traffic, or for use in his business, occupation, or manufacture, is within the proposed law or that the effect of the exception is to leave the law as it now is with respect to that class of persons; and I believe that the Senator on considering it carefully will agree with me in that view. If that is the correct view—and I will endeavor to present the other view if I can—this will allow the manufacturer of flour to buy for future delivery from those who have not the possession or the right of future ownership or possession, for nothing in the act shall apply to that class of persons is the language of the bill.

I will confine myself within the strictest rules. I maintain that where a miller desires to purchase a million bushels of wheat he may buy from those who actually own or he may trade with anybody precisely as he may now. The bill expressly excludes all transactions of that sort from its operations if there is any meaning in language. If that is true, it presents the remarkable example of a law passed intended to secure increased prices to the producers of wheat by reducing the number of purchasers, by driving from the field every speculative dealer. As has been said, the wheat market of the Northwest would be under the control of the elevators and of the millers of the Northwest or of the West wherever they may be found. The number of customers would be reduced by the exclusion of all speculative dealers unless somewhere there could be found a provision that the party was allowed as a trafficker in grain or in some other way to secure to himself the same benefits that are given to the manufacturer. They are mentioned as the same, and would no doubt be regarded as the same. To make myself clear:

That no provision or requirement of this act shall apply to any contract or agreement * * * made with any person to furnish and deliver at any time, or within any designated period, any of said articles for the use, consumption, or traffic of such person in his business, occupation, or manufacture.

Those are imperative and clear terms of exclusion. Nothing in the act shall apply to dealings of that sort; the law will remain after this bill is passed as the law is now, and the rights of traffickers, manufacturers, and others will be as they are now, the bill in no wise affecting their rights, in no wise affecting any contracts to which they are parties.

Now, Mr. President, what will be the effect of this bill after it is passed, assuming that I am right in my construction? The farmers of Minnesota, north Wisconsin, and the Dakotas will have certain privileged customers. They may deal with the millers, as they may now, because nothing in the bill affects any such transaction. They buy wheat; it becomes their property; they buy "futures," with all the rights, except the rights denied them under the option clause of this bill, and thus exclude from the field that large class of buyers who interfere with them, and who sometimes compel the miller to pay more for his wheat than he would pay if the market was under his exclusive control. That will be the effect everywhere. Either that is the proper construction of the bill, or its authors are exceedingly unfortunate in the language they have employed.

There is another clause which provides that none of the permitted transactions shall occur upon any board of trade. That is a provision about which I have no feeling; but I do say and do insist that the manufacturers of raw or unmanufactured cotton, the brewers who deal in hops, the millers who purchase wheat, corn, and oats, the distillers who need rye and barley, the traffickers in pork, lard, and bacon may, if this bill becomes a law, buy as if the law had never been passed; but the men who buy for other purposes, for commercial purposes, are required to obtain a license. In that way a monopoly will be secured to these interests, the number of purchasers of farm products will be reduced, and the price will be dictated by those upon whom the power is conferred by this bill to dictate to the seller the price they will pay. The rings and combinations are well-known, recognized persons. They will be able to control the market, and the result will not be otherwise than disastrous.

I desire, however, to take a broader view of this bill. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to section 14, which I think characterizes the bill. Standing alone, it might not be so, but in connection with the tenth and other sections its character will be fully understood. I will read section 14:

SEC. 14. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act, and when such rules and regulations shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury they shall have the force and effect of law.

If this provision has any meaning, it means that Congress abdicates its own power and turns over the lawmaking power into the hands of an official of the Treasury Depatrment.

Recurring to the tenth section of the bill, something of the dangers of this enormous power will be perceived. I read:

SEC. 10. Whenever any contract or agreement for the sale and future delivery of any of the articles mentioned in section 3 of this act shall be made—

That applies to all contracts for the sale and future delivery of things, as well to contracts made by parties in possession as to contracts made by parties who have the lawful expectation of possession; it applies to them all, as will be seen in a moment.

SEC. 10. Whenever any contract or agreement for the sale and future delivery of any of the articles mentioned in section 3 of this act shall be made, and the making thereof shall not be reported to the collector of internal revenue, as required by section 9, or as required by section 12 of this act, or if it shall have been reported to the said collector as a contract or agreement of the nature and character mentioned in and authorized to be made under a certificate issued pursuant to the provisions of section 12 of this act, and it shall come to the knowledge of such collector, or he shall have reasonable cause to believe that the party by whom such contract or agreement was made as vendor was not, at the time of the making thereof, the owner of the article or articles which were the subject of, embraced in, or covered by such contract or agreement, and had not then acquired, and was not then entitled to, the right to the future possession of such article or articles under and by virtue of a contract or agreement for the sale and future delivery thereof previously made by the owner of such article or articles, it shall be the duty of such collector to require the party who shall have made such contract or agreement as vendor to forthwith furnish to such collector proof of such vendor's ownership, or right or title to the future possession, of the article or articles so embraced in or covered by such contract.

I state as the meaning of this bill, as its effect, that it gives to the collector of internal revenue absolute authority over all contracts made by any person for the sale and future delivery of property. When the sale is reported to the collector it is easily disposed of, but the bill provides that wherever any such sale has been made or when it shall come to the knowledge of the collector or he shall have reason to believe that the sale was one in violation of this act, he is authorized to proceed at once to the investigation of that particular transaction.

If it is a sale for future delivery, the amount is not material; for a property of small value or of great value it is just the same. If it shall come to the knowledge of the collector, or he shall have reason to believe that the contract is made in violation of the act, then he is permitted to proceed to investigate the particulars as to each transaction. The effect of that would be to give to the collectors of internal revenue the absolute right to investigate every sale for future delivery made anywhere in the country. I beg the attention of the friends of the bill to that construction of it, and desire to know whether my construction is right or not.

Whenever any contract—

Or, it might be read, "when any contract or agreement for the sale and future delivery of any of the articles mentioned in section 3 of this act shall be made, and the making thereof shall not be reported to the collector of internal revenue, as required by section 12 of the act; or if it shall have been reported to the said collector as a contract or agreement of the nature and character mentioned in and authorized to be made under a certificate issued pursuant to the provisions of section 12 of this act, and it shall come to the knowledge of such collector, or he shall have reasonable cause to believe that the contract is made in violation of the act," then upon report or upon information or upon reasonable belief, he is authorized to proceed to investigate the contract.

Let us see what his powers are. He is authorized to require of the party an affidavit:

Said party shall thereupon make, and file with such collector, an affidavit stating by whom the said article or articles were owned at the time said contract or agreement was made, and, if affiant was not at that time such owner, whether at the time of making such contract or agreement affiant was entitled to the right to the future possession of said article or articles, and how such right was acquired. Such affidavit shall also state the warehouse, elevator, or other place where said article or articles are stored, or, if the same be then in the possession of a vessel, railroad, or other carrier for transportation, the name of such vessel, railroad, or carrier, and the number and date of each separate bill of lading or receipt issued by such vessel, railroad, or carrier therefor, and the amount or quantity of such article or articles called for by such bill of lading or receipt.

It is apparent that this is to give to the collector a most extensive and alarming jurisdiction and authority to look into the business of every man or any man in the country, a power which heretofore has been only permitted under very limited and restricted circumstances for mere revenue purposes; but in this case the power extends to every transaction. Who will determine what may be the sources of the information or the ground of the suspicion of this class of officers to whom these startling powers are given? But that might be tolerated if it were not for the provision of the bill:

And said party is further required if demanded by such collector, to exhibit to the collector the original receipt of the warehouse or elevator where the aforesaid article or articles are then stored, or the bill of lading or receipt of the vessel, railroad, or other carrier having possession of said article or articles for transportation. And in case said party shall fail or refuse to make and file with the collector the said affidavit when so required, or shall fail or refuse to exhibit the said warehouse or elevator receipt or said bill of lading, when so demanded, such failure or refusal shall constitute and be deemed and held to be prima facie evidence that the contract or agreement so made by said party was a "futures" contract or agreement as described and defined in section 2 of this act.

That the party fails to produce the papers required is made evidence of guilt. That power of search is not confined alone to offenses, that presumption of criminality will attend all transactions which the collector is authorized to investigate. He is authorized, as I have said, to investigate all contracts which come to his knowledge for future sales and delivery, and thus this presumption will apply to any one who may be called upon by the collector, and the collector may call upon any citizen within his district.

Mr. President, this bill is objectionable on much broader grounds than this. We hear much said about the rights of the States, and I had supposed that no party in this country was yet prepared to say that the Federal Government could interfere with the exercise of the police powers of the States. All the writers upon that subject seem to deny the existence of such a power, and I believe no attempt heretofore has been made to interfere with the exercise of the police powers of the States. We have examples, it is true, of legislation which seems to go in that direction; we have the oleomargarine bill, which was objected to by many, but that has in it the semblance of a purpose to raise revenue. We have the bill which proposes to tax 10 per cent upon the issues of the State banks. That has been supported by the Supreme Court on the ground that it was a power which Congress might exercise in connection with its power to coin money and regulate the value thereof.

Some apology has been found for all this legislation, but here is an instance which stands without excuse or apology. No Senator—and I address myself particularly to Senators in my eye—will risk his reputation as a lawyer or legislator by affirming that Congress possesses the power to prohibit "options" or "futures" in the States. It has been claimed by a Senator on this floor that some such power might be found under the clause authorizing Congress to regulate commerce between the States, and I believe that there is an amendment proposed to this bill which grasps that particular constitutional authority for the support of the bill. Here, however, is an attempt but thinly disguised to thrust the jurisdiction of the Federal Government into the States to define and punish crime. I repeat the proposition, and I ask the question of Senators on the other side, is there a Senator who will declare that Congress has the power to declare "options" void or in express, direct terms, prohibit dealing in "futures" in the States? I apprehend none will.

This bill, however, resorts to the trick, to the expedient—I withdraw the word "trick"—it resorts to the circumlocution of the form of a revenue law, and in that way it is sought to find power to prohibit "options" and define and punish sales for future delivery.

Mr. President, in a former debate something was said here in regard to the ruling of the Supreme Court. The text writers say that where a power belongs to Congress, Congress may select its own mode of executing the power, and when Congress declares, as it is said in this case, that the purpose is to raise revenue, the courts are not allowed to look beyond the declaration of Congress. There is some force in that answer to this objection; but I deplore, and I for myself reject the idea that the Senate must be left to depend upon the Supreme Court of the United States to defend and maintain the Constitution.

When I entered this body, in the presence of all its members and of the galleries I took an oath to support and defend the Constitution of the United States. My obligation to defend that instrument goes beyond my oath, for it was a part of the inheritance of my birth. I have endeavored to obey it, and I am not willing to delegate to the Supreme Court the power either of judging for me or the duty of defending that sacred instrument. The obligation rests upon me as forcibly and distinctly as it does upon the President or the Supreme Court. I must judge for myself. I can not afford to be a party to a fraud upon the Supreme Court and cover up a transaction that can not be defended by placing it beyond the power of the Supreme Court, because, under circumstances like these, I am conscious while I am doing it that I am concealing from the court the real motive, and I am hindering the court from performing its own solemn duty.

What does this bill propose? It proposes to require a special tax for the sale of "futures," not "options" alone, but "futures." If this proposed law did in point of fact legalize "options"—as it would do if it covered "options"—for the sake of suppressing them, it would be a monument of immorality, because it would be a case where Congress has gone into the State and has licensed or permitted this business, if it were not for the exceptions I have mentioned—and if the exception exists it applies to all the States—and interferes with contracts in the States.

If it were confined to merely forbidding that which all men condemn, it would not be so offensive to morality or to conscience. It, however, makes crimes; it finds the law to be that parties capable of contracting may in good faith sell and bind themselves to deliver that which they have or that which they promise to obtain; it finds that to be the state of the law, and it reverses the law of the State in that respect and makes a crime that which is admissible by the laws of every State. I say "a crime." I know I am told the bill does not make it a crime; it simply requires a license to make that class of contracts. That requirement is made with the distinct understanding that the price of the license and the burden which the license imposes are such that no sensible man will take upon himself; that is to say he may deal in "futures" now easily, he may sell for future delivery now, but after the passage of this law he shall not be allowed to sell a pound of cotton, nor hops, nor pork, nor lard, nor bacon without paying a special tax of 5 cents a pound. As a matter of fact that 5 cents is quite the ordinary price per pound of some of the articles mentioned in the bill and forms a very large proportion of the price of all of them. It is further provided that he shall pay—the sum of 20 cents per bushel for each and every bushel of any of the other articles mentioned in section 3 of this act.

The Senator who stands here and calls this a revenue bill knows as well as he knows, of his existence, that the term is a misnomer. If it were a transaction outside of the Senate, where its proprieties are not observed—and I shall never violate them—it would be called a false statement, because there is no purpose to raise revenue from this bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. PALMER. With pleasure.

Mr. MITCHELL. Would it make any difference to the Senator from Illinois, in so far as the constitutional aspect of the question is concerned, if, instead of professing to be a revenue bill, as the Senator says this bill does, it professed to be a bill to prohibit dealing in "futures" by the establishment of a prohibitory tax?

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I think I comprehend the Senator from Oregon. I have said that the Senator will not affirm—I will believe it when he does so—that Congress has the power by express declaration to prohibit "options" and "futures" in the States. Whenever that assertion is made by any Senator, of course it will be open to discussion. I understand the claim is that it can not be done by direct means under any power of the Constitution, but the prohibition may be effected by circumlocution, by adopting the form of a revenue law, although no man will characterize this as a bill for raising revenue.

I understand the rule to be well settled, announced by Mr. Hamilton and formulated by Chief Justice Marshall, that let the power of Congress to do a particular thing be established then Congress may select the means. According to that most triumphant argument of Chief Justice Marshall, let the power be found and Congress may choose the means; but no case can be found either in a writer of authority or in judicial decisions where a power can be found by the selection of the means. That would be simply a subversion of all just theories of constitutional law.

The power to prohibit "options" is that which is in question. I affirm that Congress has no power to prohibit "options" or "futures" in the States. That proposition is either true or false. If it has the power, then it can do it by a plain, direct constitutional provision; but if it has no such power——

Mr. MITCHELL. Could Congress do it by invoking the taxing power?

Mr. PALMER. No, sir.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, will the Senator——

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like an answer to the question I addressed to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HOAR. Would the Senator from Illinois be disturbed if I make one inquiry of the Senator from Oregon in that connection?

Mr. PALMER. No, sir.

Mr. HOAR. Under what constitutional authority does this bill originate in the Senate, if it be a bill to raise taxes?

Mr. MITCHELL. The bill did not originate in the Senate. It originated in the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOAR. I thought it was a Senate bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. It originated in the other House. It is a revenue bill, and originated in the proper place.

Mr. PALMER. I invite the attention of the Senator from Oregon to this point. I ask him—and he may answer it now—has Congress the power, as an original power, to prohibit the sale or dealing in "futures" and "options" in the States?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think this bill presents that question.

Mr. PALMER. I take it by the fact that the Senator declines to answer that he does not believe Congress has that power. Then I ask the question, can Congress by a fraudulent device—I use the term "fraudulent" in its just sense, not in its offensive sense—can Congress by selecting a means, which is no means, accomplish that which it can not do directly? I repeat, where the power exists, Congress may select its means; where the power does not exist, Congress can not do the act by any means it may select. If any text writer or if any judge ever declared that the Congress of the United States, although forbidden the exercise of particular powers directly, might by invoking some other power accomplish the same result, such writer or judge would have been condemned and held up to public scorn over this whole country.

I assume that no man will say that if this bill becomes a law it will ever bring into the Treasury one dollar of revenue. It is a bill of pains and penalties, which gives the business of this country over to the management of mere ministerial officers, which may produce confusion and may interfere with popular rights; but it can not, in the nature of things, bring one dollar of revenue into the Treasury.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. PALMER. Yes, sir.

Mr. PEFFER. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois whether, in his opinion as a lawyer, Congress has the constitutional power to regulate the business of dealing in "options" and "futures" in the several States?

Mr. PALMER. Not at all. I deny the power either to regulate or prohibit.

Mr. VEST. Congress has nothing to do with it.

Mr. PALMER. It is a matter of purely State concern, solely and entirely within the powers of the States, and in no respect within the powers of Congress. Such power has never been claimed by any party as a distinct proposition. The claim is not that Congress has the power to do that which is proposed to be done, but that Congress can do something else from which this particular result will follow; that is, Congress may pass a revenue bill, which it is admitted will never produce a cent of revenue.

Mr. MITCHELL. Did not the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of the tax imposed by Congress on issues of State banks, hold that, although it was apparent on its face that it was prohibitory, still they would maintain the constitutionality of the act?

Mr. PALMER. Does the Senator desire an answer?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do.

Mr. PALMER. The Supreme Court——

Mr. MITCHELL. I know the view taken by the last National Democratic Convention——

Mr. PALMER. The Democratic Convention adopted resolutions which stated the constitutional proposition with great clearness, and I beg to assure the Senator when the Democratic party comes into power those constitutional doctrines will be applied.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope so.

Mr. PALMER. I was about to characterize this measure in terms which I should not like to do here, but a Democratic convention would not tolerate a fraud. No Democratic convention would hold that Congress might take jurisdiction of the whole police power of the States by professing to license that which it intended to prohibit. We would never consent that Congress should adopt Parisian legislation in regard to a certain class of houses by requiring a license which might prohibit them. We should never expect a Democratic Senate to favor a system of license directed to all the crimes which exist in the country and prohibit them by excessive taxes. We shall never claim that doctrine, and gambling in the States will never be disturbed by the Democratic party. We shall endeavor through the influence of sound Democratic doctrine to suppress these vices by State action.

I come back to the point. I beg to state this proposition so distinctly that it can not escape attention. Answering now the question of the Senator from Oregon, the Supreme Court of the United States maintained the power to tax the issues of the State banks upon grounds which were clearly intelligible to my mind, but not upon the ground that it was a part of the police power, nor as a revenue measure. The Supreme Court would have sustained an act of Congress especially prohibiting the circulation of the issues of State banks—and that is the intimation of the opinion, and the distinction is one to which I have invited the attention of the Senator from Oregon—the Supreme Court has never held and never will hold that a bill which is passed by both Houses of Congress prohibiting "options" or "futures" is within any of the recognized powers of Congress. That fact is so well known that the Senator from Oregon defends a palpable, plain evasion; defends an abuse of the taxing power.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is certainly not an abuse of the taxing power if the highest judicial tribunal in the country holds that it may be invoked.

Mr. PALMER. The highest judicial tribunal in the country has never done so.

Mr. MITCHELL. For the purpose of destruction.

Mr. PALMER. But I do not mean to put my conscience into the keeping of the Supreme Court of the United States. I am responsible to myself and my own conscience for my own interpretation of the Constitution. I know there is a practice of that sort. Sometimes when opposing a measure I have been asked, "Why not let it go; the Supreme Court will decide whether it is constitutional or not?" When I take an oath to support the Constitution of my country with the qualification that I will do so as the Supreme Court of the United States may interpret the Constitution, I may perhaps feel very much like adopting the course of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Senator will allow me, as I do not wish to interrupt him if it disturbs him——

Mr. PALMER. Not in the slightest.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then the Senator's argument simply amounts to this: He concedes that the Supreme Court of the United States would hold this bill within the limits of the Constitution——

Mr. PALMER. I beg pardon; I have not done that yet.

Mr. MITCHELL. But he as an individual Senator differs with the Supreme Court.

Mr. PALMER. As to the last point, I say yes. I may or may not differ with the Supreme Court. It is my duty to differ if I think I should, and it is my right to differ; but I wish to remark here that I think the habit we have of inviting the courts to the consideration and discussion of purely political questions is one of the most alarming tendencies of modern politics.

Let us suppose that the friends of this bill have made the startling discovery that their objects can be accomplished by adopting the form of a revenue bill. Confessedly the bill is without any revenue purpose, but suppose by a farce, a pretense, a fraud, we should adopt this form with a distinct knowledge that it is not in the exercise of the taxing power. I do not know of a more outrageous idea than that the power of levying taxes conferred upon Congress by the Constitution for the noblest purposes and for the promotion of the public welfare, should be prostituted to the subversion of an end like this. But I say it is a mere pretense. The Senator will not affect to pretend that there is any real purpose to raise money by the exercise of this supposed taxing power.

It is a pretense, I repeat, and the forms of the taxing power are grasped not to collect taxes, not for the purpose for which it was conferred upon Congress by the framers of the Constitution, but in order to seize a power which was not granted by the Constitution. That is the form of it. An abuse like that would lead to the utter subversion of popular liberty. If Congress by the ingenious invention or application of certain acknowledged forms may accomplish all that it desires to accomplish, may do what it pleases; in other words, if there is no limitation upon its powers, we see the result.

The court is certainly bound to know something, and while I do not by any means depend upon the court—I do not think I have a right to do it—I believe the court would see through this hollow pretense and would observe that the attempt to raise money by the use of this revenue power was a mere abuse, a mere attempt at distorting the powers of the Government given for one purpose to another and a different purpose.

Mr. President, I will not trouble the Senate longer this evening, and do not know that I shall at all, but it will be convenient for me to conclude at this point or to suspend at this time if it is the will of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. VEST. Do I understand the Senator from Illinois to mean that he desires to take the floor to-morrow morning?

Mr. PALMER. I will, if permitted to do so by the Senate.

Mr. VEST. Let that be the understanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The occupant of the chair did not so understand.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Illinois desires to resume his remarks at the next session of the Senate when the bill comes up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois will be regarded as entitled to the floor.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 21, 1892, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 20, 1892.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CHOCTAW TREATY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Choctaw Nation of Indians, submitted by the Secretary of the Interior; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

CONTINGENT APPROPRIATIONS, INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a statement of the expenditures of the contingent appropriations for that Department during the fiscal year 1892; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department.

DEATH OF SENATOR GIBSON OF LOUISIANA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the resolutions of the Senate in relation to the death of Hon. Randall Lee Gibson, late a Senator from the State of Louisiana; which were read and ordered to lie upon the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STOCKDALE, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. KYLE, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. CURTIS, for to-morrow, on account of important business.

To Mr. HARRIES, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. POWERS, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. WHEELER of Alabama, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HOUK of Ohio, for two days, on account of a death in his family.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. STONE of Kentucky to withdraw papers in the case of Thomas Crawford, filed in the Fifty-first Congress.

EMMA C. LOVELACE AND STEPHEN D. CLARK.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 775) for the relief of Emma C. Lovelace and Stephen D. Clark.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. BURROWS. I wish to inquire if this has been reported by a committee of the House?

Mr. BOATNER. Yes, sir; from the Committee on War Claims. I will ask to have the report read.

Mr. BURROWS. A report from a committee, and the bill on the Private Calendar?

Mr. BOATNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROWS. I think this had better take its place in the regular course of business, and I shall have to object to its present consideration.

MARY A. LEWIS.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1484) for the relief of Mary A. Lewis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Mrs. Mary A. Lewis, widow of Joseph N. Lewis, the sum of $411.22, to be in full remuneration of the payment made by said Joseph N. Lewis, out of his own private funds, for account of the Government of the United States, while he was acting as its commercial agent at Port au Prince, Haiti, in the year 1855: Provided, That the said Mary A. Lewis procure the release of the personal representative of the said Joseph N. Lewis and file the same in the Treasury of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the report will be read.

THE SPEAKER. The report will be read subject to objection.

The report (by Mr. SMITH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1484) for the relief of Mrs. Mary A. Lewis, widow of Joseph N. Lewis, having carefully considered the same, report:

A similar bill has been several times favorably reported from the Senate committee, and has twice passed the Senate; and favorable reports on a bill similar to this have been made from the Committee on Claims of the House, which last report of the House Committee on Claims, made in the Fifty-first Congress, your committee adopt as its own, which is as follows:

That Joseph N. Lewis, late resident of the State of Missouri, now deceased, was, in 1885, commercial agent of the United States at Port au Prince, Haiti; and on the 22d day of September, in that year, as such commercial agent, he caused the seizure at that port of the American bark Amelia for violation of the neutrality laws of the United States, by reason of her contraband cargo of guns and ammunition; that the fact of the seizure was immediately communicated by the said Lewis to the State Department by a dispatch of the 25th of the same September, and that pursuant to the request of the State Department the United States steamship Saratoga was sent to Port au Prince to bring the Amelia and her cargo to New York.

"That the said Joseph N. Lewis, in his petition to the Forty-fourth Congress asking relief, states that on the passage to the port of New York the said vessel was forced by stress of weather and damage into the port of St. Thomas; that at that port both the vessel and cargo were condemned and sold by the United States; that the proceeds of the sale were paid into the Treasury of the United States; that in the seizure and subsequent sale of the vessel at Port au Prince the petitioner expended of his own money the sum of $411.22, gold, on account of the United States; and that this statement of the petitioner seems to be fully proved.

"That after the departure of the vessel from Port au Prince the said Lewis forwarded to the State Department a statement of his expenses, with the vouchers for the same, and notified the Department of his having drawn a draft for that sum on that account; that the draft was referred to the Treasury Department; that the Treasury Department informed the holder or maker that there was no appropriation for its payment, and that several applications were afterwards made by him to the State Department for the payment of the amount mentioned.

"That it appears from the papers submitted to your committee with the aforesaid bill that the committee of a former Congress requested of the State Department any information upon the subject in the possession of the Department; that the Secretary of State, in answer to said request, after a general statement of the facts, which correspond with those contained in this report, adds:

"'That Mr. Lewis does not appear to have been expressly authorized to make this seizure, nor was the act approved by this Department, nor the account for the expenses incurred, as is customary, before it could be paid.'

"But it clearly appears that the seizure was communicated to the State Department at the time it was made; that an account of the expenses incurred by Lewis, with vouchers therefor, were duly furnished to the same Department, and a draft made on the Treasury for the amount; that the only reason for the nonpayment of the claim given by the Treasury Department was that no appropriation for such a payment was made; and that the Government accepted the seizure with a knowledge of all the facts, sold the vessel and cargo, received the proceeds of such sale, which duly came to the Treasury and are now there.

"It appears that this claim has been presented to the Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, and Forty-seventh Congresses; that favorable reports have been made by the Senate Committee on Claims of each of these Congresses, and by one or more of the same committees of the House; and that bills asking the relief asked for in this bill have twice passed the Senate, but have not been reached in the House.

"The claim seems to be entirely just, and ought long ago to have been paid."

Your committee therefore recommend that said bill do pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe the amount named in the bill is $411?

Mr. LANE. That is all, and it is for a widow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LANE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SALE OF LAND, FORT MIFFLIN.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3298) authorizing the sale of land in the vicinity of Fort Mifflin, on the river Delaware.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War for the time being is authorized to sell, at such price as may be agreed upon by the Attorney-General and himself, and convey to the International Navigation Company, a corporation created under the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, subject to such conditions as they shall deem proper for the public interest, the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to so much of the land described in deed by John W. Ashmead and wife to the United States, dated the 28th day of March, 1851, being in the vicinity of Fort Mifflin on the River Delaware, lying outside the dike or river bank and eastward of the fort, as will, in the judgment of said Secretary of War and Attorney-General, not be prejudicial to the interests of the United States: Provided, That the right, title, and interest to so much of this land as may be needed as sites for dikes, shall be retained by the United States, together with the right to maintain and control said dikes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM]?

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the report, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read, subject to objection.

The report (by Mr. BINGHAM) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3298) authorizing the sale of land in the vicinity of Fort Mifflin, on the River Delaware, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to submit the following report:

The object and purposes of this bill are fully set forth in the following letter from Maj. C. W. Raymond, of the Corps of Engineers, stationed at Philadelphia:

"UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE, 1428 ARCH STREET,
"Philadelphia, Pa., June 9, 1892.

"GENERAL: In compliance with instructions contained in your letter of June 6, 1892, I have the honor to return herewith H. R. 9104, Fifty-second Congress, first session 'Authorizing the sale of land in the vicinity of Fort Mifflin on the River Delaware,' with the following report:

"The land referred to in the bill is a mud flat covered by the tide. The construction of dikes across the upper part of the flats and along the outer edge is about to be commenced for the improvement of the channel at the mouth of the Schuylkill River. I am informed that the title of the United States to this land is questioned, the International Navigation Company claiming to own it.

"If this land should become the property of the International Navigation Company it would doubtless be raised to a level above high water, which would be a benefit to the works of improvement. The land is of no value to the United States, but the right should be retained by the Government to maintain and control the dikes. The necessary conditions for this purpose can be established under the provisions of the bill.

"This land is directly opposite the west end of League Island, and the naval authorities may consider it of great value for the future extension of the navy-yard. So far as the projects and operations under my charge are concerned I see no objection to the passage of the bill.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"C. W. RAYMOND,
"Major, Corps of Engineers.

"Brig. Gen. THOMAS L. CASEY,
"Chief of Engineers, U. S. Army, Washington, D. C."

The recommendations contained in this letter are concurred in by the Chief of Engineers, as follows:

"OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
"Washington, D. C., June 25, 1892.

"SIR: I have the honor to return herewith S. 3298, Fifty-second Congress, first session, a bill authorizing the sale of land in the vicinity of Fort Mifflin, on the River Delaware, with a copy of a report made by Maj. C. W. Raymond, Corps of Engineers, under date of June 9, 1892, upon House bill 9104, present session, of the same title. The views expressed by Maj. Raymond in this report are concurred in by me.

"It is recommended that the bill be amended by adding after the word 'States,' in line 16, the following words: 'Provided, That the right, title, and interest to so much of this land as may be needed as sites for dikes shall be retained by the United States, together with the right to maintain and control said dikes.' A copy of the bill amended in accordance with this recommendation is also inclosed herewith.

"No objection is known to this office to the passage of the bill, amended as herein recommended.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"THOS. LINCOLN CASEY,
"Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

"Hon. S. B. ELKINS,

"WAR DEPARTMENT, June 27, 1892.

"Respectfully returned to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate, inviting attention to the inclosed report of the Chief Engineers, dated the 25th instant, and to the copy of the report of Maj. C. W. Raymond, dated the 19th instant, as also to a copy of an amended bill submitted by the Chief of Engineers, who remarks that as thus amended he knows of no objection to its passage by Congress.

"S. B. ELKINS, Secretary of War."

The bill simply seeks to clear away any cloud which may rest upon the title to the property, which is and has been for years in the possession of the International Navigation Company.

The power vested in the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General by the bill is a discretionary one. In selling the property to the International Navigation Company at such a price as they may agree upon, the sale is to be subject to such conditions as they shall deem proper for the public interest, and in their judgment the sale of the property must not be prejudicial to the interests of the United States.

The bill was amended in the Senate in accordance with the suggestion contained in the letter of the Chief of Engineers.

In view of the above statements your committee report the bill favorably, with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I infer from the reading of that report that this is a measure of importance to the Navy, and not to the War Department; but I notice no communication from the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would state to the gentleman in connection with that, that the bill properly guards any question of that kind by making it discretionary with the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General, so that the interests of the Government, whether relating to the Navy or to the War Department, shall not be prejudiced by the sale or disposition of this property upon which there is a cloud.

Mr. HOLMAN. But in any event, inasmuch as there is no communication from the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Navy for the time being should be added to the board to whom this question is to be submitted.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state to the gentleman that there is no purpose in connection with this legislation to go against the interests of the Government, either as to the War Department or the Navy Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the Secretary of the Navy should be a party to this adjustment. I hope there will be no objection to that.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then I will ask to amend the bill by inserting that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy for the time being are authorized to sell, etc.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Attorney-General is already named. Let it be the Secretary of War, the Attorney-General, and the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will amend the bill in that way, then, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] indicate the amendment?

Mr. BINGHAM. In line 3 of the bill amend so as to make it read that the Secretary of the War and the Secretary of the Navy for the time being are authorized, etc.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Secretary of War, the Attorney-General, and the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the amendment indicated will be considered agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. BINGHAM. In order to make the other parts of the bill conform, I ask to amend line 1 by striking out the word "is" and inserting the word "are;" also in line 1, after the word "war," amend by inserting the words "and the Secretary of the Navy." In line 3 strike out the word "himself" and insert the word "themselves." In line 13, after the word "war," insert "the Secretary of the Navy."

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection these amendments will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BINGHAM, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF ST. PAUL, AT FRANKLIN, TENN.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9929) for the relief of the Protestant Episcopal Church of St. Paul, at Franklin, Tenn.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to inquire, if consent is given for the present consideration of the bill, whether the point of order that it must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole would be good?

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman was for unanimous consent, and it has always been held that at this stage of the proceedings of the House unanimous consent was for consideration in the House.

Mr. BURROWS. If unanimous consent is given for its consideration, does it not mean consideration under the rules of the House, and that it would be subject to the point of order that it should first go to the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The request has always been considered to be for unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House.

Mr. BURROWS. I shall have to object to its consideration.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. I think if the gentleman understood the proposition he would not object. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the bill for one moment. It is not a proposition to take any money out of the Treasury. It is a proposition to refer the matter to the Secretary of War, to see whether or not there is any money due.

Mr. BURROWS. But the latter portion of the bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the amount due and take a receipt from the parties. That looks like taking money out of the Treasury.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Yes, if he finds anything due.

Mr. BURROWS. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McRAE. I will have to demand the regular order.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] to withdraw the demand for a moment, so that I may ask unanimous consent to have a bill considered.

Mr. McRAE. I withdraw it for the present,

JOSEPH COFFMAN.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8915) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Coffman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Joseph Coffman, late a private soldier in the First Regiment of United States Infantry, in the war with Mexico, with an increase of pension to the amount of $30 a month.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the word "thirty," in line 7, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "twenty-five" so as to fix the rate of pension at $25 per month; also by striking out the words "with Mexico," in line 6, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "of eighteen hundred and twelve."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. KILGORE. I would like to have an explanation of that bill made by my colleague. I am very much inclined to demand the regular order.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I will state to my colleague and to the House that the beneficiary in this bill is one of the 165 surviving veterans of the war of 1812. He is now 90 years old, and is drawing a pension at the rate of $8 per month. He asks in this bill for an increase of his pension to $25 per month.

Mr. KILGORE. Did he fight in that war?

Mr. LANHAM. He was in the war. I think he furnished music for the troops. [Laughter.] Music, I suppose, was as necessary and inspiring at that time as in later years. He can not draw this increase of pension very long, as he is now 90 years old. If my colleague could have seen him as he came with tottering steps to my door a few weeks ago he would not raise any objection to the consideration of the bill.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LANHAM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND], so as to equalize the recognitions.

HASTINGS AND DAKOTA RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to the House such information as the Department of the Interior may possess relative to the action taken by the State of Minnesota to annul the charter and to forfeit the franchises of the Hastings and Dakota Railroad Company, one of the land-grant companies of the United States. Also to report the quantity of lands, if any, that are still claimed by that corporation or those claiming to represent it; and, further, whether such lands are claimed by settlers, and what action, if any, has been taken by the Interior Department in relation to the same.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota for the present consideration of this resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a report from the Committee on Printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That 23,000 copies of the ninth annual report of the United States Civil Service Commission, with the appendices, be printed; of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 20,000 copies for the use of the United States Civil Service Commission.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The committee have considered the Senate resolution to print 23,000 copies of the ninth annual report of the Civil Service Commission, and direct me to report the same with the recommendation that it do pass. The estimated cost of the same is $6,427. The committee recommend that the House resolution on the same subject do lie on the table.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee what necessity there is for printing so many of these reports?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is the number that has been printed heretofore. At one time a larger number was printed, but the committee cut it down to 23,000, upon the statement, in writing, by that Commission through its president, that they could not get along with a less number than 20,000 copies.

Mr. BLAND. I move to amend the resolution so as to reduce the number printed for the use of the Commission from 20,000 to 15,000.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the number fixed by the resolution for the use of the Commission, 20,000, will be as little as we can get along with. The Civil Service Commission wrote us that they used them in large numbers to supply the demand upon them for information from different parts of the country. They simply transmit a copy of the report with the information it contains, and with the appendix, and that answers the letters of correspondents with which they are flooded. I think if we print a smaller number, that as soon as we meet again, or possibly before adjournment, another resolution will be introduced to print an additional number; and the difference of 5,000 that the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri will cover will be so small that there will be nothing gained.

To print 5,000 additional copies it will cost more to put up the forms and to go to press and reprint than to print the 20,000 copies now, and I hope the gentleman will not insist on his amendment. This is a reduction from 31,000 or 32,000 to 23,000, and the Joint Committee on Printing fixed that number in the printing bill, and we did it upon the testimony of the Civil Service Commissioners themselves, that they could not get along with a smaller number. The gentleman will see that 2,000 copies are for the use of the House, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, and we give the remaining 20,000 to the Commission.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand how this Commission can use more than 15,000; certainly not by sending them out to those who call for them. I doubt whether they have ten thousand calls during the year, and I shall insist on my amendment to reduce the number for the use of the Commission from 20,000 to 15,000.

The amendment was read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask the indulgence of the House for a moment. I have in my hand a letter from Mr. Lyman, the president of the Commission, which reads as follows:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., December 7, 1892.

SIR: This Commission has the honor to submit herewith a form of concurrent resolution for printing its ninth annual report. The report contains the civil-service act, rules, regulations, specimen examination questions, and other information necessary to applicants. Nearly all of the questions contained in the letters addressed to the Commission can be more conveniently and fully answered by sending copies of the report than by writing letters. The Commission earnestly hopes that it may meet the convenience of the committee to act upon the resolution at an early day, and that the full number of copies requested for the use of the Commission may be printed.

A copy of the eighth report is inclosed herewith to show the character of the information contained in the ninth, which resembles it in its general features.

Very respectfully,
CHAS. LYMAN, President.

Hon. JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Chairman Committee on Printing, House of Representatives.

In addition to this letter, as I stated before, they testified before the joint committee that they could not get along with a smaller number. That is all I have to say.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. BLAND, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to prevail.

Mr. BLAND. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 8, noes 30; so the amendment was rejected.

The Senate resolution was then concurred in.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate resolution was concurred in, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the standing and select committees for reports.

NATURALIZATION CERTIFICATES, BIDDEFORD, ME.

The Committee on the Judiciary was called.

Mr. OATES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 2707) to make legal and valid naturalization certificates, issued by the municipal court of Biddeford, Me., in the First Congressional district of Maine, and for other purposes; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENT TO THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. STOCKDALE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 9069) for the further continuance of the publication of the Supplement of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DEEP-WATER HARBOR, TEXAS.

Mr. CRAIN, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (H. R. 9824) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the construction of a safe deep-water harbor on the coast of Texas," approved February 9, 1891; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS, ALABAMA.

Mr. MCRAE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with a favorable recommendation an act (S. 1696) to further provide for the disposal of certain public lands in the State of Alabama; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This completes the call of standing and select committees. The morning hour begins at 15 minutes of 1. The call rests with the Committee on Indian Affairs.

INDIAN CLAIMS UNDER TREATY OF BUFFALO CREEK.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5679) to provide for settlement with the Indians who were parties to and beneficiaries under the treaty concluded at Buffalo Creek, in the State of New York, January 15, 1838, for the unexecuted stipulations of that treaty. This bill carries with it an appropriation, and of course, according to the rule, it ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole; but when we get the bill under consideration I propose to substitute a bill reported by the Senate committee which carries no appropriation, but refers the matter to the Court of Claims. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the House bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope there will be no objection to going into Committee of the Whole upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, before that is agreed to I wish to ask the gentleman what it is proposed to submit to the Court of Claims, and whether they are to have authority to render judgment.

Mr. PEEL. This is a claim of the New York Indians against the Government for certain lands that were appropriated by the Government, and the Senate bill proposes to refer the matter to the Court of Claims to ascertain the amount due and to render judgment. They have found upon the case once.

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the amount?

Mr. PEEL. The amount found before was about a million dollars.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I think this bill had better take the regular course.

Mr. PEEL. Very well. Then I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. RICHARDSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole to consider the bill the title of which will be read.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

To provide for a settlement with the Indians who were parties to and beneficiaries under the treaty concluded at Buffalo Creek, in the State of New York, January 15, 1838, for the unexecuted stipulations of that treaty.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. PEEL. Yes; I think the bill ought to be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to secure from the New York and other Indian tribes who were parties to or beneficiaries under the treaty concluded at Buffalo Creek, in the State of New York, on the 15th day of July, 1838, a release and surrender of all their claims under the said treaty to the lands set apart for them in the present State of Kansas and to all the money for their benefit thereby provided for.

SEC. 2. That in consideration of such release and surrender the United States shall, upon the execution thereof to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior, pay and invest for the said Indians $1,971,295.92, with interest from the 5th day of November, 1857: Provided, however, That out of said sum the Secretary of the Interior shall first pay and satisfy all proper and lawful claims arising out of contracts with the said Indians or any of them for services in their behalf which have been or may hereafter be approved according to law.

SEC. 3. That the money above provided to be paid and invested shall, after the allowance aforesaid, be distributed among the several tribes interested therein in proportion to the numbers of said tribes, respectively, as set forth in Schedule A to said treaty of Buffalo Creek.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to make such arrangements with each of the said tribes for the investment and application of its proportion of the sum aforesaid and to apply the same as may be determined upon by the said several tribes in accordance with their respective rules or form of government and as may be approved by the said Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 5. That there be, and there hereby is, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the moneys necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. PEEL. I now desire to substitute for the bill just read the one which I send to the desk, which is the bill reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate.

The proposed substitute (S. 3407) was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Court of Claims to hear and enter up judgment as if it had original jurisdiction of said case, the claim of the New York Indians, being those Indians who were parties to the treaty of Buffalo Creek, New York, on the 15th of January, 1838, against the United States, growing out of the alleged unexecuted stipulations of said treaty on the part of the United States. In the hearing and adjudication of said case said court may proceed upon the finding of facts already made, upon a reference of said claim to said court, filed on the 11th day of January, 1892, and transmitted to Congress by John Randolph, assistant clerk of said court, on the 16th day of January, 1892. Or said court may, if in its opinion justice so requires, take other testimony as to facts. But in any judgment it may render against the United States in favor of said claimants, interest shall not be allowed. The statute of limitations shall not be pleaded as a bar to recovery in said case. The Attorney-General is hereby directed to appear in behalf of the United States in said case. And from any judgment rendered by the court either party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. Said cause shall be advanced on the docket and tried without delay in any court which shall become invested with jurisdiction thereof by the provisions of this act.

Mr. PEEL. As the Committee of the Whole will observe, this substitute provides simply that this claim shall be referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication. The House bill which was first read proposes to appropriate a large amount of money for the settlement of this claim, growing out of a finding of facts heretofore made by the Court of Claims; but the Senate committee upon investigation concluded that the matter ought to be re-referred to the Court of Claims in order to ascertain the amount due and to render judgment. The Committee of the Whole will observe that the provisions of the bill as read preclude any allowance of interest upon any finding which the Court of Claims may hereafter make. The court can only find the principal sum due to these Indians for the lands which the Government appropriated. If there is any gentleman who wants to ask any question or to debate the measure, of course there will be reasonable time for that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the report ought to be read.

Mr. PEEL. The report is long.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is ample time.

Mr. PEEL. I hope the time has not come when it is not only impossible to appropriate money for the Indians, but when we can not let the matter go to the courts to ascertain whether we should make such appropriation or not.

The report of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the finding of the Court of Claims in the case of the New York Indians, etc., vs. The United States, make the following report:

The finding of the Court of Claims is as follows:

[Court of Claims. Congressional case No. 151. The New York Indians, being those Indians who were parties to the treaty concluded at Buffalo Creek, in the State of New York, on the 15th day of January, 1838, vs. The United States.]

At a Court of Claims held in the city of Washington on the 11th day of January, A. D. 1892, the court filed the following findings of fact, to wit:

The claim or matter in the above-entitled case was transmitted to the court by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate of the United States, the 21st day of June, 1884.

James B. Jenkins, Henry E. Davis, Guion Miller, esqs. (with whom was George Barker, esq.), appeared for claimants, and the Attorney-General, by F. P. Dewees, esq., his assistant and under his direction, appeared for the defense and protection of the interests of the United States.

The following is the letter transmitting the cause to this court:

"UNITED STATES SENATE COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS,
"June 21, 1884.

"At a meeting of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate of the United States the following order was made by that committee:

"Ordered, That Senate bill (S. 467) to provide for a settlement with the Indians who were parties to the treaty concluded at Buffalo Creek, in the State of New York, on the 15th day of January, 1838, for the unexecuted stipulation of that treaty, together with the accompanying amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. Voorhees to the aforesaid bill, which bill and proposed amendment were referred to said committee at the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress, and which bill and proposed amendment are now pending before said committee, be transmitted (in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government,' approved March 3, 1883), to the Court of Claims of the United States, together with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents appertaining thereto, for the investigation and determination of the facts involved in said bill and said proposed amendment thereto.

"J. R. MCCARTY,
"Clerk to the United States Senate Committee on Indian Affairs."

All questions relative to the proposed amendment to the Senate bill mentioned in said letter were abandoned by council at the beginning of the argument, and it was stated that an agreement had been reached upon its subject-matter.

The case having been brought to a hearing on the 25th day of November, 1891, the court, upon the evidence and after considering the briefs and arguments of counsel on both sides, find the facts to be as follows:

In 1784 the United States by treaty secured the Oneida and Tuscarora Nations in the possession of the lands upon which they were settled, and fixed the boundaries of the lands of the Six Nations, it being agreed by the United States that the Six Nations should be secured in the peaceful possession of the lands they then inhabited east and north of the boundaries fixed.

The stipulations of this treaty were renewed and confirmed in 1789, when the boundary was again described in the same terms as in the treaty of 1784, and the Indians relinquished and ceded to the United States the lands west of the defined boundary. The Mohawks were not parties to the treaty of 1789.

In 1794 another treaty was concluded with the Six Nations, guaranteeing peace and friendship perpetual between the parties, acknowledging the lands reserved to the Oneida, Onondaga, and Cayuga Nations in their treaty with the State of New York to be their property, and engaging that the United States would never claim the same or disturb them or either of the Six Nations, nor their Indian friends residing thereon and united with them in the free use and enjoyment thereof, but the said lands should remain theirs until they chose to sell the same to the United States, who "have the right to purchase." The land of the Seneca Nation is also described by metes and bounds in this treaty, acknowledged as their property, and confirmed as theirs until they choose to sell to the United States, who "have the right to purchase," and the United States having thus described and acknowledged the lands of the Oneidas, Onondagas, Cayugas, and Senecas, and engaged never to claim the same nor disturb the Six Nations in the free use and enjoyment thereof, the Six Nations upon their side engaged never to claim any other lands within the boundaries of the United States.

II.

The New York Indians in 1810 petitioned the President of the United States for leave to purchase reservations of their Western brethren with the privilege of removing to and occupying the same. Thereupon, with the approbation of the President, lands situated at Green Bay, Wis., was purchased by the New York Indians from the Monomonee and Winnebago tribes.

III.

In 1821 the Monomonee Indians ceded to the Stockbridge, Oneida, Tuscarora, St. Regis, and Munsee nations two large tracts of land in Wisconsin for a small money consideration. The title to one of those tracts was confirmed in the New York Indians by the President March 13, 1823.

IV.

Thereafter certain New York Indians belonging to the Oneida, St. Regis, Munsee, and Brothertown tribes removed to and took possession of the lands in Wisconsin. Subsequently questions of tenure and boundaries of the lands granted to the New York Indians were raised by the Menomonees, negotiations were had, and steps were taken through which the purchase by the New York Indians from the Menomonees and Winnebagoes was so reduced as to include only 500,000 acres of land on the south and west of the Fox River, together with three townships on the north and east of said river, comprising 89,120 acres, which was to be set apart for the Stockbridge, Munsee, and Brothertown tribes, to all of which the New York Indians duly assented, and thereafter the title to the said three townships and the said 500,000 acres was recognized by the Congress and the President of the United States to be in the New York Indians.

In the treaty of February 8, 1831, with the Menomonee Indians it was agreed that certain land in Wisconsin might be set apart as a home to the several tribes "of New York Indians who may remove to and settle upon the same within three years from the date of this agreement."

This treaty was assented to by the New York Indians, October 17, 1832, and by amendment later introduced by agreement between the United States and the Menomonee Indians, the removal of those of the New York Indians who might not be settled on the lands at the end of three years was left discretionary with the President of the United States. A small portion of the New York Indians removed to the Wisconsin or Green Bay lands.

In the treaty with the Monomonees, supra, appears at the end of article 1 the following:

"It is distinctly understood that the lands hereby ceded to the United States for the New York Indians are to be held by those tribes under such tenure as the Menomonee Indians now hold their lands, subject to such regulations and alteration of tenure as Congress and the President of the United States shall from time to time think proper to adopt."

V.

The title of the New York Indians as set forth in the fourth finding has since been acknowledged by the United States; as in the treaty with the Menomonees of September 3, 1836; in the treaty with the Stockbridges and Munsees of September 3, 1839; in the treaty with the New York Indians concluded at Buffalo Creek January 15, 1838; and in the treaty with the Tonawanda band of Senecas of November 5, 1857.

VI.

From the preceding findings it appears as a fact that prior to February, 1831, the claimants, with the approbation of the President, had purchased from the Menomonee and Winnebago Indians certain lands near Green Bay, in the then Territory of Wisconsin; that a question had arisen as to the extent of this purchase, which was finally settled by treaty between the Monomonees and the United States in February, 1831 (ratified in 1832), which treaty contained a provision securing to claimants, in consideration of $20,000, 500,000 acres of land at Green Bay (in addition to the townships set apart for the Stockbridge, Munsee, and Brothertown tribes), on condition that they should remove to the same within three years or such reasonable time as the President of the United States should prescribe.

VII.

In January, 1838, the claimants had not all removed to the lands in Wisconsin, but had been prevented from doing so by reasons accepted as sufficient by the President of the United States.

VIII.

Prior to the month of January, 1838, the claimants applied to the President of the United States to take their Green Bay lands and provide them a new home in the Indian Territory. Pursuing the Government policy in removing the Indians to the west of the Mississippi, the President acted upon the application of the Indians by making with them the treaty (known as the treaty of Buffalo Creek) of January 15, 1838.

IX.

The treaty of Buffalo Creek provided, in consideration of the premises recited in the foregoing three findings and of the covenants contained in the treaty itself to be performed by the United States, that the claimants cede and relinquish to the United States all their right, title, and interest in and to their Green Bay lands (excepting a small reservation), and in consideration of this cession and relinquishment the United States, in and by the treaty, agree and guarantee as follows:

First, to set apart as a permanent home for all of the claimants having no permanent homes a certain tract of country west of the Mississippi River, described by metes and bounds and to include 1,824,000 acres of land; to have and to hold the same in fee simple to the said tribes or nations of Indians by patent from the President of the United States, in conformity to the provisions of section 3 of the act of Congress of May 28, 1830, entitled "An act to provide for an exchange of lands with the Indians residing in any of the States or Territories, and for their removal west of the Mississippi;" the same to be divided among the different tribes, nations, or bands in severalty; it being understood that the said country was intended as a future home for the following tribes: The Senecas, Onondagas, Cayugas, Tuscaroras, Oneidas, St. Regis, Stockbridges, Munsees, and Brothertowns, and was to be divided equally among them according to the number of individuals in each tribe, as set forth in a schedule annexed to the treaty and designated as Schedule A, on condition that such of the claimants as should not accept and agree to remove to the country set apart for them within five years, or such other time as the President might from time to time appoint, should forfeit to the United States all interest in the lands so set apart. The following is the Schedule A:

Census of the New York Indians as taken in 1837.

Number residing on the Seneca reservations:

Senecas	2,309
Onondagas	194
Cayugas	130
Onondagas at Onondaga	300
Tuscaroras	273
St. Regis in New York	350
Oneidas at Green Bay	600
Oneidas in New York	620
Stockbridges	217
Munsees	132
Brothertowns	360

Second. The United States agreed to protect and defend the claimants in the peaceable possession and enjoyment of their new homes, and to secure their right to establish their own government, subject to the legislation of Congress respecting trade and intercourse with the Indians.

Third. The United States agreed that the lands secured to the claimants by the treaty should never be included in any State or Territory of the Union.

Fourth. The United States agreed to pay to the several tribes and nations of the claimants hereinafter mentioned, on their removal west, the following sums, respectively, namely: To the St. Regis tribe, $5,000; to the Seneca Nation, the income, annually, of $100,000 (being part of the money due said nation for lands sold by them in New York, and which sum they authorized to be paid to the United States); to the Cayugas, $2,500 cash and the annual income of $2,500; to the Onondagas, $2,000 cash and the annual income of $2,500; to the Oneidas, $6,000 cash, and to the Tuscaroras, $3,000.

Fifth. The United States agreed to appropriate the sum of $400,000, to be applied from time to time by the President of the United States for the following purposes, namely: To aid the claimants in removing to their new homes and supporting themselves the first year after their removal; to encourage and assist them in being taught to cultivate their lands; to aid them in erecting mills and other necessary houses; to aid them in purchasing domestic animals and farming utensils, and in acquiring a knowledge of the mechanic arts. It does not appear that application was made by the tribes or bands or any of them to the Government for removal to the Kansas lands except as appears in Finding XV below. Article 3 of this treaty of Buffalo Creek provides that such of the tribes of the New York Indians as did not accept and agree to remove to the country set apart for their new homes within five years, or such other time as the President might appoint, should forfeit to the United States all interest in the lands so set apart. By supplemental article the St. Regis Indians assented to the treaty with this stipulation, viz:

And it is further agreed that any of the St. Regis Indians who wish to do so shall be at liberty to remove to the "said country at any time hereafter within the time specified in this treaty, but the Government shall not compel them to remove."

The treaty of January 15, 1838, as amended by the Senate June 11, 1838, was assented to September 28, 1838, by the Seneca tribe of New York Indians; August 9, 1838, by the chiefs of the Oneida tribe; August 14, 1838, by the Tuscarora Nation residing in New York; August 30, 1838, by Cayuga Indians residing in New York; October 9, 1838, by the St. Regis Indians residing in New York; August 31, 1838, by the Onondaga tribe of Indians on the Seneca reservations in the State of New York.

There is no evidence before the court that the Onondagas at Onondaga (200), Oneidas at Green Bay (600), Stockbridges (217), Munsees (132), Brothertowns (360), ever assented to the treaty as amended by the Senate June 11, 1838.

X.

In the year 1838, at the time of the making of the treaty of Buffalo Creek, the Six Nations of New York Indians, designated by that name in the treaty, consisted of six separate nations or tribes known and named as the Senecas, the Onondagas, the Oneidas, the Cayugas, the Tuscaroras, and the St. Regis; and each of said nations or tribes, except the Cayugas, owned and possessed a reservation of land in the State of New York on which the members of said tribes resided, and the right to occupancy to which was secured to them by treaty stipulations. The Cayuga Indians had no separate reservation of their own in the State of New York, but made their home with and resided upon the reservation and lands possessed by the Seneca Nation with the consent of the latter.

XI.

The lands occupied by the Seneca Nation in the State of New York, as set forth in the last preceding finding, consisted of four separate and distinct reservations, namely:

The Buffalo Creek Reservation, in Erie County, containing 49,920 acres; the Cattaraugus Creek Reservation, containing 21,680 acres; the Alleghany Reservation, containing 30,469 acres, and the Tonawanda Reservation, in Genesee County, containing 12,800 acres. The lands occupied by the Tuscarora Indians were situated in Niagara County, N. Y., and comprised 6,249 acres. The lands occupied by the Onondaga tribe were situated in Onondaga County, N. Y., and comprised 7,300 acres. The lands occupied by the Oneida tribe were situated in Oneida and Madison Counties, N. Y., and comprised 400 acres. The reservation and lands occupied by the St. Regis tribe were situated in Franklin County, N. Y., and comprised about 14,000 acres.

XII.

For many years prior to the making of the treaty of Buffalo Creek, in 1838, the said several nations or tribes of Indians had improved and cultivated their lands on which they resided, and form the products of which they chiefly sustained themselves.

XIII.

At the time of the making of the treaty of Buffalo Creek, in 1838, one Thomas L. Ogden and one Joseph Fellows, both residents of the State of New York, claimed to be the assignees of the State of Massachusetts and owners of the preëmptive right of purchase from the Seneca Nation of the several reservations of land occupied by them as above set forth, which preëmptive right had been secured to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts by a convention of the States of New York and Massachusetts, held on the 6th day of December, 1786. The claims of the said Ogden and Fellows were recognized and provided for in the said treaty of Buffalo Creek and the treaty supplementary thereto, which was entered into between the United States and the said Six Nations on the 20th day of May, 1842. After the ratification of said treaty of 1843, which was proclaimed on the 26th day of August in that year, the Seneca Nations surrendered to said Ogden and Fellows the possession of the Buffalo Creek Reservation aforesaid, and the said nation has since continued to occupy the Cattaraugus and Allegheny Reservations mentioned in said treaties of 1838 and 1842.

XIV.

The President of the United States never prescribed any time for the removal of the claimants or any of them to the lands or any of them set apart by the treaty of Buffalo Creek.

XV.

No provision of any kind was ever made for the actual removal of more than about two hundred and sixty individuals of the claimant tribes, as contemplated by the treaty of Buffalo Creek, and of this number only thirty-two ever received patents or certificates of allotment of any of the lands mentioned in the first article of the treaty, and the amount allotted to those thirty-two was at the rate of 320 acres each, or 10,240 acres in all.

In 1845 Abram Hogeboom represented to the Government of the United States that a number of the New York Indians, parties to the treaty of 1838, desired to remove to the Kansas lands, and upon such representation and in conformity with such desire said Hogeboom was appointed special agent of the Government to remove the said Indians to Kansas.

The sum of $9,464.08 of amount appropriated by Congress was expended in the removal of a party of New York Indians under his direction in 1846.

From Hogeboom's muster roll in the Indian Office it appears that 271 were mustered for emigration. The roll shows that of this number 73 did not leave New York with the party; the number, thus reduced to 191, arrived in Kansas June 15, 1846; 17 other Indians arrived subsequently; 62 died, and 17 returned to New York.

It does not appear that any of the 32 Indians to whom allotments were made settled permanently in Kansas.

XVI.

The United States, after the conclusion of the treaty of Buffalo Creek, surveyed and made part of the public domain the lands at Green Bay ceded by the claimants, and sold or otherwise disposed of and conveyed the same and received the consideration therefor.

XVII.

The lands west of the Mississippi secured to the claimants by the treaty o, Buffalo Creek were afterwards surveyed and made part of the public domainf and were sold or otherwise disposed of by the United States, which received the entire consideration therefor; and the said lands thereafter were and now are included within the territorial limits of the State of Kansas. The price realized by the United States for such of the said lands as were sold was at the rate of $1.34 per acre, while the cost of surveying, etc., the same was at the rate of about 12 cents per acre, making the net price realized by the United States about $1.22 per acre.

XVIII.

By the treaty with the Tonawanda Band of Senecas, numbering 650 individuals, the United States, November 5, 1857, in consideration of the release by the said band of its claims upon the United States to the lands west of the State of Missouri, all right and claim to be removed thither and for support and assistance after removal and all other claims against the United States under the treaties of 1838 and 1842 (reserving their rights to moneys paid or payable by Ogden & Fellows), agreed to pay and invest, and did pay and invest for said band the sum of $256,000. This amounted in substance to compensating the beneficiaries of the treaty of 1838 at the rate of $1 per acre for their claims to lands in Kansas, under said treaty, and also their proportionate share of the $400,000 provided to be appropriated in that treaty.

XIX.

After March 21, 1859, an order of the Secretary of the Interior was made which directed that the tract of land in Kansas Territory known as the New York Indian Reserve should be surveyed with a view of allotting a half section each to such of the New York Indians as had removed there under treaty provisions, after which the residue was to become public domain. After this and before the proclamation of the President of said lands as part of the public domain (December 3 and 17, 1860), the New York Indians employed counsel to protect and prosecute their claims in the premises, asserting in the powers of attorney that the United States had seized upon the said lands contrary to the obligations of said treaty, and would not permit the said Indians to occupy the same or make any disposition thereof; the said Indians have steadily since asserted their said claims.

XX.

Of the sum of $400,000 agreed by the treaty of Buffalo Creek to be appropriated by the United States for the purposes mentioned in the ninth finding above, only the sum of $20,477.50 was so appropriated (except as hereinafter stated). Of this sum only $9,464.08 was actually expended. This sum was expended for the removal, more than five years after the ratification of the treaty, of some of the 260 individuals mentioned in the fifteenth finding above; but in addition to said sum of $9,464.08 there was paid for the Tonawanda band of Senecas $256,000, as mentioned in the eighteenth finding above.

XXI.

The records of the Indian Office do not show that the President ever prescribed any time for the removal of the New York Indians to Wisconsin under the treaties of February 8, 1831, and October 27, 1832, or that the President prescribed any time for the removal of the New York Indians from Wisconsin and New York to the Kansas lands under the treaty of Buffalo Creek (January 15, 1838), or that the Government took any steps to defend those Indians who did remove to Kansas "in the peaceable possession of their new homes."

XXII.

The account under the treaty of Buffalo Creek may thus be stated (omitting all questions of law and as to interest and without deciding that the United States are or are not responsible for any portion thereof):

Credit the tribes with—

1,824,000 acres of land in Kansas, at $1 per acre	$1,824,000.00

Amount named in articles 9 to 14, both inclusive, of the treaty of Buffalo Creek (except the $100,000 for the Seneca Nation, which has been taken into the account in other dealings between the United States and that nation respecting the claims of Ogden and Fellows)	$23,000.00
Amount named in article 15 of the treaty	400,000.00
	2,247,000.00
Debit the tribes with—
Amount expended in removing the portion of the 206 individuals mentioned in finding 15	9,464.08
10,240 acres allotted to the 32 individuals mentioned in finding 15, at $1 per acre	10,240.00
Amount invested for Tonawanda band	256,000.00
	275,704.08
Balance	1,971,295.92

[SEAL.]
JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk, Court of Claims.

It will be observed that this finding was made under the so-called "Bowman act," and deals only with facts. Upon the facts as found questions of law arise as to whether the United States is liable for a money payment to the claimants; and, if so, the amount thereof. These questions, in the opinion of the committee, should be determined by a court where they can all be carefully considered and decided. The committee therefore recommends the passage of the accompanying bill conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the case.

The claimants demand interest on the value of their lands in Kansas, which were set apart for them with a view of their removal thereto, from 1843, or certainly from the year 1860, when the United States proclaimed the Kansas lands open to settlement. But in the judgment of the committee this case is not one in which interest should be allowed against the Government.

The bill is therefore so drawn as to exclude the payment of interest upon any sum that may be found due by the Court of Claims.

Mr. LIVINGSTON (before the reading of the report was concluded). Mr. Chairman, I ask that the further reading of this report be dispensed with.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; this is the first time this bill has ever been before the House.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. As I understand, nobody is listening to the report; and we can not hear the reading at any rate.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] object to dispensing with the reading of the report?

Mr. HOLMAN. This is a measure involving the sum of $1,971,295.92, and it is the first time the subject has been before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object to dispensing with the further reading?

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist on the reading of the report.

The Clerk resumed the reading.

Mr. PEEL (before the reading was concluded). Mr. Chairman, as this lengthy report is not necessary to give the House information as to the nature of this measure, I ask that the further reading be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the report ought to be read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report.

Mr. PEEL. This long report, when it is all simmered down, amounts to nothing more than a proposition to re-refer this question to the Court of Claims, to which it has already been once referred, for a simple ascertainment of the facts. As the report discloses, the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, who reported the bill which has been submitted as a substitute, came to the conclusion that the claim ought to go back to the Court of Claims and that there should be conferred upon the court jurisdiction to determine not only the facts but the value of the land belonging to these Indians which the Government has appropriated, and with a right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, which is certainly a court competent to deal justly between the Government and the Indians. That is all there is in the proposition.

Mr. BROSIUS. Will the gentleman from Arkansas yield to me a moment?

Mr. PEEL. How long?

Mr. BROSIUS. For a couple of minutes.

Mr PEEL. I yield to the gentleman for that time.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Chairman, I desire only to direct the attention of the House to the action of the Religious Society of Friends in the States of Ohio, Illinois, and Maryland in reference to this measure. We are all aware that this religious society has for a great many years had a deep interest in the welfare of the Indians, and that great weight attaches to their views upon a subject of this kind. I have before me papers embodying the action of the Society of Friends in the three States I have named, and I desire to submit these papers for the information of the House:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

We, the undersigned members of the executive committee on Indian affairs of Baltimore Yearly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends, respectfully represent that for many years we had intimate relations with the New York Indians and were instrumental in securing for them some of the educational advantages they enjoy, and were deeply concerned for their advancement in civilization and enlightenment.

We call attention to the claim favorably reported on by the United States Court of Claims now pending in Congress and embraced in House bill No. 5679, and are satisfied that it is a just debt owed by the Government to these Indians.

We hereby respectfully and earnestly petition your honorable bodies to take prompt and favorable action on said claim and beg leave to state that we believe a further postponement of the debt would be an act of the greatest injustice to these Indians.

JOSEPH J. JANNEY.
EDWD. STABLER, JR.
MARTHA S. TOWNSEND.
MARY C. BLACKBURN.

To the United States House of Representatives:

The undersigned, members of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Yearly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends of Illinois, do hereby ask your honorable body to take such action at an early date upon the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the New York Indians against the United States Government as expressed in Senate Mis. Doc., No. 46 (Fifty-second Congress), January 18, 1892, to the end that these innocent and helpless people may be paid the amount of their just claim, as found in the opinion of said Court of Claims.

We believe the claim to be a valid and legitimate one, or we would not thus invoke your favorable action upon it.

We are, with great respect,

Joshua S. Mills, chairman, Mount Palatine, Ill.; Isaiah Lightner, Matson, Platte County, Nebr.; Sarah E. Cooper, Winfield, Iowa; Chalkly John, Penrose, Ill.; Jonathan W. Plummer, chairman of general committee on philanthropic work, Chicago, Ill.

To the United States House of Representatives:

Referring to Senate bill Fifty-second Congress, first session (Miscellaneous Document No. 46), entitled "Findings filed by the Court of Claims in the case of the New York Indians vs. the United States," we, members of the standing committee on the Indian Concern of Yearly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends, of Ohio, do hereby pray that your honorable body will take early and favorable action upon this long pending, and as we believe, just claim, to the end that these Indians may obtain that which has been so long withheld from them.

Signed on behalf of the Indian committee of Ohio, Yearly Meeting, Secondmonth, 22, 1892.

SAMUEL S. TOMLINSON.
AMY G. WALKER.

Mr. Chairman, the people who have adopted the action to which I have thus called attention, rarely arrive at any conclusion without careful and mature consideration. I hope, therefore, that this measure will pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL].

Mr. DINGLEY. Has general debate closed?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PEEL. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not take up all our time. How much does he want?

Mr. HOLMAN. Not much. I am going to submit a motion.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, can any amendment be pending until general debate has been closed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] has offered a substitute.

Mr. DINGLEY. But we have not yet closed the general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute is pending, however.

Mr. PEEL. I want to reach some agreement in regard to the time to be occupied in debate; for I hope it is not the intention of the gentleman from Indiana to occupy the whole time without coming to a vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; that is not the purpose; you have another hour. This measure now comes before Congress for the first time for consideration. It has, I observe, been considered once by a committee of Congress, for there is a report made in the Forty-seventh Congress; but the measure involves, as I have said, the sum of $1,971,295.92.

Mr. PEEL. I have not yielded the floor; I would like to come to some agreement.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to state the reason why there should be allowed a reasonable time for debate on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOLMAN. I concede that the gentleman from Arkansas is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PEEL. I hope we may come to some agreement about the time to be occupied.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will state the reason why I think a reasonable debate should be allowed.

Mr. PEEL. How much does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. HOLMAN. A couple of hours.

Mr. PEEL. Why, Mr. Chairman, if "a couple of hours" are to be allowed for debate, we may as well give up the bill at once. The gentleman knows that we have no time in the morning hour to discuss this matter for two hours. The bill is nothing in the world but a proposition to refer the case to the Court of Claims with a right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know; but the reading of the report shows what that means.

Mr. PEEL. The gentleman from Indiana proposes simply not to allow the Indians a day in court.

Mr. HOLMAN. By no means. I do not want to do them an injustice or to do an injustice to anybody. If the gentleman thinks he can not allow two hours for the discussion, then let me suggest a half an hour.

Mr. PEEL. But the hour allowed us to-day will have been exhausted by that time.

Mr. HOLMAN. You have another hour to-morrow.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Can you not get unanimous consent to extend the time? This seems to be a very important matter.

Mr. PEEL. The day is already devoted to another committee after this hour expires.

Mr. HOLMAN. But my friend will see that the Government ought not to pass such a measure without more consideration than is proposed to be given here, especially a measure which originated fifty-four years ago, and involves so large a sum.

Mr. PEEL. But we propose to refer this to a court. Now, I think it would be quite competent for the court to hear and determine the rights of the parties. What we say here would not have very much weight with the court anyhow. They would be governed entirely by the evidence in the case and the law.

I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not insist upon that length of time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think a half hour is an exceedingly moderate time.

Mr. PEEL. I must say frankly, while I do not want to impugn any member's motives on this floor, still this demand will defeat the consideration of this bill and prevent an act of justice to these people. Here is a bill simply proposing to refer a claim reported upon by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and take the Senate report, and refer the whole matter to the courts; and if there is a gentleman here who is not willing that any citizen, let alone a dependent Indian of this country who is the ward of the nation, may go into the courts of this country and obtain justice, who is not willing to allow a claim pending of such importance as this to be adjudicated by our own courts, then we had just as well tell the Indians that they have no rights anyway, and it does not make any difference what their claims may be, we will not respect them.

Mr. HOLMAN. But my friend entirely misapprehends the matter. He proposes by this bill to suspend the statute of limitations, a very important matter of defense after fifty-four years.

Mr. PEEL. I suppose, because the Government got the Indians off the land and have held it for fifty years, they are in a position to plead the statute of limitations against the Indians. But let me state to the gentleman from Indiana that the bill restricts the court to the principle that no interest shall be allowed; so the matter of time will not affect the question of controversy at all.

I move that the committee rise and report the bill back to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question would be on the adoption of the substitute after the general debate is exhausted.

Mr. PEEL. Then I move the adoption of the substitute.

Mr. DINGLEY. But general debate has not been closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The matter is still open for debate.

Mr. PEEL. I ask a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. When a vote is taken, it will be on the motion to amend first.

Mr. PEEL. I think we had better take a vote on the adoption of the substitute, and let the debate proceed upon that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would prefer not, because I wish to move to amend the substitute.

Mr. PEEL. You can not do that until it is adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, yes; the substitute must be first perfected before it is adopted.

Mr. DINGLEY. You can not substitute a Senate bill except by unanimous consent. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this is a Senate bill which is proposed to be substituted here.

Mr. HOLMAN. The motion to amend the substitute would be first in order, of course, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so held.

Mr. PEEL. With a view of facilitating this matter, I ask the gentleman from Indiana if he will not accept ten minutes?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not expect to occupy more than five minutes myself, but I think——

Mr. PEEL. I yield to the gentleman ten minutes. He says he only wants five.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to treat my friend with entire fairness, and know that he always wants to act fairly; but he brings up here in the morning hour a measure which has never been considered before, 54 years of age, involving a claim of nearly $2,000,000, and for the first time—no, not for the first time, for a week ago I had my attention called to the matter—I have had an opportunity of examining it briefly in the limited time since it has been called up; and now for the first time I have the report before me, which I have been trying to understand while it was being read by the Clerk. I do not think a measure of such antiquity, involving such an amount, concerning the dealings between the Government and the Indians, should be pressed through on the spur of the moment; and I ask my friend now why should not the statute of limitations apply in this case?

I move, because I wish to give my friend all the time he wants, to strike out that portion of the Senate bill to suspend the statute of limitations. I have not the bill before me, could not get a copy, and have been informed that the supply is exhausted.

Mr. PEEL. For the information of the committee I would suggest that the bill be reported again.

Mr. HOLMAN. I only wish to strike out that portion of the Senate bill which suspends the statute of limitations.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, to strike it out of the proposed substitute?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before that is done I want to call attention to the parliamentary situation. Here is a bill being considered in the Committee of the Whole. Now, a proposition has been made to amend the House bill by substituting a Senate bill. That is only admissible by unanimous consent.

Mr. PEEL. But this bill has not passed the Senate. It is simply a bill which has been introduced in the Senate.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understood it was a bill that had passed the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition of the gentleman from Indiana, as the Chair understands, is to amend the substitute?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes.

Mr. PEEL. This bill has not passed the Senate, but has only been reported there.

Mr. HOLMAN. But still, if it had passed the Senate, the gentleman might take the language of the Senate bill and introduce it as a substitute.

Mr. DINGLEY. I suppose from the language the gentleman used that the bill had passed the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. This is a bill which has simply been introduced in the Senate, and it is now offered as a substitute in the committee. The motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is to amend the substitute. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I desire to ask one question, to see whether we understand each other on this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will please state his proposed amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not a copy of the bill before me, so I can not indicate the line, but I wish to strike out the portion of the bill near the close of the section which suspends the statute of limitations.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman proposes to strike out the words "the statute of limitations shall not be pleaded as a bar to recovery in this case."

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes. Now I will yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LOCKWOOD].

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I do not care to ask the question now. I see the point the gentleman makes.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is an ancient claim and none of us have had an opportunity to examine it, except the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I say to the House that while I pay some attention to current events, I never knew of this claim until about a week or ten days ago. Whatever action has been taken has been taken in the Senate.

Mr. PEEL. I only desire to say in reply to the gentleman's amendment, that the House must not forget that this is a case pending between the Government of the United States and its wards.

Mr. HOLMAN. The wards have the upper hand generally.

Mr. PEEL. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that after withholding adjudication of a claim from these wards of the Government by our own power and might, for the trustee now to come in and try to defeat them by pleading the statute of limitations would certainly not do the country very much credit. The fact, as found by the Court of Claims, which once passed upon this question, is that the Government appropriated a large tract of land in Kansas that was given to these Indians in exchange for their lands which they had in Wisconsin. The Government has used both tracts of land and has never paid them a cent. After keeping them out this long, the Court of Claims once having found the fact to be as stated, to now interpose the plea of the statute of limitations would be equivalent to taking their property by force of might. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend must bear in mind that there is a great deal of question as to whether the Indians complied with the terms of the treaty.

Mr. PEEL. That would be a question for the court to determine.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, the court has virtually determined the question. Nobody can be deceived as to the real purport of this bill. If my friend suspends the statute of limitations, it simply means the taking from the Treasury of $1,971,295.92, and I am not prepared to vote for an appropriation of that amount of money without at least some time for a little more consideration. My friend has no other measure of this magnitude before his committee, and he has another hour. I think my friend can very well afford to let this matter go over.

Mr. PEEL. The gentleman may know more about my committee work than I do myself.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to say that the effect of what the Government has always alleged to be the violation of the treaty touching the removal of these Indians west of Wisconsin——

Mr. PEEL. I will say for the information of my friend that the Supreme Court has passed on that question, and if he will read the report he will find that they have decided that these Indians did not bind themselves to remove in five years, but bound themselves to accept the terms of the treaty, and they did accept.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend means to hold that it simply bound them to agree to removal?

Mr. PEEL. That they would agree to remove, and they did agree.

Mr. HOLMAN. But that certainly does not come up to the spirit of the treaty.

Mr. PEEL. The Supreme Court say so.

Mr. HOLMAN. For my part, I am not prepared, on this hasty consideration, to vote for the payment of $2,000,000 out of the public Treasury.

Mr. PEEL. I will say to my friend that if we wait until he is ready to pay this bill, we might just as well burn the bill up and never bring it before the House for consideration again. I hope we will have a vote upon the amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us have the amendment reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend lines 19 and 20 by striking out the words "The statute of limitations shall not be pleaded as a bar to recovery in said case."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 21.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the substitute as amended.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PEEL. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 26.

Mr. BENTLEY. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENTLEY] makes the point that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENTLEY].

After some time spent in the count,

The CHAIRMAN said: The morning hour has expired, and the committee will rise.

Mr. PEEL. I suppose the gentleman is perfectly satisfied now.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RICHARDSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 5679 and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. Res. 170) to pay the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1892, on the 21st day of said month.

It also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 6644) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the sale of title of the United States in lot 3 in square south of square 990," approved March 3, 1891; and

A bill (H. R. 8907) to increase the pension of John Malloy.

It also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3188) to extend to Duluth, Minn., the privileges of the first section of an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1888.

It also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 8760) to provide for the sale of navy-yard lands in the city of Brooklyn.

It also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. R. 123) to fill vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

It also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, covering the operations of the Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, be printed, and that there be printed 8,000 extra copies, of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, the illustrations to be obtained by the Public Printer under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. OHLIGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 170) to pay the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1892, on the 21st day of said month; when the Speaker signed the same.

BUSINESS OF THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Tuesday, the 20th instant, beginning after the second morning hour, be set apart for the consideration of such business as may be called up by the Committee on the Public Lands.

SWAMP-LAND GRANTS.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9072) to finally adjust and settle the claims of Arkansas and other States under the swamp-land grants, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MCRAE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. RICHARDSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole to consider the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall not object to that if a reasonable time be allowed for general debate.

Mr. ANTONY. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made by the gentleman from Texas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That when the State of Arkansas shall relinquish, release, and quitclaim to the United States all her claims and demands against the United States for the 5 per cent fund allowances under the act approved June 23, 1836, for keeping prisoners under the executive order of February 5, 1867, for a portion of the distribution fund under the act approved September 4, 1841, for indemnity under the acts approved March 2, 1855, March 3, 1857, or this act, and for all swamp and overflowed lands under the act approved September 28, 1850, not approved to the State, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, in consideration of said relinquishment, release, and quitclaim of said claims, demands, and lands, require the Treasurer of the United States to cancel and deliver to the governor of the said State of Arkansas all the bonds and coupons issued by the said State now in the possession of the said Treasurer and owned or held in trust by the United States, as a full and final compromise and settlement of accounts between the said State and United States.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the proper officers of the Departments of the Interior and of the Treasury, as soon as practicable, to adjust and settle the claims of the other States against the United States for all lands which have been, or may hereafter be, sold or otherwise disposed of that were included in any grant of swamp and overflowed lands to such States.

SEC. 3. That for all of said lands in any State which were sold for cash the said State shall have credit for the full amount of the purchase money received by the United States, and the same shall be paid over to the governor or treasurer of said State; and for all of said lands in any State otherwise disposed of, and for which indemnity has not heretofore been allowed, such State shall have indemnity in cash, the amount thereof to be limited to the price at which the lands were held at the date of their disposal by the United States, the said indemnity to be paid as herein provided in the cases where lands were sold for cash: Provided, however, That under no circumstances shall more than $2,000,000 be paid under the provisions of this act for lands sold or otherwise disposed of since March 3, 1857.

SEC. 4. That as soon as practicable after the expiration of the time limited by this act for the filing of claims thereunder, the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall ascertain and determine by States the amount of cash indemnity due for lands actually swamp and overflowed within the meaning of the swamp-land grant and disposed of since March 3, 1857, and shall allot the $2,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, among the several swamp-land States, pro rata, according to the area of land found to be swamp or overflowed and disposed of since said date: Provided, That the cost of examining and adjusting tracts claimed, but found not to be swamp or overflowed lands, shall be taxed to the State or county presenting the fraudulent or erroneous claim.

SEC. 5. That the agent appointed by the Department of the Interior to investigate claims under this and prior acts shall have the power to administer oaths and to compel the attendance of witnesses both on behalf of the State and of the United States, and witnesses swearing falsely before them shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall, on conviction, be punished as now prescribed by law.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Interior, shall, when adjustments and allowance are made by him under this act, report the same to the Secretary of the Treasury, showing the amount ascertained to be due from the United States to such State on account of lands sold or otherwise disposed of, and a description of the lands for which such indemnity is allowed, with the names of the persons to whom sold or patented, and the date the same was sold or patented; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the amount or amounts so allowed, and reported by the Secretary of Interior, over to the governor or treasurer of the State.

SEC. 7. That the acceptance by any State, or its legal representative, of indemnity for any of the lands sold or located shall be deemed a relinquishment and waiver of all its right, title, and interest in and to such lands in place, and an acknowledgment and confirmation of the title thereto in the grantees of the United States.

SEC. 8. That all claims for land, or other indemnity, under the swamp-land laws or under this act, shall be forever barred, unless presented to the Secretary of the Interior within one year from the passage of this act, or within one year after the survey of the township has been completed.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Public Lands were read, as follows:

Amendments to section 1: Strike out the word "or," in line 13, and insert "and under." Insert between the words "not" and "approved," in line 15, the word "heretofore." Insert between the words "State" and "the," in line 15, the following: "and all other claims of whatever kind or nature."

Amendment to section 2: Insert between the words "of" and "the," in line 3, the words "each of."

Amendments to section 3: Strike out the words "governor or treasurer," in line 4, and insert "proper officer." Insert between the words "States" and "the," in line 9, the following: "but not to exceed $1.25 per acre."

Amendments to section 4: Strike out the following words in lines 9, 10, and 11, "according to the area of land found to be swamp or overflowed and disposed of since said date." Strike out the words "the State or county" in lines 13 and 14, and insert "and be paid by the State, parish, county, district, or individual."

Amendment to section 5: Strike out the words "to compel the attendance" in lines 3 and 4, and insert the words "take affidavits."

Amendment to section 6: Strike out the words "governor or treasurer" in lines 10 and 11, and insert the words "proper officer."

Amendments to section 7: Strike out the words "or its legal," in line 1, and insert "through its Legislature or its authorized." Strike out the word "located," in line 2, and insert the words "otherwise disposed of by the United States therein."

Amendment to section 8: Strike out the words "survey of the township has been completed," in the last line, and add the following: "filing in the proper local land office of a copy of the officially approved township plat of the survey of the township in which said lands may be situated."

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the adoption of these amendments by unanimous consent.

Mr. DINGLEY. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the amendments can not be considered at all until after general debate shall have closed and when the bill is read for amendment. The bill has just been read the first time.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is open for amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. Not until general debate has been closed in Committee of the Whole. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the House is in Committee of the Whole for general debate, and that after general debate shall have closed then it will be in order to move to amend the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the question, and then the bill will be open for debate.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Chairman, I asked a moment ago that these amendments, reported by the committee, to which there appears to be no objection, be adopted by unanimous consent before general debate is had. No one has any objection to debate.

Mr. DINGLEY. With the understanding that it shall not restrict in any way the right to general debate, I shall not object.

Mr. MCRAE. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to state the request for unanimous consent. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that these amendments be adopted before general debate is entered upon?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think there is any objection to that. The amendments do not materially change the bill, I believe.

Mr. MCRAE. They do not.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in the beginning of this debate that I shall not spend any time in discussing the wisdom of the swamp-land grants. They were made forty-two years ago, before I was born. It is immaterial in this discussion whether they were wise or unwise. I will not question the motives of those who suggested them. As first introduced the grant of 1850 was intended for Arkansas alone, but it was made of general application upon the motion of that illustrious son of Illinois, Hon. Stephen A. Douglas. He and others of his day believed it a proper thing to do at that time. In the light of the experience that my own State has had with the Department in adjusting the grant, I am compelled, however to confess that it has been of no permanent value to her. The efforts to reclaim the lands have cost Arkansas more than she has ever realized from them. The grant has been a fruitful source of troublesome litigation and annoyance to many of our citizens. It has confused the accounts between the United States and the State. It still beclouds the title to the homes of thousands of our best citizens.

As a new proposition I do not hesitate to say that I would not vote for the grant to Arkansas. I regret with all my heart that the act of September 28, 1850, was ever passed, but that is no reason why we should refuse to adjust the claims made under it.

That frauds have been committed under these grants I will not attempt here to deny. If, however, such have been committed, this Congress is not responsible for them. That other like frauds will follow indefinitely, unless there is some new legislation, all who are familiar with the history of these grants will admit. A failure to pass some legislation will make us responsible for future frauds, and not relieve against those of the past.

The purpose and effect of this measure is to adjust old grants, not to make a new one; to prevent fraud, not to promote it.

In preparing the bill as now presented I have adopted substantially the suggestions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office: (1) as to the limitation upon the amount to be paid; (2) as to the time for filing other claims, and (3) giving the Department power to tax costs for examining and passing upon fraudulent claims that may be presented. I stand ready to adopt any other reasonable suggestions from any source whatever that looks to an adjustment with the States with proper protection to the purchaser and settlers.

While this bill has some of the provisions of those heretofore presented and discussed, in many respects it is different from any of them. The objectionable features of previous bills upon this subject have been eliminated from this one, while other new provisions for the protection of the Government have been added. Confident that the bill as now presented is just to all concerned, and believing that every provision of it can be defended, I invite a careful examination of it. But I insist that those who oppose it should discuss it fairly, and not undertake, as some have done on previous occasions, to prejudice it by denouncing the original grants. I beg gentlemen to suggest amendments to prevent frauds in the future, rather than animadvert against those of the past, over which they have no control.

If the bill is defective, let us perfect it so as to end all the troubles that have accumulated and are still accumulating on account of the conflicts growing out of the grants in question. I will now, Mr. Chairman, briefly explain the object, scope, and effect of the act of September 28, 1850.

The object of Congress was to enable the States to which the grant was made to construct levees and drains to reclaim the swamp lands which were then generally supposed to be worthless and productive of nothing except malarial diseases, but of extraordinary fertility when reclaimed.

Many of them have been reclaimed and are now blooming fields of the richest corn and cotton lands in the world—happy homes of contented and prosperous people. The grant carried the immediate transfer of title to the whole of the swamp and overflowed lands unsold at that time. The words are, "shall be and are hereby granted," and granted a present interest that can never be defeated by the failure of the Secretary of the Interior to make the list required. This failure on his part to segregate the land from the public domain, however, has made many embarrassments which will grow worse with time.

Mr. Stuart, then Secretary of the Interior, held the act to be a grant "in præsenti" in a decision as early as December 23, 1851. He said:

As the grants are regarded as vesting the inchoate title in the States, it follows that any subsequent sale or location of swamp or overflowed lands must be held to be illegal and the purchase money refunded, or a change of location ordered.

Attorney-General Black, in construing this act later, said:

It is not necessary that the patent should issue before the title vests in the State under the act of 1850. The act of Congress was itself a present grant, wanting nothing but a definition of boundaries to make it perfect, and to attain that object the Secretary of the Interior was directed to make out an accurate list and plat of the lands and cause a patent to be issued therefor. But when a party is authorized to demand a patent for land his title is vested as much as if he had the patent itself, which is but evidence of his title. (9 Opinions Attorneys-General, 251.)

Such has been the rule of construction in the Interior Department under all administrations for forty years. The State and Federal judiciary, without exception so far as I know, have sustained this view. It has become a rule of property in all the swamp-land States.

In Wright vs. Roseberry (12 U. S., 488), the Supreme Court, in reviewing a long line of decisions, say:

The result of these decisions is, that the grant of 1850 is one in præsenti, passing the title to the lands as of its date, but requiring identification of the lands to render the title perfect; that the action of the Secretary in identifying them is conclusive against collateral attack, as the judgment of a special tribunal to which the determination of the matter is intrusted; but when that officer has neglected or failed to make the identification, it is competent for the grantees of the State, to prevent their rights from being defeated, to identify the lands in any other appropriate mode which will effect that object. A resort to such mode of identification would also seem to be permissible, where the Secretary declares his inability to certify the lands to the State for any cause other than a consideration of their character.

Acting upon this theory, the States have very generally undertaken to identify the lands and to dispose of them, and in many cases have issued patents to the purchasers. The result has been that conflicts of title have arisen between those holding under the States and those claiming title directly from the United States. Treating the law as a present unconditional grant, and recognizing that equitable principle upon which the present bill rests, Congress passed the act of March 2, 1855, by which relief was given to the purchasers and locators of swamp lands, by giving the States the purchase money for all such lands theretofore sold and dry lands of like quantity for such as had been otherwise disposed of.

Here, Mr. Chairman, is a complete legislative recognition of the State's title and an adoption of the Department construction in less than five years after the grant. The difference between that act and this bill is, that for all such lands erroneously disposed of this allows cash indemnity at not exceeding $1.25 per acre where the other gave dry land.

The act of March 3, 1857, in express terms confirmed all selections of vacant swamp lands theretofore made and reported to the General Land Office, and extended and continued in force until that time the provisions of the prior act of March 2, 1855.

So we see, Mr. Chairman, that by these subsequent acts the legislative department has approved the ruling of the executive department and the construction given the grant by the judiciary. When all the Departments agree as to the scope and effect of the grant, there ought be no trouble in us agreeing upon a method of settlement that will protect the purchasers and settlers of the United States.

Under the law as it is now, the condition of affairs may be stated as follows:

The fifteen swamp-land States to which the grant applies are entitled to all the swamp and overflowed lands situated therein, as defined in the grant, not disposed of prior to September 28, 1850, the date of the grant, with no limitation upon the time for selections. These States are entitled to the purchase money for all such swamp lands as were sold by the United States for cash from the date of the grant to March 3, 1857, the date of the last indemnity act. They are entitled to have dry lands as indemnity for all such swamp lands as were disposed of otherwise than by sale prior to March 3, 1857. But no indemnity either in land or money is now allowed for swamp lands that may have been erroneously sold or disposed of by the United States since the act of March 3, 1857.

In all such cases the contest is over the land in place, and the purchasers from the United States or settlers under the public land laws, as the case may be, must lose the land his Government sold or gave him or must buy in the title from the State or its grantee.

All the Government can do is to refund the purchase money without interest. When such purchasers or settlers are evicted, as they often are, they come to Congress for relief or accept a return of the purchase money they have paid, as was held by Secretary Stewart, which may be refunded under section 2362 of the Revised Statutes. This bill, if it becomes a law, would give the purchase money so paid to the State whose land was erroneously sold and at the same time confirm the title to the grantee of the United States, and thus end all trouble and litigation.

Let us not overlook the fact that the power and authority to determine whether the sale was an error or not is left exclusively in the Interior Department. Only such errors as are admitted by that Department are to be corrected. Can the United States ask any greater protection? Can they afford to do less to the States? But, Mr. Chairman, there are other interests besides that of the States. The entrymen and others are concerned in having a good title. This the United States Government is in honor bound to furnish, but can do so only by extinguishing the title of the State. By the terms of the bill accepting of indemnity is a relinquishment.

I come now to consider that provision of the bill which relates alone to the State of Arkansas. The debt due from the State of Arkansas as well as her claims against the United States are of long standing, and to some extent complicated and confused. In the year 1838 the State borrowed the sum of $538,000 of the Smithsonian fund and issued five hundred $1,000 bonds, redeemable October 26, 1861, and thirty-eight of such bonds redeemable January 1, 1868. These and eighty-seven $1,000 other bonds, held for the Indian fund, making in all the sum of $625,000, are now owned by the United States, having been paid by appropriations for that purpose.

The Treasurer of the United States, in addition to the said bonds owned by the United States, holds for the Secretary of the Interior, trustee of the Indian trust fund, one hundred and sixty-eight $1,000 bonds, issued December 3, 1872, redeemable January 1, 1900. All sums that have accrued to the State from all sources whatever for many years have been sequestered under section 3481, Revised Statutes, to be applied on the said bonds of the State.

The State authorities insist, and I think properly, that the sums thus retained, with what is fairly and equitably due on the unadjusted swamp-land claim of the State, will more than pay what she owes on the bonds. There has accrued to the State from time to time the sum of $264,564.55 on account of 5 per cent of the net proceeds of the sale of public lands. The State is entitled to the sum of $10,307.80 for keeping United States prisoners under the order of President Johnson dated February 5, 1867. There were two installments found due, but never paid to the State, under the distribution act of September 5, 1841; one, June 30, 1842, for the sum of $4,482.79, and the other, July 1, 1842, for $529.37, making a total of $5,012.16, also held and should be applied on the bonds of the State.

The State claims and is entitled to a large cash and land indemnity under the acts approved March 2, 1855, and March 3, 1857. Nothing has ever been allowed or credited to her on this account. The Interior Department admits that the State has a just claim for both cash and land, but the amount has never been officially determined and credited on her debt. There is no law authorizing any such credit to be entered.

The Government of the United States has sold about 200,750 acres of swamp land, the property of the State, for which it received the sum of $196,990, and has also disposed of, for land warrants, scrip, and homestead, 162,080 acres of other lands, worth, at $1.25 per acre, the sum of $202,600. The State should therefore in common fairness be credited with the sums so received, as of the years in which the sales were made, and should also be allowed $1.25 per acre for such lands as were otherwise erroneously disposed of.

The total claim on this account is $399,590. So we have an aggregate, about which there should be no question, of $679,548.51. In this there is nothing included for the 1,000,000 acres of swamp lands selected, and still pending before the Interior Department, nor for 5 per cent of the value of homesteads. A large part of these selections the State insists should have been approved to her because the field notes show them to be swamp. The United States surveyor-general certified all of them to be of the character contemplated by the act. The State also insists that as a matter of simple justice she is entitled to have and ought to be credited with 5 per cent on all public lands entered under the homestead laws and located with military bounty-land warrants and scrip, estimated at the minimum price for Government lands, $1.25 per acre.

In 1836, when the State was admitted to the Union, there was no way of disposing of public lands except by cash sale or for warrants and scrip. The homestead law was not passed until 1862, and the State, with such a contract as it made, does not think it just to her that the General Government should be allowed to adopt a policy that will have the effect to diminish the fund upon which she had a right to rely for the payment of the debt in question. She did not borrow the money until after the United States had solemnly pledged her 5 per cent of the proceeds of the public lands for making public roads and canals. She had a right to rely upon this fund to aid her in repaying the money. The greater part of all lands disposed of in Arkansas within the last thirty years have been given away by the United States under the homestead law, and nothing allowed the State for it.

Up to June 30, 1887, the aggregate of such lands taken as homesteads and with bounty warrants and scrip was 7,795,451.02 acres. The compact was changed by one party without the consent of the other.

Estimating them at the minimum price fixed by the law, the State would be entitled to the sum of $487,215.65 for such lands. This is more than has been allowed on all sales under the present rulings. I am aware that the Supreme Court, in the 5 per cent cases (110 U. S. Reports, 471), has decided that the States are not entitled to the percentage on the value of the lands disposed of by the United States in satisfaction of military land warrants; but in view of the very able dissenting opinion of the lamented Justice Miller, concurred in by Justice Field, and of the fact that the question of jurisdiction was not passed upon by the court at that time, I do not regard the question as finally settled against the State.

The question of allowing the claims for such a percentage on homesteads has never been presented to the court; and besides, the personnel of the court has very much changed since the land-warrant decisions were rendered. But whether this rule will be adhered to or not, I ask Mr. Chairman, is it right and just in a matter of sacred contract like the admission of a State into this great Union for the United States on one part to make so radical a change in the disposition of the lands as to destroy the consideration passing to the State. Against the right and objection of the State, the other party to the agreement, can the Government honestly rely upon such an unfair and illiberal construction made by its own courts. This Government, in my opinion, can afford to be not only fair, but liberal with the States in matters of contract and account like this. I believe that it will in the end be fair.

The act of June 23, 1836, for the admission of Arkansas (5 Stats., p. 58), says that in lieu of the propositions submitted to Congress by the Territorial convention, which are rejected, the following propositions are hereby offered to the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas for their free acceptance or rejection, which, if accepted, shall be obligatory upon the United States. They were formally accepted by the General Assembly. So the propositions were the result of a negotiation. It was a fair contract, entered into between parties authorized to contract. The third item of the contract is as follows:

"Third. That 5 per cent of the net proceeds of the sale of lands lying within the said State, and which shall be sold by Congress, from and after the 1st day of July next, after deducting all expenses incident to the same, shall be reserved for making public roads and canals within the said State, under the direction of the General Assembly thereof, * * * Provided, That the five foregoing propositions herein offered are on the condition that the General Assembly or Legislature of the said State, by virtue of the power conferred upon it by the convention which framed the constitution of the said State, shall provide by an ordinance, irrevocable without the consent of the United States, that the said General Assembly of said State shall never interfere with the primary disposal of the soil within the same by the United States, nor with any regulations Congress may find necessary for securing the title in such soil to the bona fide purchasers thereof; and that no tax shall be imposed on lands the property of the United States; and that in no case shall nonresident proprietors be taxed higher than residents; and that the bounty land granted, or hereafter to be granted, for military services during the late war shall, whilst they continue to be held by the patentees or their heirs, remain exempt from any tax laid by order or under authority of the State, whether for State, county, township, or any other purpose, for the term of three years from and after the date of the patents respectively."

It would appear from this that the State has the right to tax all the lands of the Government as soon as disposed of and has other rights as to the disposal, but in consideration that she would agree by an ordinance, irrevocable without the consent of the United States, not to interfere with the primary disposal, nor tax nonresidents higher than residents, nor to tax the property of the United States, nor lands granted for military services for three years after the date of the patents, either for State, county, or township purposes, there shall be paid to the State 5 per cent of the net proceeds of the sale of lands lying within the said State, and which shall be sold by Congress from and after the 1st day of July, 1836.

Land warrants were receivable for public lands at $1.25 per acre. The homestead was granted to all settlers who are qualified, upon the payment of certain fees and five years' continuous residence and cultivation upon the lands. This was a wise and proper policy for Congress, but the same necessity for public roads exists in a country settled under the homestead law as one settled under the preëmption or graduation laws. It is now admitted that this is the best disposition to make of public lands, but the State should not be cheated out of the 5 per cent of the value which she had contracted for and had a right to expect. Many of the Western States settled prior to the passage of the homestead law, or principally under the preëmption law, have received large sums on such sales.

Mr. Chairman, this is the language of the late Justice Miller, not mine. The case is well and forcibly stated by him.

It is insisted by some that the fact that some of the lands have been disposed of to settlers shows its nonswampy character. Those who argue this forget that all swamp lands are not valueless.

Even the poorer quality of swamp lands when situated near thriving settlements are sought after by both settlers and investors, and such tracts as contain but a small percentage over half swamp and the other valuable for timber, hay, water, and other purposes, and such others as could be easily drained, are sought after by speculators and settlers. It has been said that thousands of acres of valuable agricultural lands have passed to the States. In part this is true, but it does not show any fraud.

By the very terms of the grant every 40-acre tract, the greater part of which was too wet for cultivation, the whole passed, and vice versa. In buying 160 acres the settler finds upon one quarter of the tract 21 or more acres too wet for cultivation—not worthless, but perhaps very valuable for hay or pasture—and because he takes the whole, and the State subsequently presents a claim for the money received for one of the forties, this by some has been denounced as a fraud, but it is only in accordance with the grant. It is said that some of the claims are in the hands of agents.

The negligence of the officers of the Government, and such unwillingness to carry into effect the plain provisions of the grants as we have seen manifested in the past, have made the employment of agents a necessity, and the "hope deferred" which more than forty years' delay evidences has depreciated the value of the Government's promises and given occasion for the sale of an insignificant amount of the claims for land and indemnity, perhaps not exceeding 2 per cent of the whole. The State of Arkansas has never had an agent upon a commission. She might have been in a better financial condition if she had employed one.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say again, in answer to the criticisms that have been made upon previous bills upon this subject, touching the alleged amount that will be necessary to carry it into effect, that the amount is limited now. Under existing law there is no limitation upon the time for the filing of claims nor as to the amount to be paid. In this bill we seek to fix a limit of a year, and by limiting the amount to what is fair we make it to the interest of all those interested in the fund to see that no fraudulent claim is passed. We put the honest claimants to watch the dishonest, if there be any such. We provide that the fund shall be distributed after all the claims have been presented and audited.

If, then, there is any well-founded suspicion or fear that in any State or States of this Union frauds have been committed and that they may be attempted in the future, it appears to me that we have provided against it. It seems to me that gentlemen who have opposed this bill heretofore upon this account should aid us in passing it in its present shape. The committee has honestly endeavored to meet every reasonable objection that has been urged against it. I believe that the delays in the passage of prior bills have cost the Government more than if some measure like this had been passed when first presented in the Forty-ninth Congress. I think, however, that it is now in better shape for the Government than it was then, and if it is permitted to become a law an adjustment can yet be had.

At one time there was a section in the bill providing for giving indemnity for lands taken by a certain railroad. That has been eliminated and is not in this bill. There was a provision for the redemption of certain scrip alleged to have been in the hands of speculators. Without knowing whether that is true or not, the committee felt that it ought not to be made the means of defeating the other just provisions which look to a final settlement, and so that has been eliminated. We remit the question of whether the Government will redeem the scrip to some other time. My State owns none.

There is nothing, then, presented here but the question of giving cash indemnity for the lands which the Department of the Interior may adjudicate to have been sold erroneously, and giving protection to the settlers and purchasers. I repeat what I said in opening, that if any gentleman has any criticisms to make, that he will direct them at the bill and not at something that he may have heard in the past in relation to the adjustment of these grants. Upon the platform of fair debate we will meet him in a spirit of perfect fairness. I challenge him to consider the subject with the view of arriving at a decision and a conclusion that will remove this contention from the Department and this cloud from the title of our people.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I wish to ask the gentleman a few questions. The Legislature of the State of Iowa at its last session passed a resolution asking the Representatives of that State in Congress to support this measure, but nevertheless I feel it my duty to ask a few questions for information. Do I understand the gentleman from Arkansas to say that the State of Arkansas has no claim for any cash balance?

Mr. McRAE. She has a claim, but it has never been allowed, so as to be paid or credited. She has a large claim, over $200,000 worth of land indemnity and nearly as much for cash indemnity.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. On page 15 of your report I find this:

The following table will show the claim of the State, allowing the same rate of interest that the bonds bear, calculated from the year the sales were made.

Following that introductory paragraph is a table aggregating $2,161,067.71. Is that the balance that is claimed by Arkansas?

Mr. McRAE. No, sir; I do not think that is the report on this bill. That is on another bill. This report, I think, deals entirely with the sums without adding the interest on them.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. What does the gentleman mean by another bill?

Mr. McRAE. The Arkansas debt bill (H. R. 2631) also favorably reported. However, I will answer any question the gentleman may ask about that if he desires information touching that debt. It is substantially embodied in the first section of the pending bill.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. This report is marked "to accompany H. R. 9072," and the bill that I have here is H. R. 9072, and was brought to me as the bill under discussion.

Mr. McRAE. That is the bill under discussion. I may be mistaken, but it makes no difference.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. And this is the report to accompany that bill made by "Mr. McRAE, from the Committee on Public Lands," as I read on the first page.

Mr. McRAE. What is the number of that report?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. It is No. 1571.

Mr. McRAE. I see that I am mistaken. Appendix F to the report does include interest.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Then I have the right report?

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Now, on page 10 of this report are the items of the claim of your State amounting to $705,548.76, without interest.

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. And on page 15 is stated the claim of Arkansas with interest, the interest amounting to $1,550,066.01?

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Now, that is the claim of the State of Arkansas?

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir. If the Government charges Arkansas interest she should allow her interest at the same rate.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. This bill, as I am advised, purports to give relief to other States, sixteen in number, I believe including the State of Iowa?

Mr. McRAE. Fourteen, besides Arkansas.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I take it that section 2 of the bill is the one that will let them in?

Mr. McRAE. You are correct.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. But no statement is made in the report of the amount that any other State than Arkansas is to receive.

Mr. McRAE. Well, Arkansas will not receive anything beyond the surrender of her bonds. I made those tables on data furnished by the Interior Department and the Treasury Department as the probable amounts due the State of Arkansas, one without interest upon either side and the other with it on both sides.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. That is what I want to get at. As I understand, while you state a balance here of over $2,000,000 in favor of Arkansas, yet there are counter claims in favor of the Government which will offset that, so that the State expects nothing.

Mr. McRAE. That is the case exactly. We are perfectly willing to offset it. We do not think we owe the Government that much, nor as much as it owes us, but we are willing to release to the Government all it owes if it will wipe out these old debts and give us a clean balance sheet.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Is this $2,000,000 to be considered in connection with the balance?

Mr. McRAE. No. That $2,000,000 has no reference to Arkansas. It is for the other States, other than Arkansas.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Can the gentleman state the amount that the other fifteen States are entitled to?

Mr. McRAE. The Commissioner of the Land Office suggested $2,000,000. I would put it at about a million and a half, an average, perhaps, of $100,000 to each State. Some of them will get a larger amount and some a smaller. The fifteen swamp-land States are Alabama, Arkansas, California, Florida, Illinois, Iowa, Indiana, Louisiana, Michigan, Missouri, Minnesota, Mississippi, Ohio, Oregon, and Wisconsin.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Can the gentleman state what amount will go to Iowa?

Mr. McRAE. I can not give the amount as to any particular State, because that will require an adjustment of errors; but Iowa will get perhaps as much or more than any other State, unless it be——

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Then we are absolutely without light on that point.

Mr. McRAE. The Department has no reliable light upon that subject. In the very nature of the case it could not have. In answer to the request of the committee for this information the Commissioner of the General Land Office stated that in his judgment it would be impossible to make any estimate which would be anything more than an unreliable approximation or mere conjecture.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I wish to ask the gentleman another question. There is a limit of one year within which claims are to be filed against this $2,000,000 fund?

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Is the bill so framed as to make that anything more than a limitation as to this fund? May not a subsequent bill be brought in to allow claims against another fund?

Mr. McRAE. No, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Are all claims beyond the amount of the two million fund barred and wiped out?

Mr. McRAE. The purpose of section 8 is to bar all claims under any of the prior grants and under this act. If it is not strong enough we will make it stronger if you will suggest the language. If we have the power to pass it at all I think it covers the case fully.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I have not had time to analyze the measure; but the question occurred to me whether the limitation would apply in such a way that all claims in order to get their pro rata share must be filed within the year.

Mr. McRAE. All claims must be filed within one year from the passage of the act, or one year after filing in the local land office the plat of the survey of the township.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. The experience of Congress has not been a very happy one in regard to claims of this kind.

Mr. McRAE. The bill provides a limitation upon the amount and the money is to be distributed pro rata if not enough for all. Any State having an honest claim will therefore be put under every inducement to see that no money is paid upon claims that are not honest. The United States will have the aid of some of the States at least in making an honest adjustment.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I confess this seems to me a big claim; and the items entering into the Arkansas claim are beyond my comprehension even after the able speech of the gentleman from Arkansas who speaks from the standpoint of his great familiarity with the subject. I would have been glad if the other fifteen States could have had a little light on their claims. The claim of the State of Arkansas is set out in extenso and with great detail.

Mr. McRAE. The late Commissioner of the General Land Office—not only the late Commissioner, but all the Commissioners and all the Secretaries of the Interior that I have consulted, have told me privately and have stated in writing that it is impossible to estimate the amount of the claims that may be allowed with any kind of accuracy until the matters are taken up and examined. I have given the committee all the facts obtainable.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Where do they get the data for the statement of the account of the State of Arkansas?

Mr. McRAE. A clerk was detailed for this service for three months and went over the claims with a clerk from the State land office, and upon the result of this examination I made the statement in the tables referred to. The Department has not adopted it as in all respects true, but only as showing approximately the indemnity due.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. This is your statement of the account.

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir; my statement made upon data furnished by the Department, which I think correct.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. In other words, the Department has furnished no statement of account as to any of the States——

Mr. McRAE. No, sir; except as I have stated.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. And the reason we have this statement as to Arkansas and not as to the other fifteen States is that the gentleman has taken the trouble to run over the data and make out the statement.

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir; and you will understand the reason. Arkansas, although the only State named in the grant of 1850, is the only State to which no indemnity either in land or money has been given. The gentleman's State and other States have received large amounts of indemnity of both land and money but our State has never received an acre of indemnity land nor a dollar of indemnity money; in part, because we were indebted to the Government and the officers of the Government said, "You are in debt to the Government, and whatever is due Arkansas we will keep." Hence, the amount of our claims was sequestered and held by the Government. Then the war came on, and then the troubles which followed it gave our people so much else to think about that they did not seem to have much interest in swamp lands. Until the last six or seven years not much attention was paid to the interest of the State in this matter; it was in a large measure neglected. We never had the foresight or sagacity to employ an agent as some States did, to come here and have the matter adjusted. We trusted the Government to do it. That is one reason why our claim has not been allowed heretofore.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I trust the gentleman will allow me one more question. Before this amended bill was put in there were other bills pending on this subject?

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Did they state any amount?

Mr. McRAE. No, sir. The limitation inserted in this bill was put in at the suggestion of the late Commissioner of the Land Office, Mr. Carter.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. I would like to inquire what amount the State of Arkansas will receive under this bill?

Mr. McRAE. She will not receive anything in money.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. You do not count your indebtedness as anything?

Mr. McRAE. Certainly I do, but I am speaking of the amount to be paid in money. She will receive the surrender of something over $700,000 worth of bonds as good to her as money.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. Does that include interest on those bonds?

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. For how long?

Mr. McRAE. There is accrued interest on some of them. Some of these bonds were paid in 1861; and we do not believe interest should be charged on them, because the Government had enough money of the State to pay them at that time; but if it should be, there will be interest on $500,000 since 1861 and on the other amounts for a shorter time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. What would be the aggregate of the accrued interest?

Mr. McRAE. Well, if you calculate interest on all, it would amount to about $2,000,000, and that is the reason that I made the table showing interest on the Arkansas claim. If the indemnity funds had been allowed and credited at the proper time, when it accrued it would offset the bonds, or if we include interest on it and other sums, it will be in the neighborhood of $2,000,000. And that leaves out, remember, all the lands that we claim, which aggregates a million more.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. The claim of the Government, then, is about $2,000,000 against the State of Arkansas?

Mr. McRAE. I do not admit that it is that much. I say that if the interest were added it would be. But I do not admit that the interest should be added. I do not think that you can charge interest upon a bond after the coupons have all been paid. The bonds and the coupons are evidences of indebtedness. But if you add interest on the bonds after the last coupon was paid it would aggregate, as I have said, about $2,000,000. These bonds matured in 1861.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. But were not paid?

Mr. McRAE. No; they were not paid, and the Government appropriated money to pay them. Now, if you add interest on that sum since that time it reaches about $2,000,000.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. Has any of the interest been paid?

Mr. McRAE. None since then, excepting the amounts that have been retained. The interest does not run on all of the bonds for that time, because some of them were not issued until 1872.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Let me ask the gentleman, if the other States had sent agents here to adjust the differences between the States and the General Government why could not your State have done the same thing?

Mr. McRAE. She could have done it, but she did not.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. If she could have done it and did not, what is the necessity for this legislation?

Mr. McRAE. The law made it the duty of the Secretary to do this thing. We did not lose any of our rights by not doing it. The Secretary should have done it or had it done. Many of the States, however, seeing that the Secretary did not intend to make the lists, appointed their own agents to make the selections.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. One thought more and I will not again interrupt the gentleman. If I understand this proposition as to Arkansas, there is no court or Department which has stated the amount between the General Government and the State of Arkansas?

Mr. McRAE. No, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. And this bill, without any such adjudication, proposes to make a clean wipe out of the two amounts, an exchange as it were?

Mr. McRAE. That is it.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. And Congress is to act as the adjudicating body, your claim being that there is over $2,000,000, including the one and a half millions of interest, in favor of Arkansas; but to get rid of the claim of the Government against the State, you are willing to let that go?

Mr. McRAE. Yes; and to throw in a million acres that we claim as swamp land besides.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Does it not seem that there ought to be some court or judicial determination to ascertain and pass upon these accounts before making such a swap or exchange, so that we may be able to act upon an intelligent basis?

Mr. McRAE. Well, you have been forty years doing it and it has not been done. We feel now that, by surrendering all the claims we have against the Government, the Government certainly can not complain. Measuring the Arkansas claim by the amount of cash and land indemnity that the other States have received, we know that she yields more than she gets. But we want to get rid of that debt incumbrance, so that the State can proceed without being held up by the Treasury Department each year as a defaulting State. Late Treasurer Jordan recommended a compromise. These claims of the State, you must remember, without legislation can not be entered as credits against these bonds. It is fair if they are to be entered that they should be entered as of the year they accrued, otherwise they will be absorbed in interest. But without some legislation of that sort there is no way of making such a settlement. This is the easiest way out and the Government loses nothing by it.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Is this a unanimous report of your committee?

Mr. McRAE. There is no minority report. I do not remember, but I think perhaps one or two members of the committee will not vote for the bill, but made no minority report.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Was there an investigation by a subcommittee, or was it considered only in full committee?

Mr. McRAE. It was considered only in the full committee, I believe, if that is pertinent, but fully considered.

Mr. MALLORY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas this question: How did you reach a conclusion to limit this to $2,000,000?

Mr. McRAE. On the suggestion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office as to the probable amount that would be necessary. One purpose was to effectually answer the statements heretofore made by some gentlemen on the floor that it would require a very much larger sum. I have often stated that in my opinion it would not cost more than one or two millions.

Mr. MALLORY. In the event that it exceeds two millions of dollars there is no remedy for the other States that have similar claims?

Mr. McRAE. They are all paid pro rata in that event.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise for the purpose of debating this bill at this time, but for the purpose of submitting to the committee a statement on the subject by Governor Stone, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which I shall ask the Clerk to read.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] and myself have always differed as to the merits of this bill when the measure has been up for consideration. I have always considered the opinion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office specially valuable. A few years ago the opinion of Col. Stockslager, the then Commissioner of the General Land Office, as to the effect of the measure as it then stood was an exhaustive statement against the measure. The bill has been modified somewhat since that time, but it is still substantially the same bill.

Late yesterday, not being able at the moment to see the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE], the chairman of the House Committee on Public Lands, I took upon myself the responsibility of writing a letter to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, inclosing the pending bill and the report of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE], and requesting a statement as to the effect of the bill. It is a very important measure, which has from time to time occupied the attention of Congress, and has been largely discussed, although not within the last two or three years. Indeed, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] has made to-day the most exhaustive statement that has been made to the House in favor of the bill for many years.

Independent of the State of Arkansas, the sum of $2,000,000 is named in the bill as the sum that shall be paid to the other States affected by the swamp-land laws and interested in the bill, but it is obvious that in our future legislation the principles of this bill as to the basis of adjustment will govern and not the limitation we may now prescribe. Arkansas and the United States have large mutual claims of long standing and I would gladly see them adjusted on almost any reasonable basis and will vote for any reasonable measure to settle these mutual claims; but I am opposed to the general scope and purpose of this bill. I do not wish to see the scope of the swamp-land laws enlarged. It was not in the beginning, in my judgment, a wise measure. It tended to corrupt policies in the States. The claims of the States have been exorbitant and unreasonable and speculators have in the main reaped the benefits. I wish to see this unfortunate business settled under the existing law, not enlarged.

But the subject is complicated and embarrassing. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, as the statement of Governor Stone, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, is of very much more value than anything that I can say, I will ask that the letter may be read. It will be found to be a very able discussion of the subject, although hastily prepared.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D.C., December 20, 1892.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your communication of yesterday, asking immediately for information on the subject of swamp lands and cash indemnity under the swamp-land laws, in connection with House bill 9072 and report 1571, copies of which you inclosed, I have the honor to offer you the following observations:

Section 1 of the bill proposes to offset the debt of the State of Arkansas against the pending claim of the State under the several land grants. The exact amount of the debt and of the claim has not been ascertained, and it can not be in the short time within which this communication must be prepared, but I am rather favorably impressed with this feature of the bill. If this section were made the subject of a separate bill, and time were given to examine into the subject thoroughly, I think it probable that a report could be made in its favor. It is here assumed that the debt is about $2,000,000, and that the value of the lands already claimed by the State but not adjusted, and the lands and indemnity to be claimed in the future under the present swamp-land laws, and the expenses to be necessarily incurred in investigating and adjusting the entire claim, will about equal the debt in amount. The swamp-land business has been pending for more than forty years, and the final adjustment of the claim of the State of Arkansas would be a tremendous advance in the endeavor to close out the whole business.

The State of Arkansas has already had 7,665,818 acres patented to it as swamp lands, yet it continues to claim more and objects to the adjustment of its claim except in its own way, i. e., on the basis of getting all it claims. The consequence is that its unadjusted claim is still very large, the selections for swamp land in place being tied up by appeals before the Secretary of the Interior, and the cash indemnity due not having proofs submitted to admit of action. The settlement of the swamp-land claim of this State is the most backward of any pending in this office. I can not now express myself in favor of this measure; I will only say that it merits consideration with time and opportunity to thoroughly study the subject.

I refer you to the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for 1891, pages 58 to 61, inclusive, and to the tables and recapitulations in the appendix, pages 198 to 218, inclusive, for valuable general information on the subject of swamp lands and swamp-land indemnity.

Section 2 of the bill provides exclusively for cash indemnity on swamp lands, and it applies to all the swamp-land States, viz: Arkansas, Alabama, California, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, Oregon, and Wisconsin; but as no exact rule has yet been recognized by the agents of the States by which swamp lands are distinguished from other lands the amount involved is indefinite. In some localities nearly the whole territory of the geographical division—county or State—has been claimed as swamp lands. The bill, section 4, takes cognizance of the fact that fraudulent or erroneous claims have been and will be presented. The fact that there is a standing appropriation for the payment of all claims established under the swamp-land laws, and the additional fact that claims are prepared and prosecuted, not by State officials, but by agents or contractors whose compensation is contingent on success in prosecuting the claim, and on the amount recovered, makes it difficult to keep the claims within reasonable bounds. The standing appropriation referred to is the "permanent annual appropriations," provided for in section 3689, United States Revised Statutes, under the Interior Department.

Section 3 of the bill provides for cash indemnity on all swamp lands disposed of by the United States, and enlarges the present indemnity laws: (1) as regards the amount allowed in money on swamp lands sold for cash; (2) as regards the lands forming the basis of cash indemnity, and (3) as regards the indemnity period. Under the present laws the amount of the purchase money received by the United States to be paid to the proper officers of the State can not exceed $1.25 per acre; the bill provides for the full amount of the purchase money, whether it be $1.25 per acre or more; the present law provides for the allowance of land indemnity when the swamp lands were located by warrants or scrip; the bill allows cash indemnity in lieu of land indemnity; the present law allows no indemnity on lands disposed of otherwise than for cash or by locations with warrants or scrip; the bill allows cash indemnity on all swamp lands, no matter how disposed of, i. e., it includes lands given gratuitously as homesteads, lands granted to railroads, including the odd-numbered sections within the six-mile limit of the Chicago and Mobile Railroad (Illinois Central in Illinois and Mobile and Ohio Railroad in Alabama and Mississippi), reserved for the special purpose of reimbursing the Government for lands granted to the railroad, and sold for $2.50 per acre, under section 3 of the act of September 20, 1850 (9 U. S. Stat., 466), which lands are not now, under departmental decisions, subject to the swamp-land laws, and for all other purposes including, perhaps—this would be a matter for legal interpretation—lands granted to the States for educational, internal improvement, and other similar objects; the present law limits the period of indemnity from September 28, 1850, to March 3, 1857; the bill enlarges the period from 1850 to the present time, and even into the future.

Thus it will be seen that the enlargement of the indemnity grant for the period from 1850 to 1857 would require many millions of dollars (in addition to the $2,000,000 specifically provided for) to satisfy the claims based on the disposal of lands during that period. The indemnity claims of several of the States are now fully or nearly quite adjusted on the basis of the present law. Among such claims are those of Florida, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, and Wisconsin. The bill would authorize the filing of large additional claims from these States as well as from the other States whose claims are now in process of adju tment.

The amount of $2,000,000 is stated as the limit for indemnity from 1857 to the present time, and into the future. This would admit the States of California, Minnesota, and Oregon to a share in the amount. These States are not now entitled to cash or land indemnity under the present swamp-lands indemnity laws.

It is perhaps doubtful if really meritorious claims can be filed, on the basis of swamp lands disposed of by the United States after the date of March 3, 1857. At that date the several swamp land States, California, Minnesota, and Oregon excepted, had, generally speaking, made full claims for all the swamp lands within their respective boundaries. These claims were made of record in the local land offices and in the General Land Office, and this operated as a reservation of the lands claimed as swamp lands in favor of the States, so that the alleged swamp lands claimed were not subject to disposal, except after an authoritative decision on the real character of the lands. If they proved to be swamp lands they were approved and patented to the States; if they were decided to be agricultural lands they were disposed of the same as unappropriated public lands.

The arguments in favor of allowing indemnity from 1850 to 1857 do not, generally, hold good when applied to the period from 1857 to 1892. The fact that the States of Florida, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, and Wisconsin, whose indemnity claims have been fully adjusted, or nearly so, appear to be satisfied with the justness of the settlement already made, and that they do not contest in the courts the rights of the homesteaders, purchasers, locators, and grantees generally, in possession of their lands, patented to them, would indicate that no swamp lands to any considerable amount have been disposed of since 1857, except to the States having the right to them.

In view of the above facts, it appears to me that the passage of the bill, so far as the extension of the indemnity period from 1857 to the present time is concerned, would not be of much practical use; but that on the contrary it would become the source of vexatious contentions between the attorneys and contractors prosecuting claims in the name of the counties and States, and the United States, with the machinery of the General Land Office in action to protect the interests of the Government from questionable claims.

By the confirmatory act of Mar. 3, 1857, all the selections or claims of swamp lands filed in this office up to that date were confirmed to the States as swamp lands, whether they were actually swamp lands or not, and these lands have been patented to the States claiming them. Among the lands so selected or claimed, which were so confirmed were a very large quantity that were not granted by the swamp-land grant of September 28, 1850, yet, to the scandal of citizens seeking homes on the public lands, the States obtained them as if they had been swamp lands. In some States the quantity thus obtained was as great as 4,000,000 acres, and in one, at least, even more. It would be only just to consider that when Congress passed the confirmatory act of March 3, 1857, it intended to close out the swamp-land business forever. So, if a few tracts have been erroneously sold since 1857, the large quantities of agricultural lands confirmed to the States as swamp lands should be considered as a just compensation for any losses the States may have sustained since March 3, 1857.

It has been the policy of the Government not to legislate further in regard to the swamp-land matter, as it has passed all reasonable bounds, as is shown by the Land Office Report for 1891, pages 58 to 61, and 198 to 218. The new States admitted into the Union within the last ten years have not had the swamp-land grant extended to them, but instead, a definite quantity of public lands have been granted to each of them in lieu of lands that they might have acquired through the swamp-land act if extended to them. The quantity so granted has generally been only 500,000 acres.

Every swamp-land State, Ohio excepted (and that for the reason that the public lands in that State were sold prior to the date of the swamp-land grant), has received more than 500,000 acres of swamp lands, indeed the majority of them have received millions of acres—Arkansas more than 7,000,000, California nearly 2,000,000, Florida more than 16,000,000, Illinois more than 1,000,000, Iowa nearly 2,000,000, Louisiana nearly 9,000,000, Michigan nearly 6,000,000, Minnesota nearly 3,000,000, Mississippi more than 3,000,000, Missouri more than 3,000,000, and Wisconsin more than 3,000,000. These figurs refer only to swamp lands in place. The majority of the States named have also received large amounts of cash indemnity under the swamp-land laws.

Another serious objection to the enlargement of the indemnity right under the swamp-land laws is that the States, in many cases, would not be the beneficiaries. The States, after obtaining large quantities of lands in the settlement of their claims, granted their remaining rights to the counties, or to corporations or to individuals. These would now claim thousands of dollars under a right that cost them little or nothing.

Section 7 provides for the confirmation of the titles of grantees of the United States to lands that may be claimed as swamp lands. I do not consider this provision as of any particular utility, as the settlers and purchasers of the public lands whose title the bill assumes to confirm are already protected by patents issued under the law, the efficacy of which has the full sanction of judicial decisions.

Sections 5 and 8 contain excellent features, and if they could be confined and made applicable to the present swamp-land indemnity laws by a special, separate bill, they would receive my fullest approbation.

The report accompanying the bill contains the statement that the Secretary of the Interior failed or neglected to comply with the swamp land law of September 28, 1850, in not making lists and plats of the swamp-lands and transmitting them to the governors of the States. If there was truth in this statement when it was first made, more than thirty years ago, it is not true now, as a comparison between the quantity of swamp lands estimated by the surveyors-general of the several States to be in the swamp-land States, and the list in the last annual report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, showing the quantity patented to the several States, will demonstrate that the Secretary of the Interior has in fact not neglected his duty.

The real fact is that from the very beginning of the adjustment of swamp-land claims, the States, through their agents, interfered with the officials of the Land Department in listing and platting the swamp lands, some insisting on one method and others on another for determining what were swamp lands, and it was through the kindly disposition of the several officers of the Land Department, rather than through neglect of duty, that the States were permitted to prove lands to be swamp lands by other me hods than from the reports of the surveyors-general of the States, which would have kept the listing and platting of swamp lands to a minimum expression.

From these observations you will see that the bill does not commend itself to my judgment as either meritorious or necessary.

Very respectfully,

W. M. STONE, Commissioner.

Hon. WILLIAM S. HOLMAN, M. C.,
Hall of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I will for the present yield the floor, but will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BERGEN. Mr. Chairman, I have had occasion to examine this bill in times gone by, and at one time I applied to the Department of the Interior in regard to it. In reply I received from Mr. Commissioner Groff a communication which his predecessor, Mr. Stockslager, had, I think, made to Secretary Vilas. This communication I now send to the desk and ask that it may be read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 6, 1891.

SIR: In compliance with your request of the 20th ultimo, there is sent you, herewith, a copy of the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Secretary of the Interior, dated April 11, 1888, on the subject of swamp-land indemnity legislation.

Very respectfully,

LEWIS A. GROFF,
Commissioner.

Hon. C. A. BERGEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 11, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to call your attention to the bills now before Congress in relation to swamp and overflowed lands.

One of these bills (S. 758) passed the Senate on the 29th ultimo, and the other (H. R. 6897) has been made the special order in the House of Representatives for the 12th instant.

The Senate bill "for the relief of purchasers and other grantees of the United States of certain swamp and overflowed lands and to reimburse and indemnify certain States" enacts that it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to adjust the claims of any State against the United States for any lands which have been sold or otherwise disposed of by the United States that were included in any grant of swamp and overflowed lands to such State, and in making the adjustment the State shall have indemnity in cash to the full amount of the purchase money received by the United States for all lands sold for cash and for all such lands as have been otherwise disposed of by the United States, except by grants to such States, or to railroad corporations in each State, or by homestead entries, for which indemnity has not been granted and allowed, such State shall have indemnity in cash at $1.25 per acre: Provided, That all claims under the act shall be presented with the necessary proofs to the Secretary of the Interior within three years from the approval of the act.

The second section provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall, when adjustments and allowances are made by him under the act, report the same to the Secretary of the Treasury, showing the amount ascertained to be due from the United States to such State on account of lands sold or otherwise disposed of, with a statement of the year in which the land was sold or otherwise disposed of; and requires the Secretary of the Treasury to cause such State to be credited with the amounts so reported by the Secretary of the Interior as of the last day of the year in which it was received or the lands otherwise disposed of, as the case may be, and apply the same on payment of any debt of the State to the United States, if any, but not on any tax the payment of which was not assumed by such State, and pay the balance, if any, over to the treasurer of said State.

Under section 3 the acceptance of any State of the indemnity provided in the act is to be a relinquishment and waiver of all its rights, title, and interest in and to all lands which have been disposed of by the United States and which were included in any grant of swamp lands to such State, and an acknowledgment and confirmation of the title thereto in the grantee or grantees of the United States.

Section 4 provides that all selections of lands heretofore made and all indemnity proofs heretofore taken in accordance with rules of the Department, and not rejected, may be considered in making adjustments under the act.

Section 5 provides that on the surrender of any indemnity land scrip heretofore issued under the provisions of the act of 1855 which could not be satisfied by reason of there being no lands in the State to which the same were issued subject to location thereunder, the value of the same, at the rate of $1.25 per acre, shall be paid to the State so surrendering the same when accompanied by proof of ownership.

By section 6 the provisions of the act entitled "An act to enable the State of Arkansas and other States to reclaim swamp lands within their limits," approved September 28, 1850, is extended to the States admitted into the Union since the 17th day of March, 1860, and said States are declared entitled to indemnity under the terms of this act for all swamp and overflowed lands within the meaning of the act of 1850 sold and disposed of by the United States since the admission of said States.

The first section of the House bill differs from the same section in the Senate bill in two particulars. It will be observed that in the Senate bill indemnity is only provided for lands "which have been sold or otherwise disposed of," making its provisions retroactive only, while the House bill contains the additional words "or may be hereafter," thus providing indemnity in case of future disposal of such lands; and the proviso limiting the time for presentation of claims does not appear in the latter.

The second section is substantially the same as the corresponding section of the Senate bill, the only material difference being that payment may be made to some "authorized representative of the State" other than the treasurer.

Section 3 provides that the acceptance of any State, its authorized representative or grantee, of indemnity for any of the lands sold or otherwise disposed of by the United States shall be a relinquishment and waiver of all its right, title, and interest in and to such lands and acknowledgment and confirmation of title thereto in the grantee or grantees of the United States.

Section 4 requires that all selections of lands heretofore made, and all indemnity proofs heretofore taken in accordance with the rules of the Department and not rejected, shall be used in making adjustments under the act, while the Senate bill only provides that such proof may be used.

Section 5 provides for payment for the indemnity-land scrip referred to in the same section of the Senate bill, and at the same rate, "to the party or parties so surrendering the same" when accompanied by proof of ownership.

By section 6 the provisions of the act are made to include the swamp and overflowed lands in odd sections within the 6-mile (granted) limits of the grant by the act of September 20, 1850, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Chicago, Ill., to Mobile, Ala.

Of late years the attention of the country has been frequently drawn to the effect of legislative grants of the public domain or of the proceeds thereof, and a large amount of land has been restored to settlement and entry by the action of Congress and the Executive. Special attention has not, however, been drawn to the evils of swamp-land legislation, and I deem it my duty to submit some of the facts known to this office concerning such legislation.

By act of March 3, 1849 (9 Stat., 352), Congress granted to Louisiana the swamp and overflowed lands found unfit for cultivation in said State, with certain exceptions.

By the act of September 28, 1850 (9 Stat., 519), the whole of the swamp and overflowed lands, made unfit thereby for cultivation, remaining unsold in each of the thirteen public-land States then in the Union (including Louisiana), were granted to said States respectively, and by the act of March 12, 1860 (12 Stat., page 3), the provisions of the act of 1850 were extended to the States of Minnesota and Oregon. The expressed purpose of this legislation was to aid the States in draining the swamp and overflowed lands in their limits, and it was provided in the acts that the proceeds of the lands should be applied exclusively, so far as necessary, to the purpose of reclaiming said lands.

Some of the States elected to adopt the field notes of the public surveys as the basis for adjustment of their claims under the grant, while others agreed to make selections by their own agents and furnish proof that the lands so selected were swamp and overflowed within the meaning of the grant.

Almost from the commencement of the work of adjusting these grants, allegations that many lands thus claimed were not of the character granted were filed in this office, and in a large majority of cases where hearings have been had upon applications to contest the States' claims the land has been found not to be swamp or overflowed within the meaning of the grant. Thousands of entries and locations of warrants or scrip were made by persons seeking homes, or investments upon lands which had been or were afterwards claimed by States under these grants.

In some cases the States transferred their interests to the counties, and selections were made by agents at a specific rate per acre for the lands selected, or for a percentage of the lands for which patents were secured. It happened therefore that many a settler upon or purchaser of public land by no means swamp or so liable to overflow as to be made unfit for cultivation was confronted with a claim under these grants, and not only put to inconvenience but often to actual expense and great loss.

In order to furnish a remedy in such cases Congress passed the act approved March 2, 1855 (10 Stat., 634), "for the relief of purchasers and locators of swamp and overflowed lands," confirming entries and locations of lands claimed under the swamp grant made prior to that date and before issue of patents to the State or States under the grant.

The second section of this act provides that upon due proof by the agent of the State or States, before the Commissioner of the General Land Office, that any of the lands purchased were swamp lands within the meaning of the original grant, the purchase money shall be paid over to the State or States; and where the lands were located with warrants or scrip, the State or States are to be authorized to locate a quantity of like amount of the public lands subject to entry at $1.25 per acre.

By the act approved March 3, 1857 (11 Stat., 251), the selections of swamp and overflowed lands under the grants of 1849 and 1850 were confirmed to the States so far as the lands remained vacant and unappropriated and not interfered with by an actual settlement under any existing law of the United States, and the provisions of the act of 1855 were continued in force and extended to all entries and locations of swamp and overflowed lands made up to the date of this act. Said acts of 1855 and 1857 are held to be retroactive in effect only.

It was estimated first that the original swamp grant would take only about 5,000,000 acres of land, but the claims under the acts above mentioned presented to date cover more than 78,000,000 acres. Of this amount nearly 57,000,000 acres have been patented to the States under said acts (including 852,212.16 acres of dry land patented as indemnity for swamp lands located with warrants or scrip). The States to which patents have issued for this amount are Alabama, Arkansas, California, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, Oregon, and Wisconsin, and the amount already patented to them under these grants exceeds the area of the States of New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, and New Jersey.

In addition to this immense area of land thus given to said States, indemnity in money to the amount of $1,532,972.05 for lands sold for cash during the eight years from March 2, 1849, to March 3, 1857, has been paid to the States of Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Louisiana, Michigan, Missouri, Ohio, and Wisconsin. Arkansas has presented no claims for indemnity for swamp lands either in cash or other lands; no lands were sold or located in California prior to March 3, 1857; Alabama and Mississippi have been awarded some indemnity in land, but none in money as yet; and these indemnity acts do not apply to Minnesota and Oregon.

From the beginning these acts have been a prolific source of corruption and fraud. Agents working for so much per acre, or for a percentage of the proceeds, whether in lands or money, amounting in some cases to 50 per cent of the proceeds of the claims, and armed with authority to represent the State, have with almost unparalleled effrontery presented claims for thousands of acres of the best land in the country, accompanied with affidavits that the same were so swampy or overflowed as to be thereby rendered unfit for cultivation.

Urged by self-interest, with statements made as to the benefits accruing to the States or counties, they have in many instances induced the representatives of the States to support their claims. A few instances of such fraudulent practices will be found on pages 37 to 40, inclusive, of the last annual report of my predecessor.

Up to 1872 indemnity claims were adjusted on ex parte affidavits (except in States which adopted the field notes of survey as a basis for adjustment). In that year new regulations were adopted providing for cross-examinations of the States' witnesses by an agent of this office. This did not, however, check the fraudulent claims entirely, and in 1878 the regulations were amended and provisions made for an examination in the field by agents of this office of the lands for which indemnity is claimed. These regulations also authorize the agents to take testimony in rebuttal of the States' testimony, although this authority was not exercised to any extent until recently; but it is now done in every case where necessary to protect the interests of the Government, and results in showing the worthless character of many of these claims.

The fraudulent nature of these claims was so well understood here that about ten years ago Congress was asked for a special appropriation to enable this office to make examinations in the field of the lands claimed, or for which indemnity is claimed, and since that time from $15,000 to $25,000 has been appropriated annually for that purpose. In other words, the Government has been compelled to expend this sum annually to protect the public domain and the Treasury from claims under laws making gifts to the States.

In illustration of this, I will cite the case of an indemnity claim filed by an agent for a certain county in Iowa, just examined in this office. The claim as presented embraced about 112,000 acres, entered with cash or located with warrants between September 28, 1850, and March 3, 1857, and with it were affidavits alleging that each smallest legal subdivision (or 40-acre tract) was swamp or overflowed land within the meaning of the grant. An agent of this office was detailed to examine these lands in the field and attend at the taking of testimony to be offered by the county agent. When the time arrived for offering such testimony the county agent failed to offer testimony as to some 46,000 acres covered by the claim, and waived the claim to indemnity for the same, it having been found by the agent of this office not to be swamp. Some 23,000 acres upon which the county agent offered testimony was not found to be swamp by the agent of this office and he succeeded in obtaining the testimony of citizens of the county rebutting that offered by the county agent.

Upon all the testimony elicited, indemnity for only 1,388 acres sold for cash was allowed, the remaining tracts covered by the claim as first presented having been found not to be subject to the claim, or to be embraced in warrant or scrip locations for which there are no lands in the State liable to be taken as indemnity. The examination of these lands confessedly not swamp, and securing proof to rebut that of the county as to others, consumed a great deal of the time of the special agent, and put the Government to considerable expense, which would not have been necessary if the claim had been an honest one. This claim imposed unnecessary labor and loss of time in the examination of the records of this office to ascertain whether the lands were actually disposed of during the period covered by the indemnity acts. In fact, it would seem that with certain agents it has been the practice to make up lists of all the lands disposed of between 1850 and 1857, and present claims to the indemnity, leaving the Government to disprove their allegations as to the character of the land as best it could.

In connection with this indemnity matter attention is called to one fact which may be considered remarkable, and that is that, notwithstanding millions of acres of land, unquestionably not swamp, were then open to settlement and entry, during the eight years from 1849 to 1857, lands so swampy or overflowed as to be thereby rendered unfit for cultivation were purchased by individuals to the value of over $1,500,000, in only nine States, and in the same State parties holding land warrants or scrip were willing to take over 850,000 acres of such land in satisfaction thereof. In addition to this, claims for lands thus disposed of during that time amounting to fully 2,000,000 acres, if not more, are on file in this office awaiting adjustment.

As before stated, the object of this grant is to enable the States to reclaim the swamp lands. The claims of the States have in many instances been transferred to counties and the proceeds of the lands, after dividing with agents, have been applied to the construction of roads, bridges, public buildings, and almost any purpose other than the reclamation of the lands as prescribed by Congress. Other States have disposed of the lands in large quantities for a merely nominal consideration, or granted them to railroad and other corporations. Only a small portion seems to have been applied to the purpose intended, and the object of the grant has been generally ignored or entirely defeated.

For many years past bills having in view the extension of the swamp-land grants to other public-land States, and extending the provisions of the indemnity acts of lands sold or located since 1857, have been introduced in Congress; but this office, and the Department, when called upon for an expression of opinion in the matter, have declined to recommend any such legislation. The bills now pending have not, so far as I am advised, been formally submitted for the views of the Department. On the 17th of February last, in response to oral inquiries by him, I addressed a letter to Hon. W. S. HOLMAN, chairman of the Public Lands Committee of the House, touching the House bill.

These bills propose to extend the indemnity acts to lands sold since their passage, and to indemnify the States for lands included in any grant of swamp and overflowed lands, heretofore or hereafter disposed of by the United States. If sold for cash, the full amount of purchase money received is to be paid the States, and where disposed of "otherwise" $1.25 per acre is to be paid. The Senate bill excepts lands granted to the States by other acts or to railroad corporations, or taken by homestead entries, but the House bill expects nothing.

The indemnity is to be given in cases where it has not heretofore been granted and allowed. No exception is made in either bill for lands already claimed and the claims rejected after full consideration.

Had the intention of the original granting acts been carried out in good faith there might be some reason for extending the indemnity laws to lands found to be swamp disposed of since 1857; but in view of what has been done I see no equitable reason for such legislation.

So far as I can ascertain this office and the Department have uniformly declined to allow indemnity in money beyond $1.25 per acre. The bulk of the lands disposed of at a higher rate were increased in price to reimburse the United States for lands adjoining, granted to the States to aid in the construction of canals or railroads, or for other purposes. Indemnity for lands located with warrants or script is limited to lands rated at $1.25 per acre, and these facts seem to have led to the establishment of the principle of allowing only that amount as indemnity. After taking one-half of the land within a certain limit free of expense a State certainly should be content with half the proceeds of the remainder when the first grant made expressly reserved such remainder to reimburse the United States for the other lands given the State.

There is no justice in the proposition to pay States $1.25 per acre for lands taken by homestead or timber-culture entries. In such cases the entrymen pay fees and commissions only, which barely exceed the cost of surveying the land and conveying it to them. Where land is taken under these laws the presumption certainly should be against its swampy character, and even if swamp, the cultivation and improvement of the land, finally making it taxable at an enhanced value, certainly benefits the State more than the United States, so far as revenue is concerned.

Lands taken by homestead entries are excepted from the Senate bill, but those entered under the timber-culture laws are not. No exception for either is made in the House bill.

Under the provisions of the Senate bill the acceptance of indemnity provided by it is made a waiver of all right, title, and interest to all lands included in any grant of lands to such State. The House bill makes such acceptance a waiver only for lands for which indemnity is allowed. Equity and fairness would seem to require that any State which has accepted indemnity under the provisions of the existing laws waived its right to lands sold or disposed of during the time covered by said acts, but in a number of decisions the State courts have ruled against the validity of the confirmation of entries made by said acts, and the proposed legislation would not afford protection to grantees of the United States from such rulings in future cases.

Section 4 of the Senate bill authorizes the consideration of selections and proof heretofore taken in accordance with the rules of the Department and not rejected, and the House bill enacts that such proof shall be used in making the adjustments.

Much of the so-called "proof" in support of indemnity claims now on file here consists of ex-parte affidavits, and it is due to the interests of the public that no adjustment be made on it. Experience has shown the utter unreliability of ex-parte evidence in such cases, and the worthlessness of the the same has been shown in every case where the lands have been submitted to the test of an examination in the field. Recently claims for indemnity for lands in two counties in Iowa amounting to over $30,000 were presented with ex-parte affidavits alleging that the lands were swamp or overflowed within the meaning of the grant. An agent of this office examined them and found that they were not of that character. He also obtained the testimony of residents of the counties confirming his reports.

Under the system of accepting ex parte affidavits this claim would have been allowed and paid, and so would the claim for another county before referred to. These are not isolated cases. Claims for other counties in Iowa and Illinois can be cited where thousands of dollars have been saved to the Treasury by thorough investigation. The provisions of the House bill requiring that this unreliable evidence shall be used in making adjustments of these claims is specially objectionable for this reason. It is simply equivalent to giving indemnity for land which never was within the terms of the grant, and is to that extent a mere gratuity to the grantees of the States and their agents.

I see no reason for paying $1.25 per acre in satisfaction of claims to indemnity for lands located with warrants or scrip prior to March 3, 1857. The law gave the State indemnity in other land in such cases. The rule that such indemnity must be satisfied out of lands in the State was adopted nearly a third of a century ago. The first indemnity certificate was issued by Commissioner Hendricks to Indiana in September 1855, and contained this provision which has been incorporated in each certificate issued since. Whatever alleged losses may have been sustained under this head by States or grantees are due mainly to their own negligence and failure to avail themselves of the provisions of the indemnity acts.

The increase in these indemnity claims of late years has been enormous, and it seems much easier now to secure affidavits that land was swamp in 1850 than it was thirty years ago; and the lapse of time seems to make it easier from year to year, judging from the amount of claims presented.

In most of the States entitled to indemnity in land there are lands sufficient to satisfy all valid claims they may have.

In addition to this it may be noted that under the confirmatory act of 1857 these States received an amount of dry land amply sufficient to compensate them for any apparent losses they may claim to have sustained.

There are only three States to which indemnity certificates have been issued in which there are no lands to satisfy the same. These are:

	Acres.
Illinois	99,675.83
Indiana	3,715.44
Iowa	17,668.12
Total	121,059.39

As before stated these claims could have been largely if not wholly satisfied if due diligence had been exercised.

It is understood, too, that the greater part of these certificates and the other claims to indemnity in land have passed into the hands of parties who purchased the same on speculation at rates much below that proposed to pay in satisfaction of the same, who will reap immense profits if these measures become law. The certificates issued are by their terms restricted to lands in the State to which they are issued, and this has been well known for years, so that purchasers of the same can not plead ignorance. Assignments of such claims have never been recognized by this office, as the law makes no provision therefor, and all settlements either in money or by patenting lands have been made with the State authorities. Payments to assignees would only impose additional labor on this and the Treasury Department.

Section 6 of the House bill proposes to apply the provisions of the same to the odd numbered sections within the 6-mile limits of the grant in aid of the construction of a line of railroad between Chicago and Mobile, made under the act approved September 20, 1850. This act granted to the States of Illinois, Mississippi, and Alabama the even numbered sections of land within 6 miles of the line of said road. The odd numbered sections in the same limits were reserved to the United States and increased in price to $2.50 per acre, the object being to reimburse the United States for the other sections granted to the States for railroad purposes.

The act granting swamp lands to these States became a law eight days later. Under date of November 20, 1855 (1 Lester Land Laws, 521), the Secretary of the Interior (Mr. McClelland) decided that the swamp grant did not embrace lands in these reserved odd-numbered sections in Illinois.

Through inadvertence lands in odd-numbered sections within the limits of the grant in Alabama were patented to said State in 1869 and 1870, and indemnity may possibly have been allowed for a few tracts of land in the same way, but whenever the matter has been brought to their attention this office and the Department have adhered to the decision of 1855 above cited.

In a decision dated May 2, 1873, Mr. Secretary Schurz ruled that certain tracts of land in these reserved sections in Illinois having been restored to settlement and entry prior to the passage of the act of March 3, 1857, and also previously selected under the swamp grant were confirmed by that act, and under this ruling a small quantity of land has been patented to the State as swamp land. On the same date, however, Mr. Schurz decided that since these reserved lands did not pass under the swamp grant of 1850 the State was not entitled to indemnity for such as were disposed of by the United States.

The question of the right of the State of Illinois for indemnity for lands of this class was held by the Court of Claims in 1886 to be res judicate in view of Secretary McClelland's decision. (See 4 L. D., page 3.)

There is another point with reference to this claim for swamp lands in the 6-mile limits of this railroad grant, to which it seems to me attention should be called. Under the grant for the railroad Illinois has received 2,595,053 acres of land, and Alabama and Mississippi (in which States the adjustment was made without reference to State lines) have together received 1,156,657.73 acres. The State of Illinois ceded her portion of this grant to the Illinois Central Railroad Company, one of the conditions being that a certain percentage of the gross receipts of the corporation, varying from 5 to 7 per cent, should be paid annually into the State treasury in consideration of the grants and privileges. The latest statistics immediately available show that up to April 30, 1880, said company had under this requirement paid the State $8,104,656.19, or more than $3 per acre for the land acquired by her under the railroad grant. In 1879 the income of the State from this grant was over $325,000. (See The Public Domain, pages 264, 265.)

This grant is a perpetual source of immense revenue to the State, as the constitution provides that the railroad company shall never be released from this obligation, and the money received shall, after payment of the State debt (now practically if not wholly extinguished), be applied exclusively to the payment of the expenses of the State government.

I am not advised of the terms made by Alabama and Mississippi in disposing of the lands received for this railroad. Illinois has certainly profited by it, and in common fairness should not claim any of the proceeds of the lands which Congress reserved to the United States.

The past history of legislation already had and its effects seems to me to afford ample reason why further extension of these grants should not be made. The grant of September 28, 1850, was extended to Minnesota and Oregon by the act of March 12, 1860, with certain limitations, one of which was that selections of lands already surveyed should be made within two years from the adjournment of the Legislature which met next after the passage of the act, and of land thereafter surveyed within two years from adjournment of the Legislature meeting next after notice to the governor by the Secretary of the Interior that the survey has been completed and confirmed; the other was that the grant should not include any land which the Government of the United States may have reserved, sold, or disposed of (in pursuance of any law theretofore enacted) prior to the confirmation of title to be made under the authority of said act.

It has been held by the Department that since the act of 1850 was a present grant sales of swamp lands in these States could not be made after March 12, 1860; also that under the act of 1850 it was made the duty of the Secretary of the Interior alone to designate the lands granted, and therefore the limitation as to time of selection and the exception of lands sold under prior laws before confirmation of title were inoperative.

Minnesota adopted the field notes of survey as the basis of adjustment of her claims. She also made large grants of swamp lands to railroad companies. Of late years it has frequently been charged that surveys have been made and the field notes returned so as to show large bodies of land valuable for timber, mineral, or agricultural purposes to be swamp land, and that this was done in the interest of railroad and mining corporations, greatly to the injury of settlers and persons seeking to acquire title under the public land laws of the United States.

Investigation made last year shows that in many cases lands have been thus fraudulently returned, but the approach of winter rendered further field work impossible, and the investigation had to be suspended.

Oregon agreed to make selections by her own agents and furnish proof that the lands selected were of the character embraced by the grant. Laws were passed providing for the sale of the lands to applicants, who were to pay 20 per cent of the price at the time of the application and the residue upon proof of reclamation of the land. Under these laws applications were made and allowed for an immense quantity of land, not swamp or overflowed in any sense, while nearly all the lands remaining unsold which are valuable for hay or pasturage are also claimed under certificates of purchase from the State.

These claims have generally been made to include all the tracts bordering on the lakes and water courses in Eastern Oregon, including sage brush and desert land, lava beds and mountains, so as to effectually shut settlers off from access to water, and give stockmen control of the other public lands in the vicinity for pasturage, free of expense. Settlers have been driven off of lands by armed force and by threats of violence. Many complaints have reached this office that settlers have been put to great expense, and in some cases have lost all the fruits of their labor through suits brought in the local courts by parties claiming under so-called swamp-land titles.

The claims of the State of Oregon under this grant reported to this office up to date cover less than 370,000 acres (including a great many tracts twice selected, and but a little over 31,000 acres have been patented to the State under the grant. It appears from a report made by a committee of the State senate in 1886 that six persons alone had received certificates of purchase from the State covering nearly 560,000 acres of land, and one of these persons had by this means secured possession of over 484,000 acres. The committee estimate that the amount claimed by these six men is sufficient to make two large counties with a population of 16,000 each.

Referring to this grant in his inaugural address, the present governor of Oregon, Hon. Sylvester Pennoyer, said:

"The gift by the General Government of March 12, 1860, to the State of Oregon of all the swamp and overflowed land within its limit was a Greek gift. The result of that gift has been that some of the fairest and most productive portions of our State, susceptible of supporting a large population, have been monopolized by a few individuals; immigrants that would have helped to build up our free institutions have been turned away, and a few cattle barons claim the soil. A prompt and decisive step should now be taken by the State. It would be much better for the State if it was forced to accept the alternative that every single acre of the swamp grant, not now gone beyond its control, should be turned back at once to the Federal Government, to be taken up by settlers under the homestead and preemption acts than that it should pass into the hands of a few large landowners. A thrifty enterprising yeomanry is a richer endowment to the State than a few thousand dollars in the treasury as the price of turning large areas of our most valuable lands over into the control of a few large alien stock-raisers."

Section 6 of the Senate bill proposes to extend the swamp grant to all the States admitted into the Union since March 17, 1860, and to allow indemnity for swamp lands sold or disposed of since the admission of such States. This will apply the grant to Kansas, Nevada, Nebraska, and Colorado.

The results of the extension of the grant to Minnesota and Oregon seem to me to furnish sufficient reasons why no further extension should be made. The rapidly decreasing area of the public domain, and the increased value of land, is a great temptation, and a grant as this would still further enlarge the opportunites for corruption and fraud of which the existing grants have been so prolific.

Another objection to these bills is that notwithstanding the well-known fact that the proceeds of the lands have already been largely devoted to objects other than that specified by Congress, it is now proposed to apply the proceeds of the same to payments of debts, if any exist, due the United States from the States, and to that extent defeat the purpose of the original grants.

With regard to the provisions in section 1 of the Senate bill that all claims under the act shall be presented within three years, it may be remarked that there is a very large amount of unsurveyed lands in the State to which this bill refers, and it is not probable that all claims could be presented within that time. The provision is also similar to that of 1860, which has been held to be inoperative. In the States to which the grant is now applicable the unsurveyed lands are estimated at over 70,000,000 acres, while in the States admitted since 1860 they are estimated at nearly 48,000,000 acres.

It is difficult to state the amount covered by this proposed legislation, but judging from the past it may be safely estimated that public lands, or the proceeds thereof, to the extent of 20,000,000 acres, will be required to satisfy the claims which will be asserted.

Much attention has been given to the subject of forfeiture of unearned railroad land grants, and the restoration of lands included therein to settlement and entry, and the success attending the efforts in that direction has been very gratifying.

Swamp-land legislation has proved fully as objectionable as railroad legislation, though confined to a smaller area, and the same reasons should operate to stop every measure looking to the enlargement of these grants.

Very respectfully,

S. M. STOCKSLAGER,
Commissioner.

Hon. WILLIAM F. VILAS,
Secretary of the Interior.

During the reading,

Mr. PICKLER said: Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of this communication.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BERGEN] is having this read in his own time, as a part of his remarks.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman has left the Hall of the House.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman from New Jersey is not here, therefore he can not occupy his own time.

Mr. ATKINSON. In the absence of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BERGEN] I object to unanimous consent being granted to suspend the reading of that document.

Mr. PICKLER. If the gentleman from New Jersey is not here he certainly has no time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading.

The Clerk resumed, and concluded the reading of the letter.

Mr. BERGEN. Mr. Chairman, this is the report of the Land Commissioner under the Administration of Mr. Cleveland upon a bill similar to the one that is now under consideration. I know it is undertaken to be said that this bill is in some particulars different from that bill, but in no material way is it altered. The principle that is involved in this bill was involved in the bill then under consideration, and I was told by Mr. Groff, the Commissioner of the Land Office, and the successor of Mr. Stockslager, that Secretary Vilas, when he understood that this bill was under consideration in this House, took this Commissioner's report and brought it up to this House and saw the committee and prevailed upon the committee never to pass such a bill.

Mr. MCRAE. If the gentleman will permit me, that statement is not true.

Mr. BERGEN. I think the gentleman does not know what he is talking about. I do not see how the gentlemen from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] can say that that statement is not true. It is not within his own knowledge whether it is or not.

Mr. MCRAE. I have been a member of the committee during the whole time.

Mr. BERGEN. The gentleman might have been absent.

Mr. MCRAE. No; I never missed a meeting of the committee, I believe, since I have been a member of it.

Mr. BERGEN. This bill does what? It proposes to settle the swamp-land claims, but it still maintains the principles which were so much opposed at that time, and certainly principles which every business man will admit are contrary to the true principles to be established in the settling of claims. What are these in brief? In brief, the bill maintains that the State survey is entitled to credit as against the national survey; that is, that the report of the State surveyor is entitled to credit beyond that of the national surveyor.

In other words, that when the law was passed giving to the State the title of certain lands if they were swamp lands, the National Government put its surveyor upon those lands to examine and see whether they were swamp lands or not; the State also put its surveyor upon them to make the same examination. One reported for it and the other reported against it, and the object of this bill is to establish the State survey as against the national survey. Now, what difference does that make? It makes the difference of title to millions and millions of acres of land.

But that is not all. It also proposes to establish title to these lands at a certain figure. It puts them at $1.25 an acre for such lands as the Government has not sold, and for such land as the Government has sold it claims the full amount that the Government has received, it matters not how much. So it is all the time against the Government and all the time for the State. Reference has been made to the different ways in which our Government has condemned lands and given them out as bounty, as homesteads, as railroad lands, and in other forms. These several kinds of land passed out; the title passing from the Government to the private citizen. By this act it is proposed that the National Government shall pay the State for them.

Not only so, but it proposes to do so because the grant was made in the original instance under the statement that the State would reclaim those lands. Has the State reclaimed them? If you will refer to the swamp act relative to Louisiana, passed March 2, 1849, Statutes, page 352, chapter 87, you will see that it is made a condition of the title to these lands passing to the State that the State should reclaim them, and the moneys that are now asked from the Government are asked on the ground that the State is supposed to have reclaimed them. Have any of these States reclaimed these lands?

It is my experience that we have been reclaiming these very lands ever since I have been here by the river and harbor bill, if I understand that bill; and yet we propose to pay to the State by this bill moneys which the Government may have received for these lands, or at the rate of $1.25 an acre for the lands which we have donated. That is, it is proposed to pay to the State over again a part of the moneys we have expended reclaiming these various lands, when, if the State had done its duty, it might have reclaimed them, and saved the General Government.

Now, I want to say in reference to this bill that this is a special law for Arkansas. I know no reason why Arkansas should have a special law. Two millions of dollars is the limitation for the rest of the States, and the amount of money that has been mentioned to me as possibly carried by this bill is $80,000,000. I do not assert that. I do not know what the amount may be. I do not think the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] knows. I do not think anybody knows how much money would pass by this bill; but my present point is that Arkansas proposes to be repaid dollar for dollar, and yet it proposes for every one of the other States, of which there are fourteen, interested in this bill, that they shall be limited to $2,000,000, or about 2½ cents on a dollar. That is the situation of this bill, and the preference that is given to Arkansas by its provisions.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. BERGEN. My time is almost exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BERGEN. No; I have not got the time. I would like to yield, but I have not the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey declines to yield.

Mr. BERGEN. Now, the amount of $2,000,000 is mentioned in the bill. If this bill passes, and the next House has a bill presented to it, and it is shown that $2,000,000 will be entirely insufficient to answer the purposes of the bill, is it presumable that that House will not go on and supplement that legislation as this bill supplements previous legislation? Will it not increase the amount of money as much as may be necessary, it may be millions and millions of dollars?

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will bear with me for a few moments and then I will ask for a vote. In my remarks in opening the discussion upon this bill I invited and challenged a fair consideration of the provisions of the bill. Instead of that I have been met, for an hour and twenty minutes, by those same tactics that have heretofore characterized the opponents of bills upon the same subject.

Nearly all this time has been spent in reading old reports directed at other and different bills, and not this one, and unlike it in nearly every particular.

They have discussed matters relating to the extent of the original grant when we are trying to adjust them. They have shown no good reason why this bill should not become a law. They can show none. It appears to me to be a studied plan on their part to consume the time allotted to the Committee on Public Lands in order that this bill may be defeated. Other bills have been defeated by these methods. This one may be.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has caused to be read a communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which comes to him not in the way communications usually come from the heads of the Executive Departments to the legislative department of the Government. It did not come from the Secretary of the Interior, nor to the committee entitled to it, but to a member of the House not a member of the committee. It is signed, however, by the Commissioner, but not sent through the ordinary channel. It comes without the earmarks of a communication from one Department to another. Why this unusual and extraordinary course of proceeding at this time?

Mr. Chairman, there are some of the employés of the Government who are personally interested in the defeat of this bill. They are of those who occupy the offices of the swamp-land division of the General Land Office. Under such methods as they have adopted our grandchildren will never see a settlement of the swamp-land grants. They know it, and stand by the old plan. In my opinion they want no legislation that will settle the claims and take from them the offices they now hold. Pretending to adjust, they do not adjust.

I am told, whether it be true or not I do not know, but I believe it to be true, that the chief of the division, if not now, has recently been in the galleries witnessing these proceedings. From his desk in the Department he has come to aid the gentlemen who oppose this bill. He brought this letter, and perhaps other documents, in order that this measure may be defeated, and his salary, if he can retain that office, be continued. He occupied a position under the last Administration. He is now in under this one. I do not know and do not care anything about his politics. The animus that pervades this communication, coming as it does at this time, I charge to him, and not to the Commissioner, who signed it, perhaps, without reading it. I believe him incapable of thus assailing a measure like this.

I do not believe that Governor Stone, who is now at the head of the Land Department, directed writing of such a letter, nor do I believe he gave it more than a passing consideration. I have referred to the indorsement given the limitation features of this measure by Secretary Noble and the late Commissioner Carter, and have told you of the personal statements that have been made by their predecessors in office touching the importance of legislation.

I believe that when this letter was written that the gentleman who prepared or who directed the preparation, deliberately avoided the usual course so as to get it here just when it came. That it did not come with the indorsement of the honorable Secretary of the Interior nor through his office appears upon its face. I call his attention to this method.

The document of nearly a hundred pages last read has no reference to the bill in question, and was never before used to defeat a swamp-land bill. Mr. Chairman, I have invited gentlemen to consider this bill paragraph by paragraph with a view of amending it if necessary. They have not met me with any such purpose. They dare not. When gentlemen have said that it would take $80,000,000, we have met them with the proposition in this bill to limit it to $2,000,000; and it will probably not take much more than half of that amount. This they brush away by saying that some other Congress may enlarge the limit. Some others may pass a bill without limit. That is an unfair way to meet the issue we present. They say it will give indemnity for railroad lands. There is no such purpose; and I do not believe it will. If it does, propose your amendments so as to avoid it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as the opponents of the bill have avoided debating it, and in view of what seems to me to be a clear intention to consume the time of the committee and thereby defeat a final vote, I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate upon the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RICHARDSON, chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 9072, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9072; and pending that I move to limit debate to five minutes.

Mr. BERGEN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the question, after which he will recognize gentlemen.

Mr. MCRAE. And upon that I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the further consideration of this bill, and pending that to limit debate to five minutes; and upon that demands the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. BERGEN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope ten minutes will be allowed.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BERGEN. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 15, noes 71.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas, to limit debate on this bill to five minutes in Committee of the Whole.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BERGEN. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 89, noes 4.

Mr. BERGEN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey makes the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. MCRAE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 124, nays 13, not voting 192; as follows:

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. POST]. If he were here I should vote "aye." If my vote would make a quorum, I should feel at liberty to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this question the "ayes" are 124, the "noes" 13. No quorum has voted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HOLMAN, there were—ayes 66, noes 36.

Mr. MCRAE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 21 voting in favor thereof (more than one-fifth of the last vote).

Mr. MCRAE. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays. I think I ought to have been recognized to make a motion for a call of the House; but as gentlemen seem disposed to go home, I shall not insist upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call for the yeas and nays being withdrawn, the motion to adjourn is agreed to.

The House accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. SCULL, from the Committee on Pensions: The bill (S. 1691) granting a pension to Josephine I. Offley. (Report No. 2183).

Also, the bill (S. 2042) for the relief of Mrs. Helen G. Heiner. (Report No. 2184.)

By Mr. COBB of Missouri, from the Committee on War Claims: The bill (H. R. 9522) for the relief of Lewis Pelham. (Report No. 2185.)

By Mr. CADMUS, from the same committee: The bill (H. R. 8200) for the relief of George McAlpin, to repay to him moneys unlawfully collected for him by the United States. (Report No. 2186.)

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on War Claims was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2177) for the relief of Frank Gray, and the same was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced, and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CROSBY: A bill (H. R. 9972) authorizing the erection of certain dwelling places in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. PERKINS: A bill (H. R. 9973) to amend "an act authorizing the construction of a high wagon bridge over the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa," etc.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois (by request): A bill (H. R. 9974) to refund to the State of Iowa the amounts paid by said State to the noncommissioned officers and enlisted men of the Second Iowa Volunteer Infantry, for gray uniforms charged to them by the United States mustering and disbursing officers when they were mustered into United States service in May and June, 1861, and afterwards ordered to be discarded and blue uniforms substituted therefor—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HARVEY: A bill (H. R. 9975) to provide for the allotment of lands among the several Indian tribes in the Quapaw Agency, in the Indian Territory, and for the sale of surplus lands of such tribes, and for the creation of the county of Cayuga, in the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BINGHAM (by request): A bill (H. R. 9976) regulating the sale of paints, white lead, colors, and linseed oil—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SWEET (by request): A bill (H. R. 9977) relating to right of way for street-car lines in the District of Columbia outside the city of Washington—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. DURBOROW: A bill (H. R. 9978) to provide for a national encampment of the Army and militia at the World's Columbian Exposition—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BUCHANAN of Virginia: A bill (H. R. 9979) to regulate the right of appeal in certain cases—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STUMP: A bill (H. R. 9980) for the establishment of a foreign quarantine, and suspension of immigration under certain conditions—to the Select Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. HARVEY: A bill (H. R. 9981) reserving the timber reservation in Oklahoma Territory for the benefit of the Territorial institutions of learning—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. DURBOROW: A joint resolution (H. Res. 177) to repeal the religious legislation pertaining to the World's Columbian Exposition—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

By Mr. CATCHINGS: A resolution setting apart Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, the 12th, 13th, and 14th of January, for the consideration of bills that may be called up by members—to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. BYRNS: A bill (H. R. 9982) for the relief of Eliza Dickerhoff, widow of Louis Dickerhoff, Company A, Cape Girardeau Home Guards, and directing the Secretary of War to acknowledge as actual service from date of enlistment, June 27, 1861, to discharge, September 29, 1861, and also directing Commissioner of Pensions to adjudicate pension claim now pending—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HATCH: A bill (H. R. 9983) for the relief of John Richey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MARTIN: A bill (H. R. 9984) increasing the pension of Mrs. Larana Stuart, a widow—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9985) granting a pension to John W. Welch, dependent father of John A. Welch, deceased—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9986) granting a pension to Emma E. Mechling, permanently helpless daughter of Levi Mechling, deceased—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9987) granting a pension to Joseph W. Suy-der, crippled son of a Revolutionary soldier—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RUSSELL: A bill (H. R. 9988) granting a pension to Sarah Warner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1, Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BELTZHOOVER: Four petitions of York, Pa., one of the United Brethern Congregation, the second of the Calvary Presbyterian Church, the third of the Trinity Evangelical Lutheran Church, and the fourth of the Keystone League of the Christian Endeavor Society, all against the opening of the Columbian Exposition on Sunday—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

Also, petition for the relief of William and Mary College, to accompany House bill 6863—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CHIPMAN: Petition of Frankziska Ecendorff, to remove charge of desertion from the record of Leopold Hodopp—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CRISP (by request): Petition of the Southwest Silver Convention, held at El Paso, Tex., asking the passage of a bill for the free and unlimited coinage of silver—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Georgia, asking the repeal of the 10 per cent tax on State banks—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DOLLIVER: Petition of Joseph Graham, of Boone County, Ill., for relief—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Francis McElroy, of Pocahontas County, Iowa, for relief—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAYNES of Ohio: Petition of the Sunday School Association of Ohio, against the opening of the World's Fair on Sunday—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

By Mr. LAYTON: Protest of the Sabbath Association of Illinois, against the opening of the World's Fair on Sunday—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania: Petition of the Sabbath Association of Illinois, against the reconsideration of the Sunday-closing law as to the World's Fair—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

By Mr. SCOTT: Petition of Alfred N. Muney, for relief—to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. SIPE: Resolutions of the Upper Ten Mile Presbyterian Church, of Washington County, Pa., commending Congress for closing the Columbian Exposition on Sunday—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

By Mr. WAUGH: Papers to accompany House bill 7444, of Henry W. Hackley, for correction of his military record and his discharge—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 21, 1892.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REPORT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the sixth annual report of the Interstate Commerce Commission; which, on motion of Mr. CULLOM, was, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the petition of Charles A. Hawkins and 24 other citizens of Toledo, Ohio, praying for the appointment of a Senate committee to investigate the combine formed to depreciate the price of grain, and asking for the postponement of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill until such committee shall report; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented petitions of Twin Valley Grange No. 657, Patrons of Husbandry, of El Dorado Grange Patrons of Husbandry, and of Pomona Grange No. 64, Patrons of Husbandry, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BATE presented the petition of M. E. Spurgin and other citizens of Hilton, Tenn., and the petition of C. L. Wall and other citizens of Fayette County, Tenn., praying for the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORGAN. I present a memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Alabama, and ask that it be read.

The memorial was read, as follows:

Joint memorial to Congress in reference to construction of Nicaragua Canal.

The joint memorial of the senate and house of representatives of the State of Alabama in General Assembly convened, to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, respectfully shows unto your honorable bodies:

First. That the construction of the Nicaragua Canal would greatly benefit the State of Alabama by opening up new markets for her agricultural products, notably cotton, and for her mineral products, particularly iron, steel, and coal. That it would increase her sales of lumber and ship stores and by making the Gulf of Mexico the highway for the trade and commerce of the world, would stimulate the growth of her Gulf ports and the development of all her resources.

Second. That the entire Mississippi Valley, including the lake ports, would feel the beneficial influence of practically another mouth to the great river opening into the Pacific Ocean.

Third. That the Atlantic seacoast will reap benefit by the shortening of the distances to our Pacific coasts and to the East, enabling it better to compete with Europe for the Pacific Ocean trade, and stimulating its shipbuilding and shipping interests.

Fourth. That our Pacific coast States would find every industry and source of prosperity stimulated by lower freights and closer connection with the Central and Eastern States, so that it would seem that our whole country is interested in the construction of this great highway for the commerce of the world.

Fifth. That the strategic importance of this canal is such that the Government of the United States should secure its absolute control.

Sixth. That the Canal Company having expended some $6,000,000, estimates the entire cost of construction of the canal at $100,000,000, and seeks the aid of the United States Government in raising the sum.

Seventh. That judging from the revenue accuring to the Suez Canal it would be safe to expect this greater work to pay a good dividend on the amount invested.

Eighth. For these reasons, your memorialists earnestly urge that such measures be adopted as will, in your wisdom, best secure the speedy construction of this canal and its control by the United States Government.

Resolved, That the governor of this State be requested to furnish a copy of this memorial to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

J. C. COMPTON,
President of the Senate.

Approved December 3, 1892.

THOMAS G. JONES, Governor.
FRANCIS L. PETTUS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

I hereby certify that the above is a true copy of the original papers now on file in my office.

J. D. BARRON,
Secretary of State.

Mr. MORGAN. In the same connection I present a memorial upon the same subject by Mr. George L. Converse, of Ohio; Edward F. Cragin, of Illinois; R. L. Edwards, of New York; and T. J. Odendahl, of Louisiana, a committee appointed by the convention which recently met in New Orleans, composed of 700 delegates from about 38 States of the Union, earnestly urging upon Congress the passage of the bill to aid in the construction of the Nicaragua canal. The memorial, under the rules of the Senate, I believe I have no right to read, and thus place it upon the records of the Senate. I move that this memorial and the one which has just been read be printed together as a document, and laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS presented a petition numerously signed by citizens of Shelby County, Tenn., praying for the passage of the antioption bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HISCOCK presented the petition of Frederick Heyl and 41 other citizens of Chautauqua, N. Y., praying for the appointment of a Senate committee to investigate the combine formed to depreciate the price of grain, and asking for the postponement of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill until such committee shall report; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the board of aldermen of Buffalo, N. Y., praying Congress to direct the Government Board of Engineers to prepare plans for the extension of the breakwater at Buffalo Harbor to Stony Point, and report thereon as speedily as possible; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of T. J. Yost and 154 other citizens of Altamont, N. Y., praying that Congress so amend its former action in regard to the sale of intoxicating liquors on the grounds of the World's Columbian Exposition as not to infringe upon existing laws of Illinois; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. PROCTOR presented the memorial of P. J. Boardman and other citizens of Norwich, Vt., remonstrating against repealing the provision requiring that the World's Columbian Exposition be closed on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. MCPHERSON presented a petition of the New Jersey State Horticultural Society, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit gambling in food products; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. QUAY presented memorials of the Center Presbyterian Church of New Park; of the Christ Lutheran Congregation of York; of the Lutheran Evangelical Congregation of York, and of the Church of God Congregation of Columbia, all in the State of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the passage of any legislation repealing the provisions of the act closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. FELTON presented a petition of the Afro-American citizens of the State of California, praying for the passage of legislation authorizing the board of management and control of the United States Government exhibit of the World's Columbian Exposition to collect statistics, etc., concerning the colored race; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5012) to increase the pension of Thomas Enlow, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VILAS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3028) for the relief of William P. Dunwoody, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2594) for the adjustment of the rights of the Indians and Indian tribes to lands owned or occupied by them in the Indian Territory, and for other arrangements, with a view to the creation of a State embracing such Territory, reported it with amendments.

Mr. MORGAN. As a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs I dissent from the report just made. The bill itself, prepared and introduced by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], is admirably adapted to carry out the purposes which he has in view, but it provides for a commission to go to the five civilized tribes and negotiate with them for a release of their lands to the United States. I do not believe that the Legislatures of those different tribes have that power, nor do I believe that it is practicable under their organic law, or under the treaties, or under the legislation of the United States to assemble in those five tribes any body of citizen Indians who have the right to make the concessions in the broad way in which they are proposed to be made through the agency of this commission.

Nevertheless, I believe that there is connected with the patents we have issued to those tribes as tribes for the lands a trust in behalf of the citizens of the respective nations or tribes, and the question remains as to who shall execute that trust. Inasmuch as it is a function of supreme sovereign power to execute the trust, I believe that the Government of the United States ought to execute it by the legislation of Congress, I will say, out of hand. The Legislatures of the respective tribes, I think, have not the power to execute it, nor do I think it is consistent with the nature of the trust itself that they should execute it, nor do I believe that they can execute it peacefully.

I believe that the Government of the United States ought now to pass laws for the proper distribution amongst the Indians of their domain, having respect, delicate respect, to every equity that has arisen out of former transactions, occupancy, etc. I believe that if we were to pass a just law it would be accepted by the Indians quietly, peacefully, and gratefully, and that we should avoid thereby those strifes and contentions which I am very much afraid will be aroused if we send a commission there to treat with any supposed legislative body or any supposed authorized body of citizens for the acquisition of this Territory.

So I enter my protest against the passage of the bill in its present form, and at the proper time when the bill is up for consideration I hope I shall be able to offer an amendment in the line of my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1218) to amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua," approved February 20, 1889, to report it with amendments and to submit a written report.

I am also directed to ask that the report made on this subject by the same committee on the 10th of January, 1891, be printed as a part of the report now submitted. Within a few days I will furnish to the clerks a report upon the amendments proposed by the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio desire to have the printing withheld until the additional matter is furnished.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes. In a day or two I will hand it to the Secretary. I give notice that at as early a day as practicable in the business of the Senate I shall seek to secure action upon and the passage of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1353) for the relief of Morgan Everts, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

CENSUS ENUMERATORS.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. VEST on the 6th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Whereas it has been charged by the public press that officials of the Government employed in the Census Bureau of the Interior Department have been guilty of gross misconduct for partisan purposes, and especially that the enumerators appointed to make the enrollment of population for the census of 1890 in the State of Missouri and elsewhere, did, under instructions from certain officers of the Bureau, make at the same time lists of voters for partisan use;

And also, that certain clerks and accountants employed in said Bureau were sent to the State of New York during the recent canvass to perform partisan service while drawing pay from the Government: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Census is directed to investigate said charges, and to report by bill or otherwise; that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, and to employ a stenographer, the expenses to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CATHEDRAL FOUNDATION.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9417) to incorporate the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia, to report it favorably, without amendment. I ask that it take the place of Senate bill 3391 now on the Calendar, and that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed. This being a House bill, and as there are some reasons why it should pass at an early day, I ask permission to have it considered now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The bill was read; and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator who reported the bill if it may not be a little too latitudinarian in its construction. It is, as I understand, an exact copy of Senate bill 3391, which has been reported heretofore and is on the Calendar.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It is an exact copy of that bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. The language of the bill is that the persons named—

Are hereby constituted a body politic and corporate by the name of the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia, with power to sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, and have perpetual succession; to acquire, take by devise, bequest, or otherwise hold, purchase, encumber, and convey such real and personal estate as shall be required for the purposes of its incorporation.

Would not that enable the corporation to acquire real estate and invest its funds in that way, and then turn around and sell the real estate, and continue to acquire and to convey such property at will and pleasure? It seems to me it is a pretty wide authority to give to any corporation.

Mr. MCMILLAN. That is not the purpose. There are certain parties in the district now who are ready to turn over to this corporation a large amount of property, and it is intended of course that they shall own and control the property. The intention is to hold it, just the same as property is held by other institutions here.

Mr. COCKRELL. When the bill was up at the last session I had an amendment prepared, which would limit the holding of real estate simply to that which might be necessary for the purposes of the corporation, so far as holding it is concerned.

Mr. MCMILLAN. There is no objection to an amendment of that kind, if the Senator will present it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I heard the bill was coming up and I looked for the amendment, but I can not find the exact amendment which I proposed at the time.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Senator from Missouri whether the legal construction of the language used in the bill is not that the only property that can be acquired by this corporation is for the purpose of carrying out the objects and purposes of its creation, and if that is not a limitation?

Mr. COCKRELL. Then why acquire the right to sell it. If it acquires it for that purpose and holds it there would be no objection to the bill, but the bill provides that it may acquire it and change it. It may change property back and forth just as it pleases in the matter of investing funds in real estate or anything else.

Mr. FAULKNER. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri

whether that is not the legal right by reason of its being a corporation created with power to hold real estate? Would it not have power to sell any property it may acquire? That is simply an enlargement of what would be the usual expression, perhaps, in the charter of a corporation. It certainly would not affect the legal right of the corporation itself to dispose of property it might acquire.

The importance of the passage of the bill is owing to the fact that this property has been acquired and the conveyance is to pass from the vendors to the corporation this week. So unless this bill is passed a trust will have to intervene and the conveyance be made to a trustee instead of being made directly to the corporation. The conveyance is to be made this week under the terms of the contract.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Are there amendments to the bill as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply desire to put myself on record as saying that I think it is an exceedingly dangerous bill; but I do not intend to oppose its passage any further than to record my vote against it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill (S. 3391) to incorporate the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia will be indefinitely postponed.

REPORT ON FOREIGN STREETS AND HIGHWAYS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back the concurrent resolution providing for printing the consular report relating to streets and highways in foreign countries, and I ask for its present consideration. There are certain blanks that I will move to fill.

The concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. MANDERSON on the 15th instant was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed —— thousand copies of the special consular report relating to streets and highways in foreign countries, heretofore published by the Department of State, of which —— thousand copies shall be for the use of the Senate and —— thousand copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. MANDERSON. I wish to state that this work, which is one of the consular reports published by the State Department, was issued in somewhat limited number by the Department of State. The demand for it has been very great, indeed. In response to applications made by myself to the State Department for copies of this report, I was informed by the Secretary of State that their edition is entirely exhausted; and he says further in his letter:

In reply to that portion of your communication wherein you ask my opinion as to whether Congress should not order a special edition of this work, I would say that in view of the great interest now being manifested throughout the country in regard to good highways and the fact that this work contains the world's experience in road building, it would be hard to overestimate the good which would result from a proper general distribution thereof, a distribution which, owing to the limited amount appropriated for the publication of consular reports, this Department can not make.

In view of these facts I move to fill the blanks as they occur, so that the whole number printed shall be 12,000 copies, 4,000 for the Senate and 8,000 for the House of Representatives.

Mr. COCKRELL. In view of the importance of the document and the demand for it, I move to make the number 15,000 copies, 5,000 for the Senate and 10,000 for the House of Representatives. I do not think that is an excessive number.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not object to that amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it is a book that ought to be published and sent broadcast over the country. There is very great demand for it.

Mr. SHERMAN. My own impression is that a large number ought to be printed. There are 300,000 copies of the Agricultural Report printed, and I have had more letters in regard to this than the Agricultural Report.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it ought to be liberally printed, and I have no objection to the Senator from Ohio amending my proposed amendment, and making the number 10,000 and 20,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think about 20,000 or 25,000 copies should printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest 10,000 copies for the Senate and 20,000 copies for the House.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not object to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as proposed to be amended, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 30,000 copies of the special consular report relating to streets and highways in foreign countries, heretofore published by the Department of State, of which 10,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 20,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 3646) to remove the charge of desertion against Alfred Rebsamen; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3647) for the relief of William Martin; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FELTON introduced a bill (S. 3648) for the improvement of San Pedro Bay; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CALL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 125) to suspend approvals of lists of public lands to States or corporations until the further action of Congress; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. McPHERSON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 126) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend all purchases of silver bullion as provided in the act of July 14, 1890; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. McPHERSON. I ask that the joint resolution be read at length. It is very short.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to suspend, until otherwise ordered by Congress, all purchases of silver bullion as provided in the first section of the act of July 14, 1890, entitled "An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes."

Mr. McPHERSON. I desire that the joint resolution may be printed and laid upon the table, to be called up at some future time by myself, after the holiday recess.

The joint resolution was ordered to lie on the table.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. TELLER. Yesterday I introduced a bill (S. 3634) to provide for building and maintaining an Indian industrial school at Unalaska, Alaska, which I intended to have referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, but it appears to have been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I ask that an order may be made discharging the Committee on Military Affairs from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). That order will be made in the absence of objection.

UNLAWFUL DISPOSITION OF PUBLIC LAND.

Mr. CALL submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved, That it be, and is hereby, referred to a special committee of five Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, to inquire and report to the Senate whether there have been approvals of land by the Secretary of the Interior to States or railroad corporations in violation of the acts of Congress, and to report by bill or otherwise the measures necessary for the opening of such land to the use and occupation of citizens of the United States under the homestead laws and for the protection of actual settlers on said land.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, and extra copies of the same.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1484) for the relief of Mary A. Lewis;

A bill (H. R. 8915) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Coffman; and

A bill (H. R. 9649) to provide for the purchase of Fort Brown, Texas.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 6644) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the sale of title of the United States in lot 3 in square south of square 990," approved March 3, 1891;

A bill (H. R. 8760) to provide for the sale of navy-yard lands in the city of Brooklyn; and

A bill (H. R. 8907) to increase the pension of John Malloy.

DELZELL R. BRADFORD.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the bill (H. R. 6737) granting a pension to Delzell R. Bradford, Twenty-fourth Michigan Volunteers. The bill has been passed by the other House and reported favorably by the Senate committee, and I may say that unless it is passed immediately it will do the beneficiary no good.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension law of June 27, 1890, the name of Delzell R. Bradford, late a private in the Twenty-fourth Regiment of Michigan Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, submitted by Mr. TURPIE December 15, 1892, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6737) granting a pension to Delzell R. Bradford, have had the same under consideration, and report:

From the facts stated in the House report on this case, which is hereby approved and made a part of this report, your committee believe this to be a meritorious measure and recommend the passage of the bill.

[House Report No. 1872, Fifty-second Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6737) granting a pension to Delzell R. Bradford, have had the same under consideration and submit the following report:

As shown by the records of the Adjutant-General's Office, the soldier enlisted March 27, 1865, as a private, unassigned, in the Twenty-fourth Regiment Michigan Volunteers, and was honorably discharged June 21, 1865 He filed application for pension September 3, 1890, under the act of June 27, 1890, alleging piles and general debility. The claim was rejected August 6, 1891, on the ground that the claimant was not in the United States service ninety days; therefore not entitled to pension under the provisions of said act.

The claimant alleges that the records of the Adjutant-General's Office are in error in giving the date of his enlistment as March 27, 1865, and that the date should be corrected to read March 17, 1865. In proof thereof he files a certificate from the adjutant-general of Michigan, as follows:

MILITARY DEPARTMENT, MICHIGAN,
ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Lansing, October 20, 1891.

I certify that it appears from official records on file in this office, that private Delzell R. Bradford, company unassigned, Twenty-fourth Regiment Michigan Infantry, enlisted on the 17th day of March, 1865, at Grand Rapids, Mich., and was duly mustered into the service of the United States for the term of one year. Mustered out at Detroit, June 21, 1865.

J. S. FARRAR,
Adjutant-General of Michigan.

G. W. ROBERTSON,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

In an affidavit dated November 25, 1891, the claimant testified that he enlisted on the 17th day of March, 1865, and knows this because he remembers that it was on St. Patrick's day that he enlisted at Grand Rapids, Mich. On the next day, the 18th day of March, he went to Jackson, Mich.; from there was sent to Camp Butler, near Springfield, Ill., where he was taken sick with typhoid pneumonia, and was given a sick leave. When he got able he was discharged at Detroit, June 21, 1865.

Charles Hotchkiss testifies as follows:

I was well and personally acquainted with Delzell R. Bradford prior to his enlistment into the Army. I remember very distinctly the fact of said Bradford's enlistment into the Army. I also remember very well that on St. Patrick's day, March 17, 1865, he was, with myself and other friends, here in the city (Grand Rapids) and at that time he had on the uniform of a soldier. He then informed me that he had enlisted into the United States Army, and I have every reason to believe that his claims were true from the fact that he had on the uniform. I know that that was on March 17, 1865, because of its being St. Patrick's day. I subsequently learned that he had been assigned to the Twenty-fourth Regiment Infantry.

George M. Buck, circuit judge, Kalamazoo, Mich., says, after examining the evidence:

"It seems to me that the proof is ample to show that the record at Washington is wrong and the record at Lansing is right, inasmuch as the two would seem to be of equal force and value, and the proof outside these records sustains the one at Lansing and contradicts the one at Washington."

Owing to the itinerant life he has lived since he was discharged, he admits that it is impossible for him to prove by comrades and physicians incurrence of disabilities in the service and continuation of the same to the present time.

George S. Wood and Nellie B. Wood testify that they are well acquainted with the claimant, that he is in poor health, and that he is suffering with lung and heart trouble and rheumatism and piles. They know him to be unable to perform manual labor, and that he is destitute of means, and is dependent on others who are not legally bound for his support.

George W. Hamilton and E. V. Hamilton testify that they are well acquainted with the claimant and know that he is in destitute circumstances, and is now dependent upon the charity of others not bound for his support; that he is unable to do any kind of manual labor whatever.

Cyrus Bussey, Assistant Secretary of the Interior, in affirming the decision of rejection of the claim, says:

"This Department is governed by the records of the War Department, and the claim can not be admitted unless the records of said Department can be amended to correspond with the date claimed by claimant as the true date of his enlistment."

The inability of the claimant to earn his living by manual labor by reason of physical disabilities having been fully and satisfactorily proved, the only question to be determined by the committee is as to the date of the soldier's enlistment.

After amending the bill in line 5 by striking out of the word "laws" the letter "s," and inserting thereafter the words "of June 27, 1890," your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. According to the unanimous agreement made yesterday, the Chair lays before the Senate the bill (S. 1958) to submit to the Court of Private Land Claims, established by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, the title of William McGarrahan to the Rancho Panoche Grande, in the State of California, and for other purposes; upon which the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator from Virginia to yield to me to call up a resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. Before proceeding with the bill which has been laid before the Senate, I think the concurrent resolution for the holiday adjournment should be disposed of. Whatever the Senate proposes to do with it ought to be done this morning.

Mr. DAWES. That is the resolution I rose to call up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The concurrent resolution was read and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, December 22, they will stand adjourned until Wednesday, January 4, 1893.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to make an appeal to the Senator from Virginia to allow me a moment to call up a bill for present consideration.

Mr. HUNTON. I will yield to the Senator from Nebraska, provided his bill provokes no discussion, and with the understanding that if it shall provoke discussion he will withdraw it.

Mr. PADDOCK. Certainly. It is a bill which was considered on the day prior to the adjournment of the last session, was read at length, and laid aside at the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who, I think, is now satisfied as to its provisions. As I am to leave the Senate to-day or to-morrow, to be absent on some matters of considerable personal concern to myself, until perhaps the month of February, there would perhaps be no chance for me to bring the measure to the attention of the Senate before the close of the session. I desire, therefore, the indulgence of the Senate for its present consideration. It is Calendar No. 174, Senate bill 1674.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1674) incorporating the Society of American Florists.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

Mr. PADDOCK. The bill has heretofore been read at length.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the bill should be read now, as some time has passed since it was last under consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. MILLS. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that in all these acts of incorporation the Government retains the right to alter or amend the charter, and I think such a provision should be inserted in this bill.

Mr. PADDOCK. There is no objection to such an amendment, and I shall very cheerfully accept it.

Mr. MILLS. I hope the Senator will have that amendment inserted, and then I shall have no objection to the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that there be added to the bill the words:

That Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act in whole or in part.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will first be stated.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry were, in line 10, to strike out the name "Joseph C. Vaughan" and insert "John C. Vaughan;" in line 24, after the word "horticulture," to strike out "and for the benefit of its members and the public in general;" in line 26, after the word "authorized," to insert "to adopt a constitution and to make by-laws not inconsistent with law;" and after the words "donated or," at the end of line 30, to strike out "bequests made in other sections of the United States, to adopt a constitution, and to make by-laws not inconsistent with law," and insert "bequeathed in any State or Territory: Provided, That all property so held, and the proceeds thereof, shall be held and used solely for the purposes set forth in this act;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That James Dean, of Bay Ridge, in the State of New York; William J. Stewart, Michael H. Norton, and Patrick Welch, of Boston, in the State of Massachusetts; Edward G. Hill, of Richmond, in the State of Indiana; John N. May, of Summit, in the State of New Jersey; William R. Smith, John Saul, and Benjamin Durfee, of Washington, in the District of Columbia; Myron A. Hunt, of Terre Haute, in the State of Indiana; John Thorpe, Joseph T. Anthony, and John C. Vaughan, of the State of Illinois; Robert Craig, Edwin Lonsdale, and John Burton, of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania; Alexander Murdoch, of Pittsburg, in the State of Pennsylvania; John M. Jordan, of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri; John T. Temple, of Davenport, in the State of Iowa; Charles W. Hoitt, of Nashua, in the State of New Hampshire; William Falconer, of Glen Cove, and Daniel B. Long, of Buffalo, both in the State of New York, and Albert Manda, of Short Hills, in the State of New Jersey, their associates and successors, are hereby created a body corporate and politic, by the name of The Society of American Florists, for the elevation and advancement of horticulture in all its branches, to increase and diffuse the knowledge thereof, and for kindred purposes in the interest of horticulture. Said association is authorized to adopt a constitution and to make by-laws not inconsistent with law, to hold real and personal estate in the District of Columbia, so far only as may be necessary to its lawful ends, to an amount not exceeding $50,000, and such other estate as may be donated or bequeathed in any State or Territory: Provided, That all property so held, and the proceeds thereof, shall be held and used solely for the purposes set forth in this act. The principal office of the association shall be at Washington, in the District of Columbia, but annual meetings may be held in such places as the incorporators or their successors shall determine. Said association shall from time to time report its proceedings to the Secretary of Agriculture, at least once in each year, and said Secretary shall communicate such reports in whole or in part to Congress.

The amendments were agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill:

That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act in whole or in part.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

C. L. CODER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate resumes the consideration of Senate bill 1958.

Mr. SANDERS. I ask the Senator from Virginia to yield to me

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HUNTON. I have yielded several times. I do not know for what purpose the Senator from Montana desires the floor.

Mr. SANDERS. I desire to call up a bill which I think will provoke no discussion.

Mr. HUNTON. If the bill shall provoke discussion will the Senator withdraw it?

Mr. SANDERS. Cheerfully.

Mr. HUNTON. With that understanding I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. SANDERS. I ask the Senate to consider the bill (S. 2576) for the relief of C. L. Coder.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not see the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] present in his seat, and I must object to the bill unless the Senator from Montana has the amendment which the Senator from Nebraska proposes to offer.

Mr. SANDERS. I have it.

Mr. COCKRELL. All right.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to remove the charges of desertion from the military record of C. L. Coder, late a private in Company H, First Regiment Nebraska Volunteers, and grant him an honorable discharge.

Mr. SANDERS. I move to strike out the last five words of the bill—"grant him an honorable discharge"—and insert in lieu thereof the words in writing which I have sent to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 6, after the words "Volunteers and," it is proposed to strike out "grant him an honorable discharge," and insert "left hospital with permission of surgeons, was taken sick, being unfit for duty, remained absent without authority, was arrested and returned to his company, and restored to duty without trial and loss of pay to September 1, 1864, served faithfully, and was granted an honorable discharge."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM M'GARRAHAN—VETO MESSAGE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate resumes the consideration of the bill (S. 1958) to submit to the Court of Private Land Claims, established by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, the title of William McGarrahan to the Rancho Panoche Grande, in the State of California, and for other purposes. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding? on which the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the attention of the Senate for a moment. The bill now pending before the Senate has been under discussion some days. The Senator who has the floor, and who is anxious to proceed if there is to be further discussion from the other side in opposition to the bill, is willing to waive his right to speak if we can get a vote this morning. If, however, the opponents of the bill desire further time to discuss it, of course then the Senator from Virginia prefers to go on with his remarks. I desire to know, if I can obtain the information, whether the opposition to the bill will consent that we take the vote upon it now. If there are to be no further speeches in opposition to the bill I see no reason why we can not take the vote this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SANDERS. I object.

Mr. PLATT. I simply wish to say, as a proposition has been made to take the vote now without further discussion, that as a member of the Judiciary Committee I agreed to the report on the pending bill. The only thing that troubles me about the matter as it now stands is the question of what damages are provided for in this bill. I wish to hear that matter discussed before the vote is taken, and to know what will be the result of the measure of damages provided for if the bill should become a law.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, I presume the debate will go on now in the usual way, and I suppose the Senator from Virginia will resume the floor.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. President, I had hoped that the Senate would act upon the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], and let us come to a vote on the passage of the bill, notwithstanding the veto of the President; but it seems that Senators are unwilling to do so at this time. Therefore I shall pursue the remarks which I commenced last week.

When I concluded the remarks I submitted on that occasion I had traced this case up to a patent signed by the President of the United States, sent back to the Land Department to be issued, where it was mutilated and suppressed. Mr. McGarrahan was not informed of the fact that the President had signed a patent for him until 1870, although it was signed in the year 1863.

In the mean time the opponents, I might say the enemies, of this grant had not been idle. The Senate will recollect that the decree of the district court for the southern district of California confirming this patent was made in 1857, and in 1858 a correction of that decree was made and entered nunc pro tunc as of the 5th day of June, 1857. That case was decided by the district court for the southern district of California, and Pacificus Ord, who had then become the district attorney of the United States for that district, at once took an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. That appeal was docketed in the Supreme Court, the appeal dismissed, and a mandate sent down to the court in California, entered upon its minutes, and the order to execute the original decree was made. Eight months thereafter this order entering a mandate from the Supreme Court of the United States was erased, and in 1861 Judge Ogier, who had entered up the decree of confirmation and the mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States of his own motion, upon the suggestion of the attorney for the new Idria Mining Company had set aside the decree of 1857 confirming the Gomez grant, and ordered a new trial to be had.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I wish he would state how long was the interval between the original decree and the order referred to?

Mr. HUNTON. I was going to state it that moment. I was about to say that I need not inform the lawyers of the Senate when a judge enters up an order in a case and the term ends with that order standing in full force, that that judge is as powerless to interfere with that order as anyone outside of the court. This decree of confirmation was made in 1857; some maintain it was made in 1858. The nunc pro tunc feature of the order of 1858 made it the order of 1857, but whether it was 1857 or 1858, the order setting aside that decree was made by Judge Ogier in 1861, when three terms of the court had intervened.

When Judge Ogier undertook on his own motion to set aside that decree of confirmation he was absolutely functus officio in that particular. As I stated the other day, we have a letter from Goold, the attorney for the New Idria Mining Company, to the Attorney-General of the United States in Washington, in which he said that he would make "a suggestion to Judge Ogier in California which would induce the judge of his own motion to set aside that decree." He did set it aside, and soon after setting aside on his own motion a judgment which he had rendered three years before, Judge Ogier died and Judge Haight came upon the bench as his successor.

When it was called to the attention of Judge Haight that Judge Ogier had entered an order which he had no right to enter, which was upon its face a nullity, and entered without any notice to counsel or parties on the other side, Judge Haight did, as he was obliged to do, set aside that order of Judge Ogier granting a new trial in the case of the Rancho Panoche Grande.

When Judge Haight set aside Judge Ogier's order, he was applied to for an appeal. An appeal from what? Not from his order setting aside Judge Ogier's order, but he was applied to to grant an appeal from the original decree confirming the grant to Gomez of the Rancho Panoche Grande. This motion for an appeal was made in violation of a verbal stipulation between the counsel of the parties, and in the absence of Mr. McGarrahan and his counsel, Judge Haight granted the appeal. As soon as it was known that an appeal had been granted in the case in violation of this stipulation, the parties on both sides agreed that a motion should be made to set aside the order granting the appeal. That motion was continued over until the parties could be heard. When the time came to hear that motion it was argued on both sides, and Judge Haight set aside the order granting the appeal, and then heard an argument on the part of the attorney for the United States asking for the appeal. After full argument he denied the appeal.

So at that point this grant to Gomez was confirmed, appeal had been taken to the United States Supreme Court, where the appeal was docketed and dismissed, the mandate sent down to the court below, and a second effort to get an appeal in the case was absolutely denied by the judge upon the bench. It is certain, therefore, that at that period the case stood upon the docket of the district court of the United States for the southern district of California as a grant confirmed, with no appeal taken from the order of confirmation.

The counsel for the New Idria Mining Company were not disposed to give up; they demanded a transcript of the record, the record was made out, and no order of appeal was appended to it. The Attorney-General in the city of Washington wrote down to the clerk, whose name was Wheeler, to send up a perfect transcript of the record, and to embrace within that record the order of appeal which they said Judge Haight had granted. Mr. Wheeler replied that there was no order of appeal in the case, and he could not grant the request of the parties because when he came to examine the record of the case he found there was no appeal in it. They undertook to threaten and bully this man Wheeler, whose letter is in the record of this case and one of the most manly letters I have ever read from anybody, in which he says he is perfectly willing to give anybody who will pay for it a transcript of the record as it exists in his office, but is not willing to give a copy of the order of appeal when that order was set aside by the judge of his court. An appeal was made to Judge Haight to force this clerk to give this transcript as they desired it. Judge Haight sustained his clerk, and said that his clerk could not be called upon to make that transcript with the order of appeal in it because there was no appeal granted.

Mr. President, at this stage of the case the parties, still not desirous to surrender, had a copy of that record made up in the city of Washington. Under a law of Congress which authorized the district attorney in California to make out a transcript of the record, it was made out in the city of Washington and sent to California for the district attorney to certify it up. It was made out and signed in the northern district of California, when the law required that it should be made up from the records in the district where the court was sitting.

It was made up, however, in the northern district of California, signed by the district attorney, and the entire proceeding before the land commissioners was omitted from the transcript. That transcript came up to the city of Washington, to the Attorney-General of the United States, and it had the order of appeal which Judge Haight had stricken out, and did not have the order of Judge Haight striking out the order of appeal. That transcript of the record did not reach the city of Washington until the year 1864. In the mean time the President of the United States had signed a patent for this property to Gomez, and ordered the Land Department to issue it to Mr. McGarrahan. When the transcript—and I beg to dwell a little upon that, as my friend asked me the question the other day, and I was not altogether prepared to answer it at the moment—reached the city of Washington, reached the Supreme Court, this patent had already been signed by the President of the United States and sent down to the Land Office to be delivered.

Mr. FAULKNER. In order that I may understand properly the facts, I ask the Senator whether the Supreme Court has not passed upon that question, whether it has not decided that the appeal was taken on the 25th day of August, 1862, and the signature claimed to have been made by the President of the United States to the patent was in the spring of 1863? Whether the appeal had reached the Supreme Court of the United States is an immaterial matter. The question is whether the appeal had been taken and whether or not it suspended all further proceedings.

Mr. HUNTON. If the Senator from West Virginia will have a little patience, I will come to all that in due time, because I do not mean to omit any point in the case.

Mr. President, although the Supreme Court afterward decided that this appeal was taken in 1862, the transcript of the record did not reach the city of Washington until 1864, and when it went before the President of the United States it was fully argued. It was also fully argued before the then Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Smith, and afterwards before Mr. Usher, and they decided that there was no appeal pending, that the order of appeal had been stricken out, and that it was then too late to take an appeal, because the nunc pro tunc decree related back to the 5th day of June, 1857, and on the 25th day of December, 1862, more than five years had elapsed. Therefore the Secretary of the Interior twice over and the President of the United States upon full argument decided that the time had passed in which an appeal could be taken and the United States was not at all interested in controverting the right of Gomez to a patent for this land.

But I was going on to say that this transcript was made out in the illegal manner I have mentioned, and when it came up for consideration, although it was after the President had signed the patent, the Supreme Court knew nothing of the signature of the President to the patent, and they went on and decided this case as if there had been nothing done by the Land Department or by the President of the United States.

Senators on the other side, I repeat, are wrong in saying that these questions were passed upon by the Supreme Court, because when this irregular and illegal transcript of the record was docketed in the Supreme Court of the United States a motion was made by the counsel for Mr. McGarrahan to dismiss that appeal. It was made upon several grounds. First, that there was no citation. It will not be denied that unless an appeal was taken in the court at the time or during the term at which the judgment was rendered and in the presence of the other party, that a citation was absolutely necessary. In this case we say that the court decided this question on the 5th day of June, 1857. The Supreme Court treats it as a final decree on the 5th of February, 1858; but take either time that Senators may please to adopt, when this appeal was improvidently granted by Judge Haight, and afterwards set aside as it was in 1862, therefore it was not at the same term at which the original confirmation order was entered up, and not being at the same term the law requires that a citation shall be given to the opposite party. The Supreme Court decided otherwise.

Mr. President, it is not for me to criticise the opinion of the Supreme Court. We all have the greatest veneration for the decisions of that body, but I will undertake to say that if the Supreme Court decided that proposition correctly it has decided a hundred others incorrectly, because the very same point in other cases has been decided the other way in probably a hundred instances.

But that was not the only point upon which we asked for a dismissal of the appeal. We said the time had passed within which the judge could grant an appeal.

Let us look at that a moment. There is not a Senator on the floor who does not know that a judge sitting upon the bench, when he has made a decree and rendered a judgment and there is a failure to enter that decree or judgment upon the rolls of the court, when the omission is found out, has a right to enter an order nunc pro tunc, and it always dates back to the time when the original decree was pronounced or rendered.

The authorities are numerous, but I can not detain the Senate to refer to them. It will, however, hardly be denied by any Senator on the floor of the Senate. If that proposition be true, then the decree confirming this grant to Gomez was made on the 5th day of June, 1857. If that be true, on the 25th of August, 1862, when Judge Haight improvidently ordered the appeal, which is relied upon here, more than five years had elapsed. The language of the old judiciary act, giving this right of appeal in cases of this character, is that an appeal may be taken five years from the rendering or pronouncing of a judgment or decree.

In this instance the opinion of Judge Ogier on the 5th day of June, 1857, was not only rendered and pronounced, but reduced to writing, and a copy of it is in the record in this case. When in 1858 he found that this order had not been entered he did as he had a right to do—ordered that that decree should be entered nunc pro tunc, and it has been treated all the way through as a decree of the 5th day of June, 1857.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Senator to state to the Senate the reasons which the Supreme Court gave why it treated that decree as of February, I think it was, 1858, instead of June, 1857.

Mr. HUNTON. In the last opinion given in the case he does not give his reasons.

Mr. FAULKNER. Did not the Supreme Court of the United States, in passing upon that question, draw a distinction and speak of a decree entered nunc pro tunc as having effect from the date it was intended to be entered as between the parties, but that as to the purpose of an appeal it could only have effect from the date of its actual entry upon the record? Was not that the view?

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir; I do not think it was, because we know the fact that there are cases to this extent——

Mr. FAULKNER. I am not asking the Senator what cases there are in reference to other litigants. I ask if that was not the distinct ground upon which the Supreme Court answered the objection to the appeal.

Mr. HUNTON. I do not recollect that he stated the ground. I say it was, in the language of all the authorities, a nunc pro tunc decree, and that it was a decree, according to all the authorities, of the 5th of June, 1857.

There was another ground for dismissing this appeal in the motion of Mr. McGarrahan, and that was that the transcript of the record had not been filed in the Supreme Court at the next term succeeding the appeal taken in the court below. That without excuse is fatal to an appeal, we all know. The ordinary remedy, when a party can not get the transcript of a record, is by a mandamus to the clerk. In this case they wrote down to the clerk, and the clerk says: "I give you the transcript, but I can not append to it the order of appeal, because that was stricken out by the judge;" and more than two years after the appeal was taken this transcript of the record was made up in the city of Washington in the Attorney-General's office, sent down to the northern instead of the southern district of California, and signed by the district attorney, leaving out the order of Judge Haight rescinding his former order and denying an appeal.

They refused to dismiss the appeal. Then the case came up at a subsequent term for hearing upon the merits. I shall not detain the Senate long, but I desire to call the attention of Senators for a moment to the opinion of Judge Clifford upon the merits of this case. He says:

Regarding the case as regularly before the court, it becomes necessary to examine the merits of the claim. Some suspicion attaches to the claim, because it is made for 4 leagues of land, whereas the only document introduced in support of it, which is of the least probative force represents the original claimant as having asked for but 3 leagues.

Mr. President, the record bristles with evidence to show that when this original petition was filed and Gomez's papers had been lost in the exigencies of war he had nothing before him at that moment and he did by petition ask for 3 leagues of land, more or less; but when the testimony came in before the land commissioners the proof was that he had a grant for 4 leagues of land and no more. When the court first said he was entitled to 3 leagues of land, more or less, the district attorney, Pacificus Ord, who had become interested in the grant by a fee contingent upon the success of the application for the grant, came in and said that the expression "3 leagues of land, more or less," would embrace all the lands in the exterior boundaries of the grant up to 11 square leagues, and that it should be for only 4 leagues and no more; and he corrected the decree against his own interests and had the decree entered up for 4 leagues of land and no more. Mr. Justice Clifford goes on to say:

Document referred to purports to be the petition of the claimant to the governor, and there is appended to it the usual informe; but there is no concession or grant, nor is there any satisfactory evidence that any title of any kind was ever issued by the governor to the claimant.

The testimony before the court below was that while the grant was never found, every paper connected with the grant was found except the grant. Every paper which necessarily led up to the issuing of the grant was found and laid before the land commissioners in California. Judge Clifford says:

But there is no concession or grant, nor is there any satisfactory evidence that any title of any kind was ever issued by the governor to the claimant.

The evidence upon that point before the court below was the testimony of one witness, who swore positively that he had seen the grant and knew the handwriting of Governor Micheltorena and that it was a grant of 4 leagues of land to Mr. Gomez, and he goes on to state where that land was. That was not all the testimony, and although Judge Clifford was right in saying that but one witness had ever seen the grant, the other witnesses examined proved everything except the finding of the grant. Every paper was present before the court below to show that a grant had been given except the grant itself. The existence of that grant was proved by one witness, who positively swore that he had seen the grant and knew the handwriting of the governor and that it was genuine.

Mr. President, I do not mean to criticise Judge Clifford for that remark, but it does seem to me that where there is no countervailing testimony the testimony of one witness whose character has not been assailed is as good as a hundred. Here was the testimony of one witness and the testimony of corroborating papers which proved positively that the grant had been made by Governor Micheltorena.

I may as well state here that after this remark of Judge Clifford, for whom we all have the highest respect, McGarrahan took other testimony. I have before me the testimony of five or six witnesses, two of whom saw the grant and recognized it. Another one saw the book in the office where a record of the grant was kept, and among the lists of grants made by Micheltorena was the grant to Gomez of the Rancho Panoche Grande. I will read the testimony of these witnesses.

MAURICE GONZALES'S AFFIDAVIT.

Maurice Gonzales deposes:

That on the 16th day of March, 1844, he went to the office of the secretary of state in Monterey; that Gomez was there, and deponent asked him what paper that was, and Gomez replied that it was the petition for the Panoche Grande; that petition was written in the handwriting of Gomez. He also saw an informe, signed by Governor Micheltorena, Manuel Jimeno, secretary of state, and Rodriguez, alcalde of San Juan; that afterwards, during the latter portion of March of the same year, deponent was again at the office of the secretary of state and saw Gomez, who asked deponent how he succeeded with his business, or his expediente, and that he said to Gomez, "There is my paper yet," referring to a paper which was then on the table, supposing it was the petition of deponent, and Gomez replied, "That paper is mine, by which is granted to me the rancho of the Panoche Grande;" that afterwards, in the year 1846, Manuel Dutra offered to mortgage deponent the title of the Panoche Grande, which title was of Gomez, granted by Micheltorena to Vicente Gomez, and did pledge it to him for $60. Deponent furthermore states that, being in the office of the secretary of state, he saw in the blotter or draft-book (borrador) that the grant and title had been made by Micheltorena to Gomez.

JOAQUIN ESCAMILLA'S AFFIDAVIT.

Joaquin Escamilla deposes:

That in the year 1846 he was second alcalde of Monterey; that in that year he saw in his office, in the possession of Gomez, a grant for the Rancho Panoche Grande, granted to Gomez by Micheltorena; also that said grant had the name of Micheltorena to it, and that it was offered to one Dutra for security for some money Gomez owed him.

J. MAR'NO BONILLA'S AFFIDAVIT.

J. Mar'no Bonilla deposes:

That being secretary to the superior tribunal of justice in Monterey in the year 1844, Gomez asked him one day to lend him $8 to buy some stamped paper, or draw said paper on his account from Don José Ma. Cestanores, promising deponent that he would quickly repay him, and urging him to do so, as he wished the paper in the title of the Panoche Grande, which Micheltorena had granted him, and that Gomez showed deponent the expediente of such grant; that deponent gave him the sealed paper asked for, and after some days a Portuguese, Manuel Dutra, asked deponent if he knew the land, and wished to be informed of its qualities, as he wished to buy it, and had in his possession the title given to Gomez. Deponent replied to Dutra that he did not know the land; that deponent never saw the title, but knew Gomez had it, because he had said so, and because, in the year 1845, having taken the government archives from Monterey to Los Angeles, to Manuel Jimeno, who was secretary of the government, he saw a loose sheet of written memorandum, containing notes and memorandums of grants of land, and among them he recollected having seen that the land of Panoche Grande was granted to Vicente Gomez.

NICANOR CASTILLO'S AFFIDAVIT.

Nicanor Castillo deposes:

That in 1844 he was a resident of Monterey; that during the month of August or September of that year he had drawn a petition, to be presented to Micheltorena, praying for a grant to him of the lands "La Panccha." Pending the presentation of said petition, deponent had a conversation with Gomez: that deponent stated the nature of his petition; that Gomez replied that deponent was too late in making said petition; that he, Gomez, had already a title to said lands, and at the same time showed deponent a document, with the signature of Micheltorena attached, which he stated was his title to said lands, and deponent, believing that Gomez had the bona fide title, did not present his petition.

JOSÉ FERNANDEZ'S AFFIDAVIT.

José Fernandez deposes:

That in the year 1844 he saw a grant of the place called La Panoche Grande, which had been granted to Vicente Gomez by Micheltorena, in the possession of Don Maximo Martinez, who brought it to him in order that he should read it, that he might advise him (Martinez) about it.

GABRIEL DE LA TORRE'S AFFIDAVIT.

Gabriel de la Torre deposes:

That he saw the grant of the rancho de la Panoche Grande, in Monterey, in the year 1844, in the possession of Gomez; that he read the grant, and that it was a concession of Panoche Grande to Gomez by Micheltorena; that he afterwards saw the grant in the possession of one Dutra, who had it for Gomez; that the grant was duly signed by Micheltorena and Jimeno; that he knew their handwriting and signatures, having seen them write very often; that he knew the river San Benito, in the vicinity of the Rancho Panoche Grande, and had known it more than twenty years; that said river was known and called by the name of Santa Ana, and that it had always been called in those years Santa Ana; that in San Juan and vicinity it was called San Benito.

JOSÉ ANTONIO ALVISO'S AFFIDAVIT.

José Antonio Alviso deposes:

That he had known the place called La Panoche Grande (which is found to the south of the Panoche Chiquita) for about thirty years; that he knew the brook of the Panoche, which runs toward the valley of San Joaquin and from the sierra of the Panoche; that he knew the brook or river which runs to the west from the summit of Panoche, and which was formerly known by the name of the Santa Ana River, and later, river of San Benito, and still later as the San Juan; that he has seen the map drawn by E. H. Dyer, surveyor, dated in March, 1865, and believes, according to his knowledge, that it is correctly drawn, according to the lines and points designated on it.

GENERAL REPUTE.

In addition to this testimony, we introduce ex-Governor H. D. Cooke as a witness, who testifies that he went to California, in the town of Monterey, in the winter of 1847-'48, and was there at intervals for several years; that he knew Gomez, and that he knew he was the owner of a rancho in the San Juan region, by common report; that it was situated anywhere from 50 to 75 miles from Monterey, in the San Juan Mountains, considerably south of east.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will ask the Senator from Virginia to be kind enough to state in what proceeding the evidence was taken to which he now refers?

Mr. HUNTON. I thought I stated that after Judge Clifford had pronounced his opinion, that there was no satisfactory evidence of the grant, this additional testimony was taken.

Mr. FAULKNER. In what proceeding, the decree of the court being final?

Mr. HUNTON. I think it was a proceeding before a committee of Congress.

Mr. FAULKNER. Ah, before a committee of Congress, not in a judicial tribunal?

Mr. HUNTON. I think not.

So, Mr. President, whatever may have been the opinion of Judge Clifford upon the satisfactory evidence in the court below, there is no question now that the testimony is perfectly overwhelming that Gomez got the grant for the Panoche Grande.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). Will the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SANDERS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Virginia if the additional testimony which he reads was not presented before and taken by a committee of this body as additional testimony to prove that the grant was good, and if that committee in their report did not say that notwithstanding this additional testimony they were still not satisfied that there was a grant?

Mr. HUNTON. I should be glad to see such a report; I do not recollect it. But the Senator will be kind enough not to interrupt me further, so that I may get on with my remarks.

I say, Mr. President, that whatever may have been the opinion of Judge Clifford at the time he rendered this opinion of the Supreme Court, there can not be a doubt now in the mind of any man who does not wish to doubt that Gomez got his grant from Governor Micheltorena. If there was nothing else in the case but this additional testimony that was taken after the decision, it seems to me that is enough for the Congress of the United States to give a new trial to Mr. McGarrahan upon, because if that entered into the element of the decision against him, then I maintain that having proven beyond peradventure since that decision was rendered that the grant was made, it is enough to satisfy the Congress of the United States that there ought to be a new trial given according to the terms of this bill.

But I go on with Judge Clifford's opinion:

He states in his petition to the land commissioners that he obtained the map in the record from the proper officers of the Department; but the alleged fact is not satisfactorily proved. Four witnesses were examined by the claimant before the land commissioners, but only one of the number pretended that he had ever seen the grant, and his statements are quite too indefinite to be received as satisfactory proof.

Instead of proving possession under the grant, it is satisfactorily shown that he never occupied it at all.

And the same court has decided in frequent cases, which have been followed by all the courts ever since in like cases, that possession was not necessary to the validity of a grant!

Land commissioners rejected the claim, but before it came up for hearing in the district court, his attorney had been appointed district attorney of the United States, and the proofs show that he conveyed 2 leagues of the land to the district attorney. Circumstances of the confirmation of the claim in the district court are fully stated in the opinion of this court given when the mandate was revoked and recalled. Comment upon those circumstances is unnecessary, except to say that the confirmation was fraudulently obtained.

Although the decree was fraudulently obtained, still, inasmuch as it is correct in form, it is sufficient to sustain the appeal for the purpose of correcting the error.

The learned judge in that opinion says that this decree of confirmation was fraudulently obtained. I beg to say that, according to the testimony legally before the Supreme Court, there was not a scintilla of fraud in the case, because it has been settled by the Supreme Court of the United States that an appellate court must decide the case as it stood in the court below, and that no evidence can be taken after the case reaches the appellate court, except in prize and admiralty cases. I beg leave to refer the gentlemen on the other side to authority for the position which I take. It will be found in the case of Russell vs. Sothern, in 12 Howard.

If that be the law, and the Supreme Court have said it was, then when this case went up to the Supreme Court the second time in the manner I have stated, it went up on the decision of the district court rendered either on the 5th of June, 1857, or, as Judge Clifford maintains, on the 5th of February, 1858. When that decision was made, whether you date it in 1857 or 1858, there was not in the record of the case a scintilla of testimony which goes to show that there was any misconduct whatever. According to the decision of the Supreme Court, cited above, that court ought to have taken the case as it appeared there in the court below, and if there was error committed by the court below corrected it, and if there was not any to affirm it.

But in the mean time the suggestions to which I referred the other day had been made to several gentlemen in California, and out of California, too, and one Hartman filed his affidavit long after 1858. In 1862, I believe, he filed his affidavit, in which he says that he never was the counsel of Mr. Gomez in procuring a confirmation of this grant. Then take the evidence of Mr. Sims. He says there never was an appeal granted in 1858 and carried to the Supreme Court and dismissed and the mandate sent down. When we come to the affidavit of Hartman that he never was the counsel of Gomez, he is distinctly contradicted by the record of two courts and by the testimony of four or five witnesses, because the record of the court of the northern district of California, where this case was first sent, says that Hartman applied to have the case removed from the northern to the southern district. As the attorney of Gomez he receipted for the papers. He carried them down to the southern district and docketed them there, and when it was over he demanded of McGarrahan, as assignee of Gomez, a fee for his services.

All this is proven beyond a peradventure. But that is not all. When McGarrahan said, "I do not owe you a fee; Gomez must pay you," he said: "Well, I paid some costs in getting this case from the northern district to the southern." He produced his bill, and McGarrahan paid it, and took the receipt of this man Hartman for the fees that he had paid as counsel of Gomez in removing this case from the northern to the southern district. So perjury is branded upon the brow of this man Hartman so deep that it could not be gotten off.

Mr. WHITE. May I ask the Senator from Virginia a question right here?

Mr. HUNTON. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. Does not the record show that in the conversation between Mr. Hartman and Mr. McGarrahan, Mr. Hartman said, "You owe me a better fee than you paid Ord, because although Ord helped you, I rendered a great deal more service than Ord," Ord being the man who was the district attorney of the United States and was supposed to be resisting the claim?

Mr. HUNTON. But he did demand the fee for services rendered as his counsel. The only point that I make is that when Hartman swore he was never the counsel of Gomez in the case, he committed deliberate perjury, because he knew he had been, and we have his receipt, where Mr. McGarrahan paid him some twenty-odd dollars for fees that he had paid in removing the case from the northern to the southern district of California as the counsel of Gomez or McGarrahan.

Now, it was upon the testimony of Hartman and the testimony of Sims that Judge Clifford relied. Pacificus Ord made a statement under oath which the court kindly agreed to publish with its opinion, by which he puts himself upon the highest possible ground. He says that he notified the Attorney-General in Washington that he was interested in some of these cases and wanted a man appointed to represent the United States in those cases, and they paid no attention to it.

When this confirmation was made for 3 leagues of land, more or less, which gave to the parties 11 square leagues of land within the boundaries of that grant, one-half of which belonged to Pacificus Ord, he came forward and said, "The title was for 4 square leagues and no more," and had the decree corrected from the evidence already on file. Not only that, but when the case was decided and confirmed by the district court in California, Pacificus Ord took an appeal to the Supreme Court.

Mr. WHITE. In what name did he take the appeal?

Mr. HUNTON. He took an appeal in the name of the United States.

Mr. WHITE. Does the Senator think that Mr. Ord put himself upon the highest possible ground when he admits that before that date he had acquired an interest adverse to the United States, and with that adverse interest in his possession, and having an adversary interest as counsel, he appeared and acted for the party against whom he had an interest? Is that the highest possible ground for a counsel in such a cause?

Mr. HUNTON. I am not arguing what is the highest possible ground, but I am arguing now to show that Pacificus Ord did nothing in his own interest against the interest of the United States. If the authorities in Washington had sent out an appointment to a man to conduct the appeal in these cases he would not have appeared in them at all; but they did not do it, and when he found that the confirmation had been made for 3 leagues, more or less, which gave 11 leagues under the decisions of the court, he promptly corrected it against his own interest, and when that confirmation was entered up he promptly took an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. If Pacificus Ord was determined to cheat for himself and to cheat the Government that he in part represented, when that confirmation decree was entered up by Judge Ogier he would not have taken an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. But acting, I say, in the very best of faith to the Government he was serving and against his own interest, he took this appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

I say, furthermore, that when Judge Clifford in his opinion comes to assail the grant of McGarrahan or Gomez he goes outside of the record that properly comes up before an appellate tribunal. According to the decision of Russell vs. Sothern that I referred to awhile ago, in 12 Howard, an appellate court can only consider the papers that the court below had before it. In no case, except in prize and admiralty cases, can an appellate court take additional testimony. The court in California did not have an affidavit, did not have a suggestion before it of any fraudulent means for a confirmation of the grant; but such affidavits were admitted and passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States. If the Supreme Court of the United States was right in admitting and considering those affidavits, taken several years after the decision of the court below, then this same court in many other cases was wrong.

But, Mr. President, I state here (and I believe I can prove it by the Supreme Court itself) that when this case came up, the transcript of the record reaching the Supreme Court in 1864, if the Supreme Court had known that a coördinate branch of the Government having like powers and privileges in the premises as the Supreme Court had confirmed the grant and issued the patent and ordered it to be delivered to Mr. McGarrahan the appeal would have been dismissed. Why do I say this? I say it, first, because we know that where the executive department has authority to do an act which involves judgment and discretion and does do that act the action of that department is as binding and final upon the other departments of the Government, whether the Supreme Court or any other, as if it had been the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States itself.

Long before the transcript reached the city of Washington, long before the Supreme Court had taken hold of the case, the two Secretaries of the Interior and the President of the United States, after full argument, had decided that this patent was valid, that the right of appeal had gone by lapse of time, and ordered the patent to be issued. But that fact was not known to the Supreme Court when this case came up. I believe if it had been known the Supreme Court would have dismissed the appeal upon the ground that the question involved in the appeal had been decided by a coördinate branch of the Government and was no longer an open question. I have some authority upon that point from the same court, and I beg to trouble the Senate with it.

After it was discovered that the patent had been signed by the President and recorded in the Land Office, Mr. McGarrahan considered his title perfect to the land, and he brought an action of ejectment against the New Idria Mining Company in California to recover possession. Every lawyer knows that when a party brings an action of ejectment he has to recover upon the strength of his own title, which must be perfect in itself, in order to enable him to recover. This action of ejectment was brought in California, and finally found its way to the Supreme Court of the United States by appeal. The Supreme Court say:

> The Federal question in this case is, whether the record in the volume kept at the General Land Office at Washington for the recording of patents of the United States issued upon California confirmed Mexican grants, relied upon by McGarrahan as evidence of his title, proves a conveyance by the United States.

That was the question before the Supreme Court of the United States, and the only Federal question involved in that case. When the court came to pronounce its opinion I beg leave to read the concluding sentence:

> We are of the opinion that, because this record does not show a patent countersigned by the recorder, it is not sufficient to prove title in the party under whom McGarrahan claims. This makes it unnecessary to consider any of the other questions which have been argued; and the judgment is affirmed.

I beg the attention of Senators to this concluding sentence in the opinion of the court in this ejectment case that came up from California. The question before the court was, did Mr. McGarrahan have a perfect title to this land, upon which he could recover in ejectment; and the proof of title was the grant of a patent signed by Mr. Lincoln, sent to the General Land Office, put upon the record, the seal of the office attached, but without sufficient proof that the recorder of the Land Office ever countersigned the patent, and upon that ground, and that ground alone, the court decide that because the recorder's name is not there signed to the patent it therefore is not a perfect conveyance; that if it had been there it would have been a perfect title, and McGarrahan would have had a right to maintain the action of ejectment on that patent thus signed.

Mr. President, that was long after the decision by Judge Clifford, to which I called the attention of the Senate a few minutes ago. He had dismissed the case, declared the petition to be fraudulent, dismissed it out and out, and when this case came up in the ninety-sixth volume of United States Reports the same Supreme Court do not say "Why, we can not entertain this proposition, because this court has decided that that land grant was fraudulent." They do not rely upon that decision, but they say that McGarrahan can not recover because the recorder of the Land Office had not countersigned the patent. Now, what is the meaning of that?

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Senator from Virginia, if he will permit me, whether that was not a question at issue between the parties in the pleadings in that case, they resting their title upon the patent——

Mr. HUNTON. I said so, sir.

Mr. FAULKNER. And not upon the original grant from the Government of Mexico. Consequently the Supreme Court did not have to pass upon that question at all.

Mr. HUNTON. The controversy in that case was not whether he had gotten a grant, because the grant of itself would not have allowed him to maintain an action of ejectment. He does not get a perfect title to that land until the Government of the United States issues its patent. The patent was issued, and McGarrahan considered when it was signed and recorded in the Land Office that his title was perfect, not upon the grant alone, but upon the grant followed up by a patent signed by the President of the United States. When the Supreme Court of the United States come to pass in the action of ejectment upon the title of McGarrahan to the Panoche Grande the only objection made to that title was that the recorder had neglected his duty in not countersigning the patent.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Senator whether that was not the only new evidence brought out upon which the title of McGarrahan rested, and the Supreme Court having passed on the original grant and the title having rested upon the patent, all the Supreme Court had to do in order to defeat the claimant was to hold that his patent was not valid?

Mr. HUNTON. But the Supreme Court did not intimate in this opinion from which I have read that the grant of Micheltorena was fraudulent and void. It does not say that we have declared that grant to be fraudulent; it does not declare that we have decided against that grant, and therefore no valid patent can be issued upon it. But the court say that because the recorder had not countersigned that patent it is not valid to make a perfect title upon which an action of ejectment can be brought.

Now, sir, what do I argue from that? That when this ejectment case was decided the Supreme Court had come into the possession of the fact of which it was ignorant before, that the President of the United States and two of the Secretaries of the Interior had declared the grant to be valid, honest, and proper and ordered a patent to be issued upon it, and this coördinate branch of the Government having decided it and having the same power to decide it that the Supreme Court had, and having decided it before the Supreme Court did decide it, the Supreme Court in the ejectment case treated the former decision as a nullity, because they had acted in a matter in which they had no jurisdiction. The President and his two Secretaries had already decided that he had a proper land grant and ordered a patent to be issued upon it. There can not be any escape from that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (H. R. 7845) defining "options" and "futures," imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and requiring such dealers and persons engaged in selling certain products to obtain license, and for other purposes.

Mr. SANDERS. I ask unanimous consent that the bill now under consideration may be proceeded with, without displacing the bill which the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] has in charge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside in order that the discussion may proceed upon the McGarrahan bill, so-called. Is there objection?

Mr. WASHBURN. I can not agree to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection to the request of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WASHBURN. If the debate were nearly closed I should not object, but as it is likely to run for a long time I do not feel that I would be justified in permitting it to go on.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the bill which has been the subject of discussion this morning may be resumed to-morrow immediately after the regular routine business of the morning hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent of the Senate that at the expiration of the routine business to-morrow morning the consideration of the bill known as the McGarrahan bill may be resumed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. PERKINS. The Senator in charge of the unfinished business has consented to give way for a few minutes that I may speak upon the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] early in the present session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the purpose indicated by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Kansas calls up a joint resolution, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 117) authorizing the appointment of a commission to treat with the five civilized tribes of the Indian Territory with a view of making agreements to induce them to take homesteads in severalty.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I am in sympathy with the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], yet I am frank to confess that I somewhat doubt whether in a practical way anything can be accomplished by the appointment of such a commission. For almost a quarter of a century I have lived a neighbor to many of the Cherokee Indians, and am quite familiar with the situation in the Indian Territory. I fully indorse what has been said upon the floor of this Chamber as to the propriety and necessity of organizing a government in the Indian Territory that will give protection to person and to property and at the same time protect to the Cherokee Indians and to the civilized tribes the rights that have been guaranteed to them by treaty stipulations.

The growth and development of our country has been such that these reservations, constituting the Indian Territory, are now surrounded by growing and by intelligent communities. Railroads are traversing the reservations, and the demands of civilization and commerce are such that, as has been suggested on the floor of this Chamber, the civilized tribes must comprehend and realize that it is only a question of a little time when they must either consent to an organized Territorial or State government or that it will be forced upon them by the Congress of the United States.

The pending resolution contemplates the appointment of a commission, that negotiations may be conducted with the civilized tribes to induce them if possible to take their lands in severalty and to consent to the sale of the excess. If the Cherokees should consent to take their lands in severalty and they should be given 160 acres each it would exhaust substantially their entire home reservation. This is not the case, however, with the Choctaws and the Chickasaws or with the Creeks, and this in some measure emphasizes the necessity and propriety of such legislation as I have briefly suggested and the propriety of negotiations such as are contemplated by the joint resolution.

The Senator from Missouri, in addressing the Senate, called attention to the conditions existing in the Indian Territory. I desire somewhat briefly to emphasize what he has stated and perhaps in part to repeat what may have been suggested by him. As was stated by him, the population of that Territory when the census was taken in 1890 was, in round numbers, 111,000 people, exclusive of the Indian population. The Indian population is in round numbers 68,000. So taking the white population and the Indian population, when the census was taken, there were almost 180,000 people in that Territory. Since that time there has been a very large white population moving into that Territory, and it is estimated now that there are nearly or quite 250,000 people in the Territory, residing there, engaged in business, cultivating fields and carrying on the avocations that are known to civilized communities and to the settled sections of our country.

Notwithstanding this great population, as has been suggested, it is insisted by the Indians that they should maintain their tribal organizations, retain their reservations in common, negotiate treaties, exercise the powers of foreign nations, acknowledge no allegiance to the Government of the United States, levy their own taxes, legislate and govern for themselves as independent sovereignties, and yet as they confess, exercise or possess no power or jurisdiction over the great white population that is now located or domiciled among them, and thus perpetuate and continue existing conditions.

The Cherokees are asking, under a treaty that is now pending in this body as well as in the other House, that those who are living among them and known as intruders should be evicted and removed. As has been so well stated on the floor of this Chamber, that treaty if ratified imposes upon the Government of the United States a very great responsibility. It imposes upon the Government of the United States the responsibility of removing from 1,500 to 1,700 families, probably 7,500 people in the aggregate, many of whom claim that they have rights in this country. It imposes upon the Government the necessity of removing this population from the Territory known as the Cherokee country, upon the demand of the principal chief of their nation. This is independent of the population in the four remaining civilized tribes.

If these people should be removed they would have to be conducted to some section of our common country, and at once the question would present itself, where shall these people be taken? Shall they be removed to Kansas and set down upon the prairies of that State? Shall they be taken to Arkansas? Shall they be taken to Texas? Shall they be taken to the Territory of Oklahoma? What disposition shall be made of this population, many of whom would be left in destitution and in want? And again what shall be done with their improvements? Many of them, at least quite a considerable number, have lived there for twenty years. Quite a considerable number of them have very valuable improvements, and insist that they have rights which ought to be recognized by the Government of the United States, and that they should be recognized by the Cherokee Nation as citizens, and so they protest against removal.

This presents one of the questions not necessarily involved in the joint resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri, but one of the questions incident to the consideration of the conditions existing in the Indian Territory. My judgment is that instead of adopting a measure such as is contemplated here, we should resort to more heroic measures and provide for statehood for the Indian Territory. In Oklahoma they have, as is estimated, a population of 150,000 people. As I have suggested, there are probably to-day in the Indian Territory 250,000 people.

Take the population of those two Territories and it makes a population of 400,000 people, or substantially that. If the Oklahoma country and the Indian Territory proper should be admitted as a State it would bring at once into the Union a State with 400,000 people, a great, growing, prosperous commonwealth, and would in a great measure, in my judgment, solve the difficulties that confront us as a legislative body, and that confront us as a nation when we attempt to consider the conditions existing in the Indian Territory to-day.

I am not unmindful of the fact that under the treaties heretofore negotiated with these Indians we can not divest them of the title to the lands that they possess except by their consent. They have been given perhaps what may be considered an absolute fee to the lands they occupy, conditioned, however, and absolute in that sense, that they are not to take up arms against the Government of the United States; that they are not to abandon them, and that they are not to become extinct. If they should become extinct as Indians or if they should abandon the lands they would forfeit them to the United States. But with those conditions and limitations it is admitted that the title is theirs.

So in considering the conditions existing there we have embarassments to contend with, and hence, as I have suggested, my judgment is that the best solution of this question would be to at once organize a State government there for that people, embracing Oklahoma, and admit them into the Union as a State. We would confer upon them the privileges and benefits of Statehood; we would confer upon them privileges and benefits of representation in this body; we would confer upon them the privileges and benefits of representation in the other House; and yet we would preserve to them their rights as individuals and their privileges as Indians and the title to the lands they occupy. I do not know why the rights which have been given to them under the treaties that have been negotiated with them might not be respected and protected, and yet have them brought into the Union as a State.

I do not forget, however, that condition of their treaty which provides that Territorial government shall not be extended over them except by their consent. It might be that if they did not consent to Statehood, so much of the treaty would be violated by bringing them into the Union as a State. But when we consider the surroundings, when we consider the growth and development of the country, when we consider the conditions existing there with railroads, growing towns, and the large white population, and when we consider the necessities, generally speaking, of this Nation, it seems to me that if an objection is made by those people and they should refuse to accept Statehood, the Congress of the United States would be justified in imposing it upon them.

I agree with very much that the distinguished Senator from Missouri has said concerning the conditions in the Indian Territory. I think, perhaps, he was unnecessarily severe in the criticisms indulged in concerning the court in the Indian Territory, and perhaps as to the courts existing in Texas and in the State of Arkansas having jurisdiction of crimes committed in the Indian Territory. I know those courts have been expensive, and I know that the management of the courts and the conduct of business imposes a very great burden upon the Government of the United States. But we ought not to forget that in the Indian Territory proper the court that has been characterized somewhat severely by the Senator from Missouri is the only court existing there to hear and determine disputes and controversies between the people.

The expenses of these courts were put in contrast with the expenses of the United States courts in the State of New York and elsewhere, which is hardly a fair comparison in my judgment. In the United States district courts of the State of New York only criminal offenses against the Government of the United States are sent for trial, while in the court in the Indian Territory jurisdiction is given of almost every subject, and it is the only court for the investigation of the contentions and difficulties existing there between the people as well as for the trial of offenses against the law. So, while there is great expense attending it, there is this excuse and this justification for the expense. I think there may be a disposition among the deputy marshals and some subordinate officers to make unnecessary arrests, and thus make fees for themselves and swell the cost of judicial proceedings.

While I was in the Indian Territory recently I heard of some very aggravated arrests for trivial offenses that ought not to have been taken notice of by any officer representing the Government of the United States—arrests for ferrying across the river on the Sabbath day, arrests for profanity, arrests for trivial offenses that are not as a rule taken notice of in our States or in our civilized communities. Arrests are made, and perhaps, as was intimated by the Senator from Missouri, largely for the purpose of swelling costs and to make the privilege of holding office profitable and inviting.

This ought not, of course, to be tolerated or permitted; but that large costs attend these courts results largely, as I have suggested, from the conditions existing there, and because the court in the Indian Territory is the only court for the litigation of offenses and for the trial of offenders against the law as well as for the trial of contentions between citizens and the people resident in that country.

I remember when the bill to create that court was under consideration objection was made that we ought not to give to the court jurisdiction of felonies. It was suggested that courts could not secure in that country competent jurors, capable, intelligent, and honest jurors, and that for that reason the United States courts of Arkansas, Texas, and Kansas ought to retain jurisdiction of felonies and of certain cases.

I was at Muscogee twice while the United States court was in session there. I have had some conversation with the judge who presides over that court, Judge Shackelford. I have had some conversation with the officers of the court, and I believe them to be honest and conscientious officials. Judge Shackelford informs me and the officers assure me that they have never known better jurors in their experience as men than they get in the Indian Territory. I certainly saw serving in that court most capable and competent jurors and hence I think there is no foundation for that objection at this time, whatever the fact may have been several years ago.

I believe with the Senator from Missouri that the jurisdiction that exists in the courts at Wichita, Fort Smith, and Paris, in Texas, ought to be taken from them, and that full jurisdiction should be given to courts in the Indian Territory. I know that our friends from the State of Arkansas charged that the Senator from Missouri was somewhat inconsistent when he claimed that the court in the Indian Territory should be given full jurisdiction of these offenses, and yet characterized severely, as he did, the conditions existing in that Territory. I do not see that he was as illogical in that position as our friends seemed to suggest or think.

We know that the bandits, the assassins, the criminals who congregate and find hiding places in that Territory are there in spite of the courts, and they are there in spite of the officers who are authorized to make arrests and are directed to assist in preserving peace and protecting life and property. They are there because of the conditions existing there. They are there because large sections of that country are uninhabited. They are there because arrests can not be made of them, and so they find it a convenient place to take refuge and to organize their schemes for plunder and for assassination.

The Senator from Missouri did not exaggerate the conditions existing in that particular. He called attention to a crime that was recently committed in my State and in a neighboring town to the one in which I reside; the crime that was committed at Coffeyville when the Daltons went in there at nine and a half o'clock in the morning and attempted to take possession of the town and to rob the banks. He called attention to the manner in which the people of that town rallied and defended themselves, and destroyed the lawless bandits. No more gallant defense has ever been made by the people of a threatened community than was made by the people of Coffeyville. They rallied to the defense of their banks, their homes, and the property of that community and annihilated that organized band of robbers and assassins. Only one of them succeeded in making his escape. But, unfortunately, other organizations of like character exist in that Territory. I hold in my hand an account recently published from this same community, from Coffeyville, of another threatened attempt to repeat substantially what the Daltons attempted to accomplish, and I call attention to it thus briefly for the purpose of emphasizing the necessity for some action as contemplated by the joint resolution of the Senator from Missouri, and for Congressional action in the establishment of courts and for the establishment of government there that will break up these practices and give security to person and to property.

The expense of taking offenders from the Indian Territory to Texas, to Kansas, to Arkansas for trial is, as suggested by the Senator from Missouri, very great, and it removes the parties charged with crime from the jurisdiction in which they ought to be arraigned. It removes them from their bailiwick. It removes them from the Territory in which they have the right to be heard as American citizens and carries them to foreign jurisdictions, organized in most instances to convict, and not only works a hardship and wrong to them, but imposes upon the Government of the United States the very great burden of meeting this heavy expense.

I have in my hand a report from the grand jury which I will not take the time to read as it is somewhat lengthy, but which I will insert in my remarks and will in that way call the attention of the Senate to it that the Senate may have the information given by the grand jury of the court at Muscogee, calling attention to conditions existing in the Territory, and calling attention to the prosecutions pending in the court and to the work that that court was engaged in doing.

REPORT OF GRAND JURY, OCTOBER TERM, 1892.

In the United States court in the Indian Territory, third judicial division, at Ardmore.

To the Hon. James M. Shackelford, judge of said court:

We, the grand jurors, for the October term, beg to submit the following report:

We have examined into 145 cases and have presented 74 true bills of indictment, as follows:

Larceny	37	Obtaining goods under false pretense	1
Introducing	5	Selling mortgaged property	4
False pretense and fraud	1	Slander	2
Perjury	4	Disturbing peace	1
Forgery	4	Embezzlement	1
Obstructing process	1	Gaming	3
Assault and battery	4
Carrying weapon	6

We find that the crime of larceny is on the increase in our country, and regret that the punishment is not greater. Under the present United States law a man could steal a thousand head of cattle at one time, and the greatest punishment that could be meted out to him would be confinement in the penitentiary for one year. We desire to call the attention of the court to the condition of the jail at this place. The building is entirely too small for even humane treatment to the prisoners confined therein. There are only four cells, 11 feet square, and the smallest number of prisoners confined in the jail at one time since the last sitting of the court was twenty-five. There has been as many as forty-two, with an average of thirty-five. Each cell has two windows, 18 inches square, and located so high from the floor that, during the hot months, the temperature of the cells is almost unbearable. We find the jail and surroundings as clean and in as good condition as the circumstances will allow.

We regret that Congress has thus far failed to confer upon the United States court in the Indian Territory complete jurisdiction, and deplore the fact that a few Representatives in Congress, who are familiar with our situation and the justice of our demands, through selfish motives have thus far been enabled to defeat all efforts to accomplish that end.

The anomaly of the people and its courts are without parallel. Note for instance the jurisdiction of this and the United States district court at Paris, exercising in some cases concurrent jurisdiction, and in other cases the jurisdiction is conflicting and irreconcilable. Only a few days since an individual stood charged in this court by indictment for larceny, and upon that day, the day upon which his case was set for trial, a deputy United States marshal for the Paris court, ignoring this court's jurisdiction, arrested the accused, and without giving him an opportunity to make bond, speedily transported him to and lodged him in the United States jail at Paris for a lesser crime, to wit, introducing. Result: the bond of accused was forfeited and his trial for larceny was delayed if not wholly defeated.

In our opinion the United States court in the Indian Territory is just as efficient, and the jurors therein are just as well qualified as are the courts and jurors of the States, and as there is no real imaginary cause for dragging our citizens to a foreign court for trial the system should be abolished at the earliest day possible.

To this honorable court, sitting as judge of the entire Indian Territory, with circuit and district court powers, we ascribe all dignity, efficiency, and honor, but in doing so we can but suggest that there are many trivial matters, of which this honorable court has jurisdiction, which should be conferred upon courts of lesser importance. We believe that all misdemeanors and all civil actions, where the amount in controversy does not exceed $300, should be originally tried by the United States commissioners, and thus eliminate from the business of this court many trivial matters and thereby enable the court to dispose of, with reasonable dispatch, matters of more concern to the people and to the Government.

We return our thanks to your honor and the United States attorney and his able assistant, Mr. Jenkins, for the kindness and assistance shown us, and we also extend our thanks to our bailiff, Mr. Ed. Thurlo, for the efficient manner in which he discharged his duty.

Respectfully submitted.

L. L. STOWE, Foreman.
C. H. HEALD, Clerk.

According to this report, while a man charged with crime was under arrest in that court he was seized by a deputy marshal and carried off to the State of Texas for a trial for a less offense and was taken into custody and was refused bail, and hence was not permitted to appear to answer to the offense for which he had been indicted and for which he was charged in the court in the Indian Territory. This report makes conspicuous some of the evils I have attempted briefly to suggest, and calls attention to the great necessity for additional legislation by Congress.

What I think this body ought to do at the earliest opportunity is to give to the court organized in the Indian Territory full and exclusive jurisdiction of all offenses committed within that Territory.

Mr. VEST. Before the Senator from Kansas passes away from the state of affairs at Coffeyville, I want to read a portion of a letter which I received from there a few minutes ago. The letter is dated December 18, 1892, and a portion of it is as follows:

This very day Bill Dalton, one of the notorious family of that name, is walking through our streets armed with a repeating gun and a commission as a deputy United States marshal, with authority to scour the territory on our border.

That is from Coffeyville, Kans.

Mr. PERKINS. That I think is probably true. I know that some of the Daltons were originally deputy marshals in the Indian Territory. I know that some of the men who have been guilty of the greatest crimes and of the greatest lawlessness have been shielded and protected with commissions as deputy marshals.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PERKINS. With pleasure.

Mr. BERRY. If I understood the Senator correctly, he stated awhile ago that the Daltons who were engaged in the robbery were annihilated. Was this man Dalton referred to in the letter received by the Senator from Missouri one of the parties engaged in the robbery?

Mr. VEST. No, his brother.

Mr. PERKINS. This one was not engaged in the robbery.

Mr. BERRY. He is a brother to the men who were?

Mr. PERKINS. He is a brother to those Daltons. There were three of the Daltons killed, with a confederate; another one was supposed at the time to be fatally wounded, but he is recovering, and one of the band escaped. That is the history of the party that visited Coffeyville.

Mr. BERRY. Can the Senator tell the Senate whether this deputy marshal holds his commission from the Muscogee court or one of the other courts?

Mr. PERKINS. I do not know whether he holds a commission as deputy marshal at all. I am simply suggesting that it is likely the statement contained in the communication read by the Senator from Missouri is true, because I know in fact that many men who have been guilty of committing the greatest crimes in that Territory have been shielded and protected with commissions as deputy marshals. But after committing the crimes, after their desperate and lawless character became known, I am very glad to say that their commissions, so far as I know, have been canceled, and they ceased to be representatives of the courts or representatives of the Government of the United States.

I wish to say in justice to the marshal of the Indian Territory, as well as in justice to the officers of the court there, that I believe they are honest and faithful men. I believe that they have been doing an excellent work. I know that that court has been doing most excellent service in the interest of law and order and for the protection of life and property. Judge Shackelford deserves the commendation of good people everywhere, and hence in what I say I do not intend in the slightest degree to reflect upon that court or its officers, and yet I know that deputy marshals located and scattered through the Territory have made arrests that never ought to have been made, and as it occurred to me for the sole purpose of aggregating fees and costs.

Mr. President, quite recently I was in the Indian Territory, and in corroboration of what the Senator from Missouri says, I will state that the day I returned from the Indian Territory the train on which I rode to my home was guarded by armed men for the protection of the passengers and for the protection of the property of the train, because there was threatened, as the officers of the road understood, an attempt to rob the train. One of the Daltons was upon the train, the younger brother—not I think the one named in the communication read by the Senator from Missouri, but still another brother, George, as I understood the name—and the officers of the road had been advised in advance that there was a possibility of the train being broken into and robbed. So the train traveled with an armed guard, and for days about that time every train traversing that Territory carried an armed guard for the protection of passengers as well as for the protection of the property of the train and the property carried upon it.

Now, these conditions exist there without doubt, and the officers under existing conditions seem to be almost powerless. There has been given to the court at Muscogee the right to arrest and to surrender fugitives from other States and from other jurisdictions, so that a criminal committing crime in one of the adjoining States may be followed into the Territory and may be arrested and removed upon requisition. The presiding judge of the court in the Indian Territory has been given authority to surrender a man under those circumstances upon proper demand and upon proper requisition. But that does not relieve the difficulties there. That does not break up the rendezvous that exist there, nor does it result in bringing to punishment the lawless characters who congregate there.

So I desire in a few words to emphasize what has been so well said by the Senator from Missouri, that we must either by negotiations induce these civilized tribes to take their lands in severalty, and to accept the duties and responsibilities of citizenship, and to cede to the Government of the United States their excess, or we must enforce those conditions upon them. We must do that by appropriate legislation in the event they refuse to accept the propositions which may be tendered to them in a spirit of fairness by the Government of the United States.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], in his speech made an able and careful review of the situation and of the legal status of that country, and he suggested the logical and unanswerable proposition that the reasons for some of the treaty stipulations had greatly disappeared and because of the practices of the Indians themselves, and that under existing conditions they would not be permitted to shelter themselves behind a technical construction of treaty stipulations and defeat the manifest destiny of this nation, and prevent organized government for the thousands whom the Indians have permitted to make habitations among them and to settle in their growing towns and villages. I have no doubt myself of the right of Congress to confer upon the people living in that Territory or domiciled therein the sovereignty of statehood. I believe it is within the power of Congress to confer statehood or a Territorial government upon that people whether the civilized tribes consent to it or not, and this, in my judgment, is the only solution of this vexed and yet very important question.

Mr. President, one of the courts somewhat severely characterized by the Senator from Missouri, is within my own State, and yet I will very cheerfully join with him in any effort that will increase and enlarge the jurisdiction of the court of the Indian Territory and take from the courts in Kansas, and Arkansas, and Texas the power that is given to them under existing law to try offenses from the Indian Territory, because as has been suggested, I see no longer any reason why it should be retained there. With the great population in the Indian Territory, with the educated and honest people who are there, competent jurors can be secured and are secured and in attendance upon each session of that court. Trials can be conducted there as orderly and as well as they can be conducted in any section of the country.

So I desire briefly to say that personally I am in favor of organizing Oklahoma Territory and the Indian Territory into a great State, admitting it into the Union either as an Indian State or otherwise. I do not care what the name may be. Let us take the Indian Territory as it originally existed before the Territory of Oklahoma was created and admit it all into the Union as one of the bright and progressive States and bring with it the 400,000 people who are there. If this can not be done then we must, in my judgment, organize Territorial governments in the Indian Territory, increase the powers of the courts existing there, and by lawful methods give protection to life and property in that country, and at the same time protect the communities that are growing and that have sprung into existence all around that Territory. The lawless organizations that exist in that Territory to-day, hidden in the uninhabited sections of that country, very greatly depreciate property in Kansas, in Southwestern Missouri, along the line of Arkansas, and in Texas, because of the dangers incident from these organizations, and in the name of justice and humanity they must be broken up.

I hope, Mr. President, that in the early sessions of this body after the holidays what is known as the Cherokee Outlet bill may be brought up for consideration, and in the consideration of that measure it may be that some legislation can be secured of great value to the country. The present occupant of the chair [Mr. PLATT in the chair] has given very careful consideration to that important bill. He has it in charge, and I know that he will bring it to the attention of this body at the earliest moment practicable. Its importance is so great to the people of all the Western country that it ought to be considered at the earliest date possible. There are 6,000,000 acres of land and more, rich and beautiful, waiting to be occupied by people who are living upon its border, and who have been living there for months waiting for Congress by its enactment to give them authority to go to, to possess, and to occupy it.

The most of these people believe that the Cherokees have no right to that land, and yet in a spirit of good citizenship they refrain from taking possession of it. They are camping to-day upon the border, living in tents and dugouts, waiting for Congress to say to them that they can go and lawfully occupy and possess it. If we should fail to consider that legislation during the present session, if we should fail to ratify the agreement which was made with the Cherokee Indians and provide for the opening of that territory to settlement, as is contemplated by the treaty, my judgment is that the Administration that follows us upon our adjournment on the 4th of March will find one of the most difficult questions precipitated upon it and one of the most unpleasant situations to contend with that can be precipitated upon an administration.

These thousands of people will be driven to a spirit of desperation, to a spirit of recklessness, and we all ought to desire that, in a candid, lawful, and fair way, treaties made with the Indians may be ratified so that there will be no violations of law and no violations of what many believe to be the rights of the Indians; and yet that those lands may be opened to settlement that the homeless may be given the opportunity of securing a habitation for themselves and those dependent upon them.

This must be done before the 4th of March next, or the treaty of which I have spoken terminates and is without binding force upon the Cherokees, as is expressly provided therein.

Mr. President, I thank the Senate for this opportunity of submitting these suggestions, and will no longer detain it.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9826) granting certain rights and privileges to the commissioners of water works in the city of Erie, Pa.; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 570) to provide for the removal of the remains of the late Ensign D. F. Terrell, United States Navy, from Sitka, Alaska, to his home in the State of Mississippi;

A bill (S. 1675) granting increase of pension to soldiers of the Mexican war in certain cases;

A bill (S. 2981) for the relief of the Citadel Academy of Charleston, S. C.;

A bill (S. 3059) for the relief of the Old Dominion Steamship Company; and

A bill (S. 3298) authorizing the sale of land in the vicinity of Fort Mifflin, on the river Delaware.

DEALING IN "OPTIONS" AND "FUTURES."

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7845) defining "options" and "futures," imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and requiring such dealers and persons engaged in selling certain products to obtain license, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] to strike section 10 from the bill; on which the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, the propositions which I presented yesterday as objections to the pending bill have been before the Senate, and I shall merely allude to what I said yesterday as it may occur in the course of the further consideration of the various points that arise. I will again invite the attention of the Senate to the tenth section of the bill. I think the Senate will observe that its provisions are so remarkable that they have no example in Congressional legislation. It will be necessary for me, in order to make the point clear, to read a portion of the section:

> Whenever any contract or agreement for the sale and future delivery of any of the articles mentioned in section 3 of this act shall be made, and the making thereof shall not be reported to the collector of internal revenue, as required by section 9—

A reading which supports the statement I made yesterday, that every contract which can be made for the sale and future delivery of the articles mentioned in this proposed act is placed under the control of the collector of internal revenue.

Whenever any contract is made of the character described—> or if it shall have been reported to the said collector as a contract or agreement of the nature and character mentioned in and authorized to be made under a certificate issued pursuant to the provisions of section 12 of this act, and it shall come to the knowledge of such collector, or he shall have reasonable cause to believe that the party by whom such contract or agreement was made as vendor was not, at the time of the making thereof, the owner of the article or articles which were the subject of, embraced in, or covered by such contract or agreement, and had not then acquired, and was not then entitled to the right to the future possession of such article or articles under and by virtue of a contract or agreement for the sale and future delivery thereof previously made by the owner of such article or articles, it shall be the duty of such collector to require the party who shall have made such contract or agreement as vendor to forthwith furnish to such collector proof of such vendor's ownership, or right or title to the future possession of the article or articles so embraced in or covered by such contract or agreement.

The bill then proceeds with its requirements, stating as to the contents of the affidavit that the party is required to furnish a very particular statement to the collector of the place of deposit or possession of the property sold. Then follows this unusual provision:

> And such affidavit shall further state the amount or quantity of other articles of this kind embraced in and covered by such contract or agreement which said affiant is then the owner of.

That is, the party is required to account for the property embraced in the contract, reporting to the collector a full explanation of all that pertains to it which is needful to enable the collector to ascertain and determine the question of ownership of the property actually embraced in the contract. Then the bill proceeds:

> or entitled to the future possession of any and all contracts or agreements which affiant may have made, and which are then outstanding and remaining uncanceled, for the sale and future delivery of any such article or articles of such kind.

It will be observed that after the explanation is given to the collector of all that is material to be known with respect to the actual contract of sale which has been reported to him, or which has come to his knowledge, the collector may require that the owner shall proceed to state the amount or quantity of other articles of the kind embraced in the contract, not the articles embraced in the contract, but of like character and description. He shall further report—> any and all contracts or agreements which affiant may have made, and which are then outstanding and remaining uncanceled, for the sale and future delivery of any such article or articles of such kind. And said party is further required, if demanded by such collector, to exhibit to the collector the original receipt of the warehouse or elevator where the aforesaid article or articles are then stored, or the bill of lading or receipt of the vessel, railroad, or other carrier having possession of said article or articles for transportaion.

There an inquiry is authorized outside of the contract which has been brought to the attention of the collector, that is, the collector is authorized to require of the party to this proposed sale a full explanation of his business, and that is to be a part of his affidavit. Then follows this consequence:

> And in case said party shall fail or refuse to make and file with the collector the said affidavit when so required, or shall fail or refuse to exhibit the said warehouse or elevator receipt or said bill of lading, when so demanded, such failure or refusal shall constitute and be deemed and held to be prima facie evidence that the contract or agreement so made by said party was a "futures" contract or agreement as described and defined in section 2 of this act, and said party shall thereupon become liable and be required to pay to said collector upon the article or articles which are the subject of, embraced in, or covered by such contract or agreement, the amount or amounts of special taxes imposed and required by section 4 of this act to be paid for and upon an article or articles of the same kind when sold under any "futures" contract or agreement.

It has been supposed—and for that particular view of the case I am obliged to the Senator who lately occupied the chair—that laws which require men to furnish evidence against themselves were in violation of the Constitution, and not only in violation of the Constitution but in violation of common rights; that no man shall be required to accuse himself or make disclosures which will subject him to pains and penalties. Here the silence of the party, his refusal to file a particular affidavit is made evidence of guilt, and it is declared that he at once shall become liable to the penalties imposed by the act. Silence in that case is a crime, the failure to do the act subjects the party to a penalty. While it may be said the Supreme Court will not be able to see that this monstrous law is not a revenue law, that court will see, as we must, that this requirement is subversive of all sound constitutional doctrine.

The bill goes on, if I read it aright, and not only requires that the party shall disclose the facts relating to the contract which is the subject of inquiry, but he shall actually give an account—I read that I may not be misunderstood:

> Such affidavit shall further state the amount or quantity of other articles of the kind embraced in and covered by such contract or agreement which said affiant is then the owner of, or entitled to the future possesion of, and any and all contracts or agreements which affiant may have made, and which are then outstanding and remaining uncanceled, for the sale and future delivery of any such article or articles of such kind.

The party is not alone required to furnish evidence to prove his own innocence by an affidavit, but is required in addition to furnish a complete account of his business, to state the amount and quantity of property of the kind embraced in the contract which he has in his possession or under his control, and he is required to give a statement of his outstanding contracts of like character, and to state with particularity where whatever property may be in his possession is now deposited or stored. Then he is subjected to the penalty of the presumption of guilt, not because he does not answer as to the particular transaction, but the presumption follows his failure to give a complete account of his business as connected with this particular class of subjects.

That is, the party may say "I tender you an affidavit which contains a complete answer to the contract and furnishes all the facts in the contract that the statute requires," but the collector says, "I demand more; I demand a complete account of your business." The party declines to do that. For declining to furnish information in regard to a purely private matter, the party is held to be prima facie guilty of the particular offense charged against him, although he may have furnished a satisfactory answer to the matter which is made the subject of direct inquiry, a most curious consequence, which shows that this is not a revenue bill, but is a bill intended to convert acts which are now innocent, into crimes, and subvert well-established legal principles as a means of giving effect to this proposed law.

> And in case said party shall fail or refuse to make and file with the collector the said affidavit when so required, or shall fail or refuse to exhibit the said warehouse or elevator receipt or said bill of lading, when so demanded, such failure or refusal shall constitute and be deemed and held to be prima facie evidence that the contract or agreement so made by said party was a "futures" contract or agreement as described and defined in section two of this act, and said party shall thereupon become liable and be required to pay to said collector upon the article or articles which are the subject of, embraced in, or covered by such contract or agreement, the amount or amounts of special taxes imposed and required by section four of this act to be paid for and upon an article or articles of the same kind when sold under any "futures" contract or agreement.

The section seems to violate all established principles for the proper administration of justice.

There are two other matters to which I shall ask the attention of the Senate before I get through. I have said that this bill is not a revenue bill. I ask attention particularly to the provision of the second proviso to the second section of the bill. After excluding all contracts made with or by farmers and planters from the operation of the proposed act and giving to manufacturers and traffickers the right to disregard the provisions of the law, for they are excepted from its operations, all these rights are subject to this provision:

That such contract—

That is the permitted contracts—

That such contract or agreement shall not be made in or upon any board of trade, produce, cotton, merchants', or other exchange, or other commercial association, or in any place or upon any premises where price quotations of said articles are announced, bulletined, or published, nor be subject to the rules or regulations of any such board, exchange, or other commercial association.

One of the most serious objections to this bill, even if it could be maintained upon all other grounds, is that it strikes at the common right of citizens to make contracts in any manner now permitted by law. As I said yesterday, and as is known to every Senator, the right of selling for future delivery is recognized in the courts of England, the courts of the United States, and of the States. This bill is intended to abridge that common right to make contracts, as I say, which are free from any vice of which I am aware, and have not been regarded by the Legislatures of more than one of the States—and I am not sure even about that—as being in any sense contrary to sound public policy.

Here is a case where the American citizen is prohibited from making lawful contracts wherever he may choose to do so. He is not permitted by this bill to buy at a place selected by himself, that is to say, he may buy, but he shall not "buy in or upon any board of trade." Although the boards of trade created by the laws of the States and established by commercial men in all the important cities have been created for commercial purposes, for the making of contracts, the American citizen is forbidden to buy in them; nor shall he make that bargain—

In any place or upon any premises where price quotations of said articles are announced, bulletined, or published.

That is to say, I take it, that before the farmer who comes into one of our towns would be allowed to buy the articles in the manner permitted in this bill it would be necessary for him to inquire, "Do you publish price quotations of the articles I want to buy? If so, I am not permitted to deal with you." No such restriction can be found upon legitimate fair trading in any statute; and yet this is called a revenue bill. This bill is intended to strike down commercial associations, to embarrass them. No Senator, I think, will pretend that the place of the making of a contract can be a vice, can be wrong per se.

A man may make an honest contract, a lawful contract, upon a board of trade or produce exchange. He may make an honest contract upon the premises where there are price quotations. Indeed, it would be quite natural that the man should desire to consult the price quotations, and if they were published for his convenience it would seem to be quite natural he should be allowed to resort to them. Yet this so-called revenue bill discriminates against a class of lawful establishments and abridges the right of the people to select their own time and place for making contracts, which the law permits, and which are in violation of no rule of good morals or good business. Can that be a constitutional provision? Is not that an attempt not only at legislating with respect to matters of State concern, but is it not an attack upon establishments created by State laws, abridging their usefulness and destroying one of the purposes for which they have been created and their existence allowed and permitted?

Again, I ask the attention of the Senate to another most extraordinary feature of this bill. It is claimed that this is a revenue measure. Here we have this provision defining who are dealers in options:

Every person, association, copartnership, or corporation who shall in their own behalf, or as agent, broker, or employé of another or others, deal in "options" or make any "options" contract or agreement as hereinbefore defined, or make any transfer or assignment of any such "options" contract or agreement—

Now, I come to the point to which I ask particular attention—

or shall by letter, telegram, or other communication sent from the United States to any foreign country, or by an agent, broker, employé, or partner resident in any foreign country enter into any "futures" contract, or agreement as hereinbefore defined, shall be deemed a dealer in "options;" and every person, association, copartnership, or corporation who shall in their own behalf, or as agent, broker, or employé of another or others, deal in "futures" or make any "futures" contract or agreement as hereinbefore defined, or make any transfer or assignment of any such "futures" contract or agreement, or shall by letter, telegram or other communication sent from the United States to any foreign country, or by an agent, broker, employé, or partner resident in any foreign country, enter into any "futures," contract or agreement as herein before defined shall be deemed a dealer in "futures."

It has been suggested to me by a Senator on my right that dealers in cattle, those who transport cattle, desire a law to be passed to compel the posting of prices. I suppose if that is true, that the simple posting of the information at any point for the convenience of any class of traders would render it impossible for them to make the trade at the point or near the point where the information was posted. Nothing can be more absurd, I think, unless it is that portion of the bill which I now read. The bill requires that persons who obtain a license to deal in options and futures shall pay for the privilege, and they are required to pay a tax on the articles sold or contracted to be sold. We have this provision of the bill which extends to foreign countries, and the man who corresponds with anyone residing out of the United States—

By letter, telegram, or other communication sent from the United States to any foreign country, or by an agent, broker, employé, or partner resident in any foreign country enter into any "futures" contract, or agreement as hereinbefore defined, shall be deemed a dealer in "options."

* * * * * * *

Or shall by letter, telegram, or other communication sent from the United States to any foreign country, or by an agent, broker, employé, or partner resident in any foreign country, enter into any "futures" contract or agreement as hereinbefore defined shall be deemed a dealer in "futures."

This bill requires that the party shall make reports of all sales made and shall pay a tax by the bushel or the pound or otherwise, as specified in the bill.

Now, I would inquire what would be the condition of an American merchant who should have a resident partner abroad—because, recollect, the contract made by a partner resident in a foreign country makes the resident partner a dealer in options or futures—if, in the course of the business abroad, the foreign partner makes contracts of the kind to which the bill refers? What is the resident partner to do under such circumstances in order to protect himself against the penalties of this bill? According to its reading and fair interpretation he must account for all the sales made by his partner abroad, and he must pay taxes on all the transactions of his foreign partner. If he fails to do so he is liable to the penalties provided by this bill, and thus this so-called revenue bill would have this remarkable effect.

I have frequently heard of the foreigners paying the tax, lately quite frequently, but here is a case where the American resident pays the tax upon a foreign transaction, unlimited so far as I can see. That would seem to be a case not provided for by the bill. Contracts abroad which are perfectly legal, contracts made in England, which are lawful by the English law, when made by a partner living there or elsewhere abroad, are made subject to American taxation. The foundation of that claim to tax foreign transactions is based upon the fact that the party himself makes a contract by letter or telegram or other communication sent from the United States to any foreign country, or his partner resident in any foreign country, engaged in business, with the details of which the American partner is entirely unacquainted does so.

The only mode, however, by which the domestic partner could protect himself would be that which I have suggested, to report the amount of the sales abroad, because, surely, it was not intended by the authors of this bill to cut off all intercourse between American and foreign partners. They are allowed communication some way, but the American partner is made responsible for the action of the foreign partner, and that responsibility extends thus far, that the American partner to protect himself, being declared by the law to be an option dealer, must report the transaction which gives him the character of an option dealer, if he would protect himself against the penalties of this law—a most remarkable condition of things.

Mr. President, can there be anything more absurd than for Senators to call this a revenue bill when this provision was intended for the mere suppression not of transactions in this country, but to break up all correspondence between American commercial men and their foreign partners? Clearly it is not possible for any man to escape the penalty who has a foreign partner engaged in dealings in futures in any of the articles specified in this bill.

Mr. President, I certainly am under great obligations to the Senate for listening to me again this afternoon, but I beg to say that nothing is further from the truth than the popular belief that the planters and farmers of this country would demand this bill if they were made aware of its provisions. They are told that there are corners on their products; they have been told that in the exchanges there are combinations intended to depress the price of the products of their labor; and there is much truth in it.

There are no doubt rings and combinations in dealings in agricultural products, as there are in everything else of value in this country.

With the marvelous facilities afforded for intercommunication, where the man in Chicago may by telegraph reach every market in the civilized world, where combinations may be effected by this same rapid means, and where products may be transported with as much certainty as the movements of the heavenly bodies, combinations can not be avoided. Power will develop itself; power will win its advantages. Money, we sometimes say, will control and does control commerce, because money is the life of commerce.

But, Mr. President, the people of this country, those who are meant to be protected more than any other, need to be protected from their so-called friends. They need to be protected from men who would subvert established, orderly, constitutional ideas of government, and would turn these helpless people, who always suffer first when orderly government is disregarded, over to the mere discretion of Congress, which, by adopting a fraudulent device, by calling a bill a revenue bill and seeking to control the business of the States and disturbing contracts always does mischief. I say the common people, the people who have no money, are those who have most to dread from legislation like this.

I got the other day from the representatives of agriculture in this city a circular requesting me to support the Hatch-Washburn antioption bill. These gentlemen are professional farmers who know nothing of the labors of the farm, they are leeches who live upon the farmers, who take advantage of their credulity, and they come here demanding that which they have no reason to believe will benefit the farmers of this country.

I am happy to say, Mr. President [Mr. CULLOM in the chair], that there is no urgent demand in the State which we represent for legislation like this. The people of Illinois believe that their prosperity depends upon their own labor, their own energy, upon the fertility of their land, and they are content to abide by the laws which have been enacted for the protection of the common rights of the people of the United States. They have such confidence in their own State government that they rely upon the law, and if the law is not enforced they feel the blame rests on them, not that the laws are imperfect. Public opinion will abrogate law or will blunt the edge of the law. It has been found so everywhere.

I was told the other day in a letter I received that although we have laws in Illinois to punish these evils, they can only be suppressed by what, sir? By the law of the United States; by the strong arm of the Federal Government. That is one of the vices of our present condition. We make laws in the States; we neglect to enforce them; we allow them to be disregarded, and we make an appeal to the National Government, which operates by methods of its own, methods entirely suited to the purposes for which that Government was created.

Its strong and vigorous methods are such as are proper for a government whose powers are given it for general purposes; but the strong arm of the Government and the strong arm of the collector and the revenue agent were not intended to be employed in governing the people with the details which this bill provides. It was not intended that the internal-revenue collector should have the power to revise every contract made by the people of Illinois. That is a power too dangerous to be given.

This bill is mischievous, and contains many despotic provisions. I quote one of them:

SEC. 14. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act, and when such rules and regulations shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury they shall have the force and effect of law.

Whether it is in the power of this Congress to give to the mere rules and regulations of a ministerial officer that tremendous effect or not, I am not now prepared to say; indeed, I am prepared to deny that Congress has such a power. It does not belong to any government controlled by a constitution that a mere ministerial officer shall make law, because to give to him the power to make regulation that has the force of law is to give to him the power to make law. Whether that is valid or not, it shows the temper which controls this proposed legislation, this disposition to grasp the despotic forces of the National Government and compel obedience, compel the citizen who has made a sale of futures, an ordinary transaction, to furnish an explanation of that transaction, and when he is called upon to do it compel him to make an affidavit under the penalty of prima facie guilt, and compel him not only to do that, but to give an account of other transactions which have no relation to the subject of the contract, and he is held guilty unless he obeys.

Such despotic powers are inconsistent with all just ideas of constitutional government, and they characterize this bill as one which is in the interest not of speculative capital, but of organized capital. Its effect will be to drive out the speculators and to give to the enormous aggregation of organized wealth in the Northwest, in Chicago and all over the country, the monopoly of the products of the farm. It is a case where the purpose is to diminish the number of purchasers, to drive out competition, and to leave the field in the possession of men who are so fiercely demanding the passage of this bill.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask the Senator having charge of the bill to yield to me to enable me to report a resolution, for which I desire immediate consideration, as I am about to leave the Senate.

Mr. WASHBURN. I yield for that purpose.

MRS. MARY A. MERRITT.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to report favorably a resolution, for which I ask immediate consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Mrs. Mary A. Merritt, widow of John G. Merritt, deceased, late a messenger acting as assistant doorkeeper of the United States Senate, the sum of $900, being an amount equal to six months' salary at the rate per annum allowed by law to the aforesaid messenger acting as assistant doorkeeper. Said sum to be considered as including the funeral expenses and all allowances.

BRIDGE ACROSS CANE RIVER, LOUISIANA.

Mr. PEFFER obtained the floor.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Kansas yield to me?

Mr. PEFFER. For what purpose?

Mr. WHITE. To call up a bill which I think will lead to no discussion.

Mr. PEFFER. On the Senator's statement that in case the bill leads to discussion he will withdraw it I will yield.

Mr. WHITE. I will do so. I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration House bill 9478, which is a bridge bill extending the time to build the bridge across Cane River, in the parish of Natchitoches, Louisiana. The bill was unanimously reported by the House committee, and is unanimously reported by the Senate committee. The question of the limitation of time becomes a serious one, and I should like, if possible, to have the bill now considered and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and the Senate take up for consideration the bill named by him. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9487) to amend an act approved April 22, 1890, authorizing the Natchitoches Cane River Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across Cane River, in Louisiana.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RED RIVER BRIDGE, LOUISIANA.

Mr. WHITE. I now ask that House bill 9488 may be taken up. It is of the same character as the bill which has just been passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana asks for the present consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection?

Mr. PEFFER. I shall not object if the same statement is made by the Senator as was made in relation to the previous bill.

Mr. WHITE. They are analogous bills, and this bill can not possibly lead to debate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9488) to amend an act approved March 2, 1891, authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River, Louisiana, by the Rapides Bridge Company, limited.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS RHYS SMITH.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. PEFFER. I do, with the understanding that I shall not be asked to yield any further.

Mr. HALE. I ask for the present consideration of Senate bill 3221.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3221) to provide for the adjustment and payment of the claim of Thomas Rhys Smith for work done and materials furnished for the breakwater at Bar Harbor, Me.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 16, after the word "appropriated," to insert:

Provided, That before making any payment the Secretary of War shall exact from said Thomas Rhys Smith a bond in the penal sum of $10,000, with sufficient sureties, to be approved by him, conditioned to indemnify the United States against any lawful claim of any other party or parties.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to examine and adjust the claim of Thomas Rhys Smith against the Government of the United States for work done and materials furnished for the breakwater at Bar Harbor, Maine, under a contract between said Thomas Rhys Smith and the United States, and determine what amount of work was done and materials furnished thereunder, the amount paid on account thereof, and the balance remaining unpaid, which balance he shall certify to the proper accounting officers for payment in the manner prescribed by law, and for the payment of said claim the sum of $6,391.12, or so much therof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That before making any payment the Secretary of War shall exact from said Thomas Rhys Smith a bond in the penal sum of $10,000, with sufficient sureties, to be approved by him, conditioned to indemnify the United States against any lawful claim of any other party or parties.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEALING IN OPTIONS AND FUTURES.

The Senate, as in the Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7845) defining "options" and "futures", imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and requiring such dealers and persons engaged in selling certain products to obtain license, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. DANIEL to strike out section 10.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President——

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator wish to finish his remarks this afternoon?

Mr. PEFFER. I should prefer to proceed now. I think I shall not occupy more than twenty or thirty minutes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I would not feel quite satisfied with my own conduct if I did not at least openly before the Senate express my approval of the pending measure. It involves one of the principles upon which I had the good fortune to be commissioned to this body. It involves one of the subjects which are now uppermost in the minds of the people, more especially that portion of them who are not satisfied with existing legislation.

Mr. President, it is not my intention to enter upon a discussion of the details of this bill, nor do I expect to consider at length the legal principles involved, and I shall not attempt to add anything to what has been well said by other Senators concerning the magnitude of the evils resulting from the business of dealing in "futures" and "options." I shall confine myself chiefly to other reasons for supporting the bill, and to some observations relating to other agencies which, in connection with trading in imaginary articles, have operated to depreciate values of farm products and to bring about a widespread depression in the general business of farming.

Before taking up any of the points in this brief outline, I wish to emphasize the importance of early and favorable action on the part of the Senate. It is not often, Mr. President, that farmers demand legislation. Manufacturers, bankers, speculators, railroad managers, and the powerful classes in all departments appeal frequently to the lawmaking power of the States and of the nation for special legislation in their interests. So common has this practice become that it amounts to a custom—a custom so strong and powerful that all new legislation is controlled by it. We can not propose a revision of the tariff laws or a reform in our methods of taxation without being reminded that many great industries have grown up under the fostering care of Congress, and we must move cautiously along these new lines.

But the farmer, who was here long before any of the privileged classes, has never asked nor received any legislation in his favor until now. He feels that injustice has been done him by an evil practice which has grown and flourished under a system of lawmaking whose logical result is and has been to encourage and protect a spoliation of the very men who of all men ought to have the first consideration of governing powers—I mean the producers. This bill purports to have been prepared in the interest of agriculture, and from that fact it is of special concern to a large number of most useful citizens in every State of the Union. Ninety per cent of American farmers favor the passage of this bill or of another having the same object in view.

Farmers do not object to buying and selling property to be received or delivered in the future, for that is proper; it is often convenient and many times necessary; but they insist that a fictitious, pretended, and false commerce in purely imaginary articles and which greatly and continually interferes with their business to their injury ought to be suppressed.

I do not expect this bill to rid us of the evil complained of, for men intrenched, as these option dealers are, behind boards of trade, stock exchanges, and other commercial bodies, can not be dislodged easily; but it will open the way to more successful legislation after we shall have discovered the methods that will be adopted to evade the provisions of a law such as this will be.

Organizations of farmers, without exception, so far as I am aware, and my information is quite extended in that direction, have petitioned for such legislation as this, and I may state that this remark is intended to cover the entire country. The Patrons of Husbandry, commonly known as the Grange, the oldest organization of farmers in this country, have sent petitions here time and time again asking for precisely such legislation as this, and within a very brief period I received a dispatch from the State grange in session in the State of Kansas, which I will read.

SPRING HILL, KANS., December 13, 1892.

Senator W. A. PEFFER.
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Kansas State Grange in session desires you to favor the antioption bill now pending.

GEORGE BLACK, Secretary.

This telegram was forwarded to me but a few days ago. The Farmers' Alliance, a still larger and a later organization than that of the Patrons of Husbandry, and at this time covering a much larger territory, has repeatedly, and I believe invariably with unanimity, adopted as part of their local platform and as part of their State and national principles, opposition to practices such as the pending legislation is intended to abolish or to get rid of.

The Farmers' Mutual Benefit Association, more largely prevalent in the State of Illinois, so ably represented by the distinguished Senator [Mr. PALMER] who preceded me, are of the same opinion with reference to this species of business; at any rate such is my information, and I believe it to be correct. So I think I am entirely safe in saying that every body of organized farmers within the territory of the United States, North, West, South and East, is unanimously in favor of curtailing by legislation the speculative enterprises of men engaged at the great centers in business which the farmers believe is injurious to them, and among them is dealing in options and futures.

I have here, besides the telegram which I read, some other matter of a similar character. One is the paper to which I think the distinguished Senator from Illinois referred a few minutes ago, I take it, signed by the gentlemen purporting to represent the National Farmers' Alliance of America, the Iowa State Farmers' Alliance, and the Grain and Cotton Growers' League of America. I am not certain from any official information that the gentlemen named in this paper do really represent the organizations they pretend to represent, but I believe they do, and so believing I will ask the Secretary to read their letter to me.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE ARLINGTON, Washington, D. C., December 17, 1892.

DEAR SIR: Representing, as we do, several of the larger organizations of those engaged in cultivating the soil we take this method of calling your attention to the wishes of such bodies, as repeatedly expressed in National and State conventions, asking the enactment of the "antioption" bill now pending in the United States Senate, or some like measure which will restore the functions of supply and demand, believing, as do those we have the honor to represent, that with such a law in force prices for the more important products of the soil will not, as now, be determined in an unnatural way by the offering of unlimited quantities of such products that are neither owned by those offering them nor are they existent.

We believe that the offering upon the exchanges and in bucket-shops of fictitious or simulated products of the soil brings into effective competition with the produce of our farms immense volumes of grain and cotton that, while nonexistent, has the effect of offers of actual products in determining prices, thereby depreciating the value of the actual products of the farm, diminishing the value of lands, demoralizing the markets, causing wide and rapid fluctuations, intimidating and driving from the market those who would otherwise become investment buyers and who are unwilling to accept the risks involved in purchases of such products while stability of price is impossible.

In all this we have the unqualified indorsement and earnest support of a clearly defined sentiment among such members of the farming community as are not affiliated in our organizations, as we have of by far the greater part of those engaged in legitimate business pursuits, while the entire moral sense of the community is in complete accord with us in desiring an end put to commercial practices that are steadily undermining and debauching the moral conceptions of such as are led away by the illusive hope which this species of gaming holds out, of speedily acquiring wealth.

Therefore we respectfully request your earnest consideration and support of the pending bill, and that you will aid in every possible way in promoting its speedy passage, either in its present form or such other form as will, in the judgment of the friends (in the Senate) of agriculture, honest dealing, and good morals, be best calculated to secure the end sought by the great bodies of citizens whom we represent, and who, while desiring and urging their right to the protection which such a measure will afford, have neither the desire nor intention to invade the rights of others or to restrict or obstruct any legitimate commercial transactions, holding clearly that the transactions which the pending bill is intended to suppress are in no sense legitimate, but are, on the contrary, illegitimate, immoral, against public policy, and destructive of the best interests of the community, while serving no one useful or beneficent purpose.

Yours, respectfully,

D. F. RAVENS,
President National Farmers' Alliance of America.
GEO. E. LAWRENCE,
National Lecturer, National Farmers' Alliance of America.
AUGUST POST,
Secretary and Business Manager, Iowa State Farmers' Alliance.
A. L. STUNTZ,
Legislative Committee, Iowa State Farmers' Alliance.
C. WOOD DAVIS,
President Grain and Cotton Growers' League of America.

Hon. W. A. PEFFER,
United States Senate.

Mr. PEFFER. Of the same general tenor, I have here a paper purporting to be a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of Iowa, signed by W. M. McFarland, secretary of state, which I presume to be genuine. After reciting four paragraphs of preamble it proceeds:

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein), That the Senators and Representatives in Congress assembled be, and are hereby, requested to enact the bill introduced at the present session of Congress by Mr. HATCH of Missouri, being House bill No. 2699, entitled "A bill defining 'options' and 'futures' and imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and for other purposes," or to enact some other law, and at the earliest possible date, whereby the practice of selling farm products by persons who do not own the same, and commonly known as "short selling," shall be so regulated and restricted that the value of articles actually produced by farmers shall not be beaten down, and in a large measure destroyed, by the imaginary and fictitious product continually being offered for sale by the speculator and gambler in these products.

These are given as samples of communications forwarded at different times to different Senators. In addition to them I have received large numbers of special appeals from practical farmers, not such as the Senator from Illinois designates as "professional farmers," but men who do really walk between the handles of the plow, whose hands and whose muscles are hardened by the toil of the farm, asking for some such legislation as that which is now pending.

I have received frequent appeals from editors of farm newspapers, men who, though they may be subject to the charge of being professional farmers, are the best and most skillful class of agriculturists in the country, men who have served an apprenticeship at the plow, at the hoe, at the mattock, and on the farm, men who understand the details of farming and who have progressed far enough along the line to be anxious to assist their neighbors, who have not been in the enjoyment of such facilities as they to improve themselves in the art of farming. This class of men have been continuous in their beseeching for legislation of this character.

There is much reason for this general unanimity of appeal, for both of the great political parties and also the younger and newer and lesser organization, which is coming rapidly upon the map of politics, have agreed in national convention assembled, that legislation which encourages trusts, combinations, and other sorts of monopolies, shall be suppressed by the strong hand of Congress.

We, in asking this legislation, are but following what we have been promising to the people all along, and it is time that some such action be taken. It will not do for members of this body, learned and patriotic as they may be, to insist that farmers are not competent to determine for themselves what they need. We were not commissioned to dictate, but to obey. We are servants, not masters. Our discretion begins where the people's mandate ends. We have no right to set up our opinions against those of the voters behind us, more especially when our constituencies have instructed us upon particular measures.

It is our business to obey their will. If we can not do that and keep faith with our conscience, it seems to me it is our duty to resign our commission into the hands of those who sent us here, and let them select men who will obey their wishes. I understand very well, sir, that measures are not prepared among the people at large. I understand very well that the days of pure democracy have passed, when the people gather in popular assembly, and there enact their legislation.

We have gone far beyond the days of the town meeting in New England; but still, when a measure has been prepared and published to the people, sent broadcast to the world by telegraph and by mail so that the people in their local assemblies have had an opportunity to examine the particular measure, to discuss it and to consider it, not only in their local assemblies, but at their firesides and at their neighborhood meetings and by the wayside, then after having made such examination, when they ask their representatives in the other branch of Congress or in this to support a particular measure, it does seem to me that it is our duty to obey their request. All we should have to do in such a case would be to see that the wording and framework of the bill is properly guarded, and that it properly represents the wishes of the people.

I doubt whether 100 votes could be obtained among the farmers of Kansas in opposition to the kind of legislation proposed in this bill. Therefore in urging its passage I do, as I believe, but their bidding, and it affords me pleasure to add that their will is mine in all matters about which they have given me instructions, as they have in this.

While it is not my purpose to enter into a discussion of the legal phases of the bill, and for several reasons, yet I beg leave to submit one or two suggestions.

I have not gone into an examination of the principles involved as a lawyer would do in a court in the study of a particular case where he alone, or with but one or two colleagues, was interested; but I wish to assert a general principle which I think ought now to govern in legislation of this kind, for I believe the time is at hand when the rigid doctrine of State rights, taught by Calhoun and those who followed him, must, for the purposes of making the Constitution of the country effective, be to a very large extent utterly obliterated. That matter was tested in the beginning of the great war through which we passed. There were many persons who believed—those high in authority, too, and who remained loyal to the Union—that there was no constitutional power in Congress to enforce the laws of the Union to the extent of an armed invasion, as it was called, of the territory of any particular State in the Union, but it was found necessary to get rid of that old and antiquated idea.

We have to-day, on a different line of thought and action, a question coming to us in this very bill, involving the instruments and agencies of interstate commerce. The Constitution has vested Congress with supreme power over the matter of regulating interstate commerce. Wheat, corn, and cotton are articles of interstate commerce, and if it be so that wheat and corn, which are produced in Kansas, and cotton, which is produced in Texas, or in Alabama, are gambled in by a class of speculators in the cities of Chicago and New York, by what provision of the Constitution or of logical reasoning from any provision in the Constitution will the enemies of this bill pretend to deny that this is interstate commerce?

If that be true, if Congress has the right to regulate interstate commerce passing backward and forward, the buying or selling of grain, of cotton, and of all other articles of common use among the people, Congress has the right under the same provision to regulate the instruments and the agencies of commerce, no matter to what extent public welfare may demand that interference.

So it seems to me that, notwithstanding the judgment of the distinguished Senator from Illinois, there is reason in the proposition that Congress shall lay hand upon this particular class of business known as option-dealing and futures-dealing, and prohibit it utterly.

While upon that point, I am inclined to agree with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], who has so ably argued the legal propositions involved, that it would be better for Congress to go to the root of this evil at once by declaring it to be unlawful, prohibiting it absolutely and making the infraction of the law a penal offense, punishable by imprisonment and hard labor not less than a certain specified time, so that there shall be no discretion left in the court except between the degrees which the lawmaking power has laid down.

I had the honor early during the last session of the present Congress to introduce a bill upon this subject and based upon that proposition. It was known as Senate bill 1268. It was entitled "A bill to protect interstate commerce; to prevent dealing in 'options' and 'futures;' to prohibit the formation of 'trusts,' 'combines,' 'corners,' and all other combinations which affect prices; and to punish conspiracies against freedom of trade among the people of the several States."

Section 1 of that bill enumerates a number of articles, corn, wheat, tobacco, cotton, etc.; and all other articles of general use among the people are declared to be articles of interstate commerce. Then it is made unlawful for any person in any manner, by any shift or device, to interfere with the freedom of commerce in these articles. So in that bill I assume that the Congress of the United States has unlimited authority over the entire subject. There are but six or seven sections in the bill. The penal provisions simply declare that the infraction of the law shall be declared a felony and be punishable by a heavy fine and by imprisonment. I will not take time to read the bill, but in order to illustrate the thought which I have in mind I ask that the bill may be incorporated with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The matter referred to will be inserted in the RECORD, in the absence of objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That corn, wheat, cotton, tobacco, cattle, horses, swine, sheep, beef, pork, mutton, wool, rice, cloth, iron, copper, lead, wood, glass, coffee, tea, sugar, oil, paper, and every other article in common and general use among the people of the several States, whether in crude, natural, or manufactured form, are hereby declared to be articles of interstate commerce, and they may be carried from place to place within the jurisdiction of the United States, and be sold or dealt in without interference, obstruction, or impediment by or on the part of any person, company, corporation, trust, combine, syndicate, corner, business, proceeding, or device whatsoever: Provided, That in any State where, by the laws thereof, the manufacture or sale of any article or articles is prohibited, such article or articles shall not be carried into such State for sale, nor shall they be sold or otherwise disposed of there in violation of the laws of such State.

SEC. 2. That every willful act, proceeding, agreement, custom, shift, or device, by whatsoever name or title it may be known, which shall have the effect to in any way interfere with the freedom of transit of articles of interstate commerce, or with the freedom of traffic therein, or which shall have the effect to influence prices or values of commodities by raising or lowering them, or which shall in any manner interrupt the lawful and usual course of trade in such commodities, is hereby declared to be a felony, punishable by imprisonment and hard labor for a period not less than two years nor more than ten years, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 3. That every combination of persons, partnerships, companies, or corporations engaged in the same or similar lines of business, entered into for the purpose of controlling or regulating prices of articles of interstate commerce, or which shall have that effect; every agreement, contract, or arrangement by, between, or among such persons, partnerships, companies, or corporations, whereby one or more of the parties thereto shall agree, promise, or stipulate, expressly or impliedly, directly or indirectly, to temporarily close his, her, or their business, or shall in such manner agree or promise to go out of business, the object or purpose of such agreement, promise, or stipulation being to prevent competition in the particular business, and thus enable the other party or parties to such agreement or stipulation to regulate, control, or influence market prices of the article or articles raised, produced, manufactured, or dealt in by the parties interested in such arrangement, is hereby declared to be a felony, punishable by imprisonment and hard labor for a period not less than two years nor more than ten years, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 4. That all dealings, trades, contracts, agreements, stipulations, promises, proceedings, and devices voluntarily entered into, practiced, used, applied, or adopted for the purpose of collecting and storing any article or articles of interstate commerce with intent to raise or lower market prices or values of such articles, or which shall have that effect, and all proceedings and acts commonly designated "corners," and all dealings in options and futures, and all trading, dealing, or proceeding of that nature, and having like effect, are hereby declared to be felonies, punishable by imprisonment and hard labor for a period not less than two years nor more than ten years, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 5. That for the purposes of this act the word "options" shall be understood to mean any contract or agreement whereby a party thereto, or for any party for whom or in whose behalf such contract or agreement is made, acquires the right or privilege, but is not thereby obligated, to deliver to another at a future time or period any of the articles mentioned in section 1 of this act.

SEC. 6. That for the purpose of this act the word "futures" shall be understood to mean any contract or agreement whereby a party agrees to sell and deliver at a future time to another any of the articles mentioned in section 1 of this act, when at the time of making such contract or agreement the party so agreeing to make such delivery, or the party for whom he acts as agent, broker, or employé in making such contract or agreement, is not at the time of making the same the owner of the article so contracted and agreed to be delivered.

SEC. 7. That district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction in all cases provided for by this act; the provisions hereof shall be specially given in charge to the grand jury at every term, and, under proper instructions by the court, touching the scope and object of the law, the jury shall determine, as a matter of fact, in every case brought under the provisions hereof, whether the testimony adduced on the trial brings the case within the intent of the law, and whether it proves the person or persons charged in the indictment to be guilty of a violation of the law. The indictment may be amended at any stage of the trial or proceedings to conform to the facts proved, but the defendant shall be allowed time and opportunity to answer anything substantially new or different which the amendment charges.

SEC. 8. That in all cases of violations of the provisions of this act by partnerships, companies, corporations, syndicates, or other combinations of persons under particular names, titles, or designations, the person or persons managing or conducting the business, proceeding, or device of such partnerships, companies, corporations, syndicates, or other combinations so violating the law, and all agents, attorneys, and employés thereof knowingly assisting in the management or conduct of such business or device, shall be held amenable to the provisions hereof, and tried and punished accordingly.

SEC. 9. That this act shall take effect and be in force on and after the first day of the second calendar month next after its passage.

Mr. PEFFER. I am pleased to know, sir, that I have been but following the views of my distinguished friend from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], in the amendment he proposes to the Washburn bill, the pending measure, and I will ask, for the purpose of further illustration, that sections 4, 5, 6, and 7 of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi may be incorporated with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be taken in the absence of objection.

The sections referred to in the amendment of Mr. GEORGE are as follows:

SEC. 4. That "options" and "futures," as hereinbefore defined, are hereby declared to be obstructions to and restraints upon commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and to be illegal and void; and if any person shall be a party, either as buyer or seller, to any contract or agreement hereinbefore defined as "options" or "futures" he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction therefor in either the proper district or circuit court of the United States shall be fined for every such offense in a sum not less than the whole sum paid or agreed to be paid or received or agreed to be received on any such contract, if the sum shall amount to as much as $1,000; but if the said sum shall not amount to $1,000, then he shall be fined $1,000, and in addition thereto shall be imprisoned for a period not less than one year nor more than five years; and every distinct contract shall constitute a separate offense of the seller and also of the buyer.

SEC. 5. That any merchant or other exchange, board, or other association in or through which "options" or "futures" or both shall be made, encouraged, settled, regulated, or adjusted are hereby declared to be unlawful combinations to obstruct commerce among the States and with foreign nations. And if it shall appear that any such board, association, or exchange has encouraged, regulated, adjusted, or promoted any such contract or settlement, the said board, association, or exchange shall be subject to proceedings to be instituted in the circuit court of the United States by bill in equity, by which such action of such association or exchange, or by any member thereof, shall be enjoined. * * *

SEC. 6. That any person who shall, in the United States, by letter or telegram or other communication sent from the United States to any foreign country, or by an agent, resident in a foreign country, enter into any contract hereinbefore described as "options" or "futures," or who shall do any other act aiding and encouraging the making of such contract in any foreign country, or shall, in the United States, perform any such contract or pay any damages for nonperformance, or do any act in part performance of such contract or in part satisfaction of such damage, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be triable and punishable as provided for in section 4 of this act.

SEC. 7. That any contract herein defined as "options" or "futures," when made outside the jurisdiction of the United States, shall be held utterly null and void when attempted to be enforced in any court of the United States.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, the discussion of this bill has brought to view one phase of the conflict between two great forces in our civilization, commonly but not properly designated capital and labor. Our later legislation has been in the interest of particular classes of citizens, the rich and the powerful. We have written in bold type in our party platforms that labor shall have its just reward, that it shall be protected against unequal competition from any and every quarter, and orators have grown eloquent asserting the honors of toil; yet the discontent of labor becomes more apparent every year. Never in this country until recently did our farmers find it necessary to organize themselves in secret bodies to consider means of defense against classes that are preying on their business, and never before was it deemed necessary to confront workingmen with armed bodies hired by corporations, nor was it ever before deemed needful that the military arm of the Government be brought to bear in the adjustment of private disputes.

During the present year four States of the Republic were at one time in a state of war—the Army on one side, the people on the other—and it has become common to employ the military to protect public lands against invasion by peaceful citizens in quest of homes. We are now teaching military tactics in our public schools, and even the church has begun to teach the art of war in select institutions of learning where the daily proceedings are opened with prayers to the Prince of Peace.

Within the memory of most of the members of this body a new and distinct class of business men has been developed in this country. Sixty years ago nearly all the farm surplus was carried to market by farmers themselves in vehicles drawn by horses and mules. I remember well my first visit to the city of Baltimore. It was in December, 1839, in company with an older brother, who took a wagonload of flour to that place to exchange it for family supplies to be consumed the next year on the farm, 75 miles distant. Then farmers transacted all their own business. They procured their implements from mechanics in the neighborhood—a complete outfit for an ordinary farm not costing more than $150. They thrashed their grain by simple processes, and marketed their crops themselves by the same means that they employed in moving things about the farm. During the winter season draft animals cost little more to keep them while drawing crops to market than they did in the stables and yards at home and were all the better for the exercise. The farmer then was the leading citizen. The middleman was unknown.

But all that is changed. Seventy-five per cent of American farmers live within 6 miles of the railway station, and that is their market town. Statesmen talk of the markets of the world, but to the farmer these words are meaningless. To him the world's market is a myth. His wheat, his corn, and his cotton are sold, the prices are fixed upon them before they are harvested, and that too by men who are 1,000 miles away from him and whom he does not know. The market value of his crop 100 miles distant from the farm where it grew would not pay the expense of hauling it that far by the old methods. The railroad comes to his door, and the competition of his neighbors throws the ruling market 1,000 to 4,000 miles away. He has no choice but to patronize his enemy, to kiss the hand that smites him. His trade is made the football of gamblers, who play with his fortunes and force him into partnership that they may compel him to share their losses.

Once he was virtually independent of all the world save the local mechanic. He grew fiber on the farm, wove it into cloth there, and of it made garments for his family. Many of the simple utensils of his calling he made himself; but now, if he would procure a shoestring or a hand rake, he goes to the village for it. His shoes are made many miles away from his home. His clothing comes to him from other States. Even his money has to be brought from the "money centers." He is at the mercy of the middlemen. His crops are carried over long lines of railway at enormous expense. His farm implements and family supplies come to him through the same channels, and he is compelled to engage the services of a loan agent if he would borrow a few hundred dollars to secure his home. Between him and all other classes of workers this omnipresent class, the middlemen, is thrust, and he is powerless to get rid of their unjust exactions. They have made it impossible for him to do business without their interference. He is forced to employ them; they live off what he produces; and they are supplemented by the grain gamblers, the railroad wreckers, the usurers, who live upon the sweat and blood of the people. Like a surgeon who plays with his patient's wound, these destroyers laugh while the people toil.

This new class, the middlemen, have had the friendly care of Government not only tenderly but lavishly bestowed upon them, and its protecting arms have been thrown about them until they control the legislation of the country and the courts recognize them as supreme. On Black Friday the United States went into partnership with Wall Street, and since that time the seat of government has been in New York City. Five million farmers elect one-half the members of the National Legislature. They pray, they petition, they memorialize Congress, and they do this unsuccessfully year after year, while half a dozen railroad presidents procure a hearing before a committee of this body within twenty-four hours after a bill for their relief is introduced at their special request.

But the farmer is reasserting himself. He proposes to ascertain whether he has rights which his fellow men are bound to respect, and whether the Government which his ancestors founded in order to establish justice, to promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty shall be turned over to men who live off the misfortunes of other men. The farmer demands a hearing and he asks that these leeches be removed from his business; that the channels of commerce be again opened; that he in common with other producing classes may proceed unhampered to make the most they can out of their several vocations. He asks to be relieved from all unnecessary burdens, and he believes that the enactment of this or a similar measure will go far toward removing one hateful, wasteful, and baneful commercial parasite, the grain gambler, who deals in imaginary quantities at the rate of 100 parts to 1 that is real, charging alike for his dangerous intermeddling, and all this vast burden of expense must come out of the pockets of those who produce and consume the real article.

Mr. President, I see that I am not quite through. I shall perhaps occupy fifteen or twenty minutes longer. It was suggested before I began that perhaps it would be as well to postpone this part of my remarks until to-morrow.

Mr. MANDERSON. In view of the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas, if it will not meet with the objection of the Senator having charge of the bill, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. There are some matters that require attention.

Mr. PEFFER. With the understanding that I have the floor when the bill is again taken up to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding of the Chair. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After six minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 22, 1892, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate December 21, 1892.

CONSUL.

John C. Sundberg, of San Francisco, Cal., to be consul of the United States at Bagdad.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Quartermaster's Department.

First Lieut. John B. Eaton, Third Artillery, to be assistant quartermaster, with the rank of captain.

First Lieut. Edgar S. Dudley, Second Artillery, to be assistant quartermaster, with the rank of captain.

Subsistence Department.

First Lieut. Tasker H. Bliss, First Artillery, to be commissary of subsistence, with the rank of captain.

Cavalry arm.

First Lieut. Hoel S. Bishop, Fifth Cavalry, to be captain.

Second Lieut. Peter E. Traub, First Cavalry, to be first lieutenant.

Infantry arm.

First Lieut. Francis E. Eltonhead, Twenty-first Infantry, to be captain.

Second Lieut. Armand I. Lasseigne, Seventh Infantry, to be first lieutenant.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 21, 1892.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

J. W. SUMMERHAYES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Assistant Treasurer of the United States, transmitting a statement in the case of J. W. Summerhayes, calling for relief through Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the Sixth Annual Report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitted by the chairman of said Commission; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

REGENTS OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the joint resolution (S. R. 123) to fill vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

REPORT ON FISH AND FISHERIES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following resolution of the Senate:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, covering the operations of the Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, be printed, and that there be printed 8,000 extra copies, of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, the illustrations to be obtained by the Public Printer under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The House Committee on Printing has reported favorably a resolution identical in terms with this. I ask unanimous consent that this resolution be now considered.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the resolution, which was concurred in.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. OHLIGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 6644) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the sale of title of United States in lot 3, in square south of square 950, approved March 3, 1891;

A bill (H. R. 8760) to provide for the sale of navy-yard lands in the city of Brooklyn; and

A bill (H. R. 8907) to increase the pension of John Malloy.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 6737) granting a pension to Delzell R. Bradford, Twenty-fourth Michigan Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 9417) to incorporate the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia.

It also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolutions:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, December 22, they will stand adjourned until Wednesday, January 4, 1893;

Also:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 30,000 copies of the special consular report relating to streets and highways in foreign countries, heretofore published by the Department of State, of which 10,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 20,000 for the House of Representatives.

It also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3298) authorizing the sale of land in the vicinity of Fort Mifflin, on the River Delaware.

GOVERNMENT OF OKLAHOMA, ETC.

Mr. TERRY. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill reported by the Committee on Territories.

The bill (H. R. 9652) to amend an act to provide for a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, to enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, approved May 2, 1890, was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the report will be read before consent is given.

Mr. TERRY. I would like to have the report read, as it sets forth fully the necessity for this legislation.

Mr. BYNUM. I shall object to the consent, except the bill be taken up in its regular order. I want more time than can be given to its consideration in this way.

The SPEAKER. Objection being make the bill is not before the House.

WHITE MOUNTAIN APACHE INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9527) to restore to the public domain a portion of the White Mountain Apache Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Arizona, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the White Mountain Apache Indian Reservation in the Territory of Arizona, established by Executive orders dated November 9, 1871; December 14, 1872; August 5, 1873; July 21, 1874; April 27, 1876; January 26, 1877, and March 31, 1877, as lies within the following boundary lines, namely: Beginning at the summit of Chromo Butte, a prominent peak of the Apache Mountains about 3¼ miles southwest of the town of McMillen; thence running north 45 degrees east a distance of 12 miles; thence due north to the middle of Salt River, a distance of 5 miles, more or less; thence down the middle of Salt River to the intersection thereof with the present western boundary line of said reservation; thence southerly with the said western boundary line as the same has been ascertained and located by John C. Smith, deputy surveyor, to the place of beginning, be, and the same is hereby, restored to the public domain and declared to be public lands of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the lands hereby restored shall be subject to entry under the laws providing for the disposal of the public domain in force at the date of the passage of this act: Provided, That each person seeking to obtain title to portions of said land, not mineral, under the homestead laws, shall, in addition to the legal fees and charges of the register and receiver, pay for the land so entered not less than $1.25 per acre in cash: Provided further, That any location, entry, or entries, mineral or nonmineral, heretofore made on said lands or any part thereof by any qualified person or persons shall bear date and be allowed the same as though said lands had been public lands at the date of the institution of such proceedings; but no such entry shall be deemed completed except upon the payment to the proper officers of the regular purchase price of said lands irrespective of any payments which may have been heretofore made.

SEC. 3. That upon making payment as prescribed in the preceding section all entries and mill-site applications heretofore allowed upon any of said lands shall be, and the same are hereby, confirmed, and patents shall issue therefor.

SEC. 4. That all moneys accruing from the sale of the lands hereby restored, except the fees allowed by law to the register and receiver, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and applied solely as follows:

First. To reimburse the United States for all expenses actually and necessarily incurred in running said boundary lines and surveying said lands.

Second. The remainder to be held in trust for the sole use and benefit of the tribes of Indians now located upon said reservation, and to be expended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction and control of the Secretary of the Interior, in such manner and for such purposes as may to him seem to be for the best interests of said Indian tribes.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior shall submit this act to the adult male Indians on said reservation, and the restoration above provided for shall become operative only upon the agreement of a majority of said adult male Indians thereto; and the Secretary of the Interior shall proceed to ascertain the wishes of said Indians in accordance with such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hope there will be some statement or explanation of this matter.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the report will be read, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Let the report be read, as it will explain it very fully.

The report (by Mr. ENGLISH, from the Committee on Indian Affairs) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2780) entitled "A bill to change the western boundary line of the White Mountain Apache Indian Reservation, Ariz.," submit the following report:

The White Mountain Apache Indian Reservation was originally established by Executive order dated November 9, 1871, pursuant to a recommendation emanating from the Engineer's office, Headquarters Military Division of the Pacific, approved by the Secretary of the Interior. (See report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, 1886, page 298.)

By Executive order of December 14, 1872, the reservation was enlarged by the addition on the south of a strip of land 15 miles wide and the western boundary line was described therein as running from a point on the "southern edge of the Black Mesa due north of the Sombrero or Plumoso Butte; thence due south to said Sombrero, or Plumoso Butte; thence in the direction of the Picache Colorado to the crest of the Apache Mountains, following said crest down the Salt River to Pinal Creek to the top of the Pinal Mountains; thence due south to a point 15 miles south of the Gila River."

No other orders purporting to enlarge the area of said reservation have ever been issued.

By Executive order of April 27, 1876, the reservation was reduced in area as follows:

"It is hereby ordered that all that portion of the White Mountain Indian Reservation in Arizona Territory lying west of the following-described line, viz: Commencing at the northwest corner of the present reserve, a point at the southern edge of the Black Mesa, due north of Sombrero or Plumoso Butte; thence southeastwardly to Chromo Peak; thence in a southerly direction to the mouth of the San Pedro River; thence due south to the southern boundary of the reservation, be, and the same hereby is, restored to the public domain."

The description of the west boundary line in this order differs materially from that contained in either of the prior orders establishing the same, in that a line running from Sombrero Butte to Chromo Butte is substituted for the lines running from Sombrero Butte "in the direction of the Picache Colorado, to the crest of the Apache Mountains, following said crest down the Salt River to Pinal Creek," etc.

In passing upon the various orders relating to this reservation, the Interior Department has construed the order of 1876 purporting to restore lands to the public domain as in fact enlarging the reservation by adding thereto a triangular section of country lying between the lines connecting Sombrero or Plumoso Butte, "the Picache Colorado to the crest of the Apache Mountains," and Chromo Butte, containing about 60 square miles of land.

Prior to May 16, 1890, the said western boundary line had never been established in the field by an accurate survey, and its exact position was involved in much doubt.

In 1875 rich mineral deposits were discovered in the immediate vicinity of the triangular tract of land above referred to, and many miners and others in good faith located the same under the mineral laws of the United States, it being generally understood at that time that the lands so located were outside of the reservation. Acting under this impression the local land officers at Florence, Ariz., allowed various entries to be made, and received the purchase price tendered therefor. Upon at least two of the entries so allowed the Commissioner of the General Land Office issued patents.

The town of McMillen was also established, and soon became a flourishing mining camp containing upward of 3,000 inhabitants.

Under the general impression that the town of McMillen was outside of the reservation limits, the Indians who desired to visit there for purposes of barter and trade, it is said, were first required to obtain a pass authorizing them to leave the reservation. A post-office was established at McMillen, mines were opened, shafts sunk, quartz mills and other necessary buildings erected, all at enormous expense.

In 1878, at the suggestion of the Indian agent, further action looking towards the disposition of said lands was suspended until it could be determined by an accurate survey in the field whether they were in fact outside of the reservation, as established by the various Executive orders above referred to.

By act of Congress of March 2, 1889 (25 Stats., p. 959), $5,000, or so much thereof as should be found necessary, was appropriated for the survey of said west line, and on May 16, 1890, a contract for the survey was let to United States Deputy Surveyor John C. Smith, who was instructed to survey the line according to the description contained in the order of April 27, 1876, which he did.

According to this survey the town of McMillen, together with its mines and mills, is shown to be within the reservation limits, about three-fourths of a mile distant from the said western line.

In view of the crude method originally used in defining the boundaries of this reservation and the good faith in which the improvements referred to were made, it is conceded that the inhabitants of the said town of McMillen and others claiming to have acquired rights in the immediate neighborhood are entitled to relief.

In a report dated May 10, 1892, referred to your committee by the Secretary of the Interior, the acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs, referring to House bill 2780 as originally introduced, stated that—

"This office would interpose no objections to the passage of the bill if it made provision for obtaining the consent of the Indians and for payment to them of a reasonable compensation therefor, to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior, and I believe the Indians would readily give their consent to the segregation upon such terms."

The substitute bill reported herewith eliminates the objectionable features of the original bill and secures to the Indians the benefits arising from the sale of the lands to be restored thereby.

The amount of land restored by this bill approximates 32,000 acres. It is not used or occupied in any way by the Indians, not even for grazing purposes. Being rough and mountainous, it is unfit for agricultural purposes and is not in any way a source of income to them.

Your committee therefore report the accompanying bill as a substitute, with the recommendation that it do pass and with a motion that the original bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the reading of the report was not distinctly understood, as there seems to be a great deal of confusion for some reason in the Hall this morning; and it is very desirable to know first the views of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on this subject before giving consent to its consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs has favorably reported upon the proposition, as is shown by the report itself, which has just been read.

But, Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that, as I could not myself hear the reading of the report in full, it may be as well to make a brief statement of the question involved and the necessity for the passage of the bill.

Mr. PEEL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arizona—I did not catch the reading of the report myself—to state what compensation the Indians are to receive for this cession of a part of their reservation, and how the proceeds are to be disposed of. I do not remember the action taken upon this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I will explain that point fully.

Mr. PEEL. Where do the proceeds go?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. There is no doubt that the proceeds will go to the Indians. The proposition embodies the requirement that you shall first obtain the consent of the Indians. When that is obtained the money derived from the lands in question is to be applied in trust for the Indians, to be expended in their behalf by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. But under no circumstances can anything be done until their consent is first obtained.

As shown by the report itself, the tract of land in question has been included in this reservation by a mistake. The order of 1876, instead of restoring a part of this reservation to the public domain, actually enlarged it, as prior to this time the Indians upon the reservation, under the impression that this town of McMillen was outside of the reservation limits, were required to obtain a pass or permit to leave the reservation and go to the town. It is a little mountain town in a rough mountain region, with no trees or vegetation around it, as is generally the case in mining regions.

This town of McMillen was established outside the boundary line of the reservation. The original boundary line on the west side of the reservation was so crudely defined that this town, by an actual survey made last year or the year before, was found to be within the reservation. Now the object of the proposed legislation is to straighten this boundary line, which if done will leave the town outside of the reservation, and pay the Indians for the lands thus taken from their reservation. In order to do this, however, as I have said, it is first necessary to obtain the consent of the Indians themselves.

Mr. SIMPSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him this question: Are there not within the lines proposed to be ceded to the town in question some mineral deposits?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. There are. It is a regular mining town.

Mr. SIMPSON. And this bill would have the effect of confirming the title of the claimants to these mines, which as a matter of fact really belong to the Indians of this reservation?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. They do not belong to the Indians unless by this error in making the survey of the line you propose to take the property away from these men, who have obtained, some of them, patents from the General Government, and who have been working the mines for many years past.

Mr. SIMPSON. But this property is within the reservation.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is within the reservation by the running of this new line, but according to the old boundary line it was on the outside. However, the running of the new line, it seems to me, should not take away the rights of these men who have occupied the lands for so many years.

Mr. SIMPSON. The plain fact is that the mineral deposits belong to the Indians now; and this is simply to confirm title to the white men who are working the mines.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. There is no question but that it will confirm the title to these men, who have patents to the land, as I have said, in some instances, and who have been working these mines as far back as 1876, I think.

Mr. SIMPSON. Is not that the milk in the cocoanut, anyway?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The milk in the cocoanut is to give these men title to their property, of course.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is what I thought.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. And the Indian gets his money for the land just exactly the same price that the Government gets.

Mr. SIMPSON. And it would have the effect of developing these mining interests there?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. SIMPSON. And you think it would be better to have that done than to have the Indians hold it, do you?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Indians do not use it at all. There is not an Indian habitation within a hundred miles.

Mr. SIMPSON. Is there any prospect of the Indians developing it?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Oh, there is no prospect of the Indians developing anything on earth. They never did and never will.

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, they have developed a great deal of sympathy—among people who do not know them.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to hear the communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs relative to this bill read. I understand there is such a communication.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is in the report. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs raised objection to the bill originally introduced on the ground that it did not protect the Indians sufficiently as to the fund.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the portion of the report which contains the statement of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The Clerk read as follows:

This office would interpose no objections to the passage of the bill if it made provision for obtaining the consent of the Indians and for payment to them of a rersonable compensation therefor, to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior, and I believe the Indians would readily give their consent to the segregation upon such terms.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is that signed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is taken from a communication signed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, sent to the committee, and the committee took that from the communication and put it into this report.

Mr. ENGLISH. That is a correct statement.

Mr. PEEL. If the gentleman will allow me, I will state for the benefit of the committee that the report was made by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ENGLISH], and I can say with all assurance that that extract would never have been in that report of the gentleman from New Jersey if it had not come from the Commissioner.

Mr. ENGLISH. It is a correct extract from the Commissioner's communication, beyond all doubt. The committee have discussed that matter thoroughly. The only objection made was that the Indians' consent was not asked nor the compensation adequate. The substitute provided for that, removing entirely the objections of the Department. There is no question as to the equity of the bill.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Has the present bill as now pending been submitted to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ENGLISH] can tell you better than I can. I do not know; but I do know the present bill exactly meets the suggestions that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs made when he said that if the bill contained the provisions he suggested the Department would raise no other objection to it.

Mr. ENGLISH. I believe he saw and read the bill. That is my recollection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] for the immediate consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OATES, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

GOVERNMENT OF OKLAHOMA, ETC.

Mr. BYNUM. I withdraw the objection I made to the bill presented by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] this morning.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill again.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9652) to amend an act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, to enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States courts in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, approved May 2, 1890.

The SPEAKER. This bill has been read, and the Chair submitted the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] for unanimous consent for its consideration. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] objected, and has subsequently withdrawn his objection. Is there now objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. I should like to hear it read again.

Mr. TERRY. I would like to make an explanation of the urgency of this matter.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the clerk of the United States court for the Indian Territory shall charge only such fees for services performed in civil cases as are provided for clerks of circuit courts in the State of Arkansas, and as enumerated in chapter 63 of Mansfield's Digest; and the marshal of the United States court and the constable of the commissioner's court shall charge for all services performed in civil cases the same fees as are provided by law for sheriffs within the State of Arkansas, and as are specifically enumerated in chapter 63 of Mansfield's Digest, and the commissioners appointed by the court shall receive only such fees for services performed in civil cases as are now provided by law for justices of the peace within the State of Arkansas in chapter 63 of Mansfield's Digest.

SEC. 2. That hereafter appeals from the United States court for the Indian Territory to the circuit court of appeals for the eighth judicial circuit of the United States shall be allowed where the sum in controversy exceeds $200, and shall be regulated as appeals from the several district and circuit courts of the United States: Provided, That the appellant shall execute a bond with good and sufficient sureties in double the amount of the judgment and costs, conditioned for the security and payment of same, with interest at 6 per cent per annum; said bond to be approved by the court; and no appeals from the United States court for the Indian Territory shall be allowed to the Supreme Court of the United States unless such appeal could be taken from any circuit or district court of the United States to the Supreme Court of the United States.

SEC. 3. That section 39 of an act entitled "An act to provide for a temporary government of the Territory of Oklahoma, to enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved May 2, 1890, be amended as follows:

"SEC. 39. That the United States court in the Indian Territory shall have all the power of United States circuit courts or circuit court judges to appoint commissioners within said Indian Territory, who shall be learned in the law, and shall be known as United States commissioners; but not exceeding five commissioners shall be appointed for any one division, and such commissioners when appointed shall have within the district to be designated in the order appointing them all the powers of commissioners of circuit courts of the United States. They shall be ex-officio notaries public, and shall have the power to solemnize marriages. The provisions of chapter 91 of the said laws of Arkansas, regulating the jurisdiction and procedure before justices of the peace, are hereby extended over the Indian Territory; and said commissioners shall exercise all the powers conferred by the laws of Arkansas upon justices of the peace within their districts; they shall have original jurisdiction, exclusive of the United States court, over all controversies where the sum or amount in controversy does not exceed $300, and shall have original jurisdiction concurrent with such court in all cases where the sum or amount in controversy does not exceed $500. And appeals from said commissioner to the United States court for the Indian Territory shall be allowed and be tried de novo where the sum or amount in controversy exceeds the sum of $20; said appeals shall be taken in like manner to appeals from judgments of the courts of justices of the peace in Arkansas to the circuit court. Said commissioner shall have concurrently with the United States court for the Indian Territory power to hear and finally determine all offenses against the law of the United States in force within the Indian Territory the punishment for which is not hard labor in the penitentiary, and shall have power to hear and accept pleas of guilty in such cases and to collect fines and penalties in like manner as is now provided for the clerk of the United States court for the Indian Territory, and shall have power to remit or reduce the payment of fine and costs in like manner with the United States court for the Indian Territory. The United States court for the Indian Territory shall appoint a constable for each of the commissioners' districts designated by the court, and the constable so appointed shall perform all the duties required of a constable under the provisions of chapter 24, Mansfield's Digest, and other laws of the State of Arkansas. Each commissioner and constable shall execute to the United States, for the security of the public, a good and sufficient bond in the sum of $5,000, to be approved by the judge appointing him, conditioned that he will faithfully discharge the duties of his office and account for and pay over all moneys coming to his hands, and he shall take an oath to support the Constitution and the laws of the United States and to faithfully perform the duties required of him by law."

SEC. 4. That instead of three divisions now provided for, under section 30 of the act above referred to, the Indian Territory for the purpose of holding terms of said court is hereby divided into four divisions, to be known as the first, second, third, and fourth divisions. The first division shall consist of the country occupied by the Indian tribes of the Quapaw Indian Agency, and all that part of the Cherokee country east of the ninety-sixth meridian, and all of the Creek country, and the place of holding said court therein shall be at Muscogee. The second division shall consist of the Choctaw country, and the place of holding said court therein shall be at South McAlester. The third division shall consist of all the Chickasaw country south of the line running from the east line to the west line of the Chickasaw Nation through old Fort Arbuckle, and known as the base line of the public land surveys of the Chickasaw country, and the place of holding said court therein shall be Ardmore. The fourth division shall consist of all of the Chickasaw country north of said base line running through old Fort Arbuckle, and of the Seminole country lying north of the South Canadian River, and the place for holding said court therein shall be at Purcell.

SEC. 5. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with these provisions are hereby repealed.

With an amendment, as follows:

Page 4, line 37, after the word "Territory," strike out the words "the punishment for which is not" and insert the words "not punishable by."

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we will hear what the gentleman's explanation is.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] will be allowed to make a brief statement.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, the particular object of the proposed legislation is to reduce the cost of the administration of justice in the Indian Territory, and to relieve the overcrowded condition of the Federal courts by enlarging the jurisdiction of the commissioners' courts in civil and misdemeanor cases. I would like to read in this connection a letter I have received from a reputable attorney up there which shows the urgency for this class of legislation. He states that:

In matter of additional jurisdiction to the commissioners. This court has existed for four years and by reason of the fact that everything from $100 upward must be brought in court, the docket is two years behindhand.

The extended jurisdiction to the commissioners would largely relieve this. It results in litigants bringing witnesses here term after term until the litigants end by fighting for the costs. But the greatest evil of the present law is in criminal matters. A man is arrested on the border of Arkansas, Missouri, or Kansas. He is carried before the commissioner at Tahlequah, Vinita, or Muskogee. His offense is profane language, disturbing religious worship, or simple assault. He wants to plead guilty; he can pay a small fine. He is away from his friends; can not furnish bond; can not plead guilty; and so must go to jail like a felon and await the meeting of court thirty, sixty, ninety, or one hundred and twenty days off.

One case I saw where a man charged with gambling lay in jail sixty days awaiting the convenience of a court of the United States to hear him plead guilty. The Government is doubly taxed for costs and no one is benefited except the professional witnesses. It is a great wrong as the law now exists, and should be remedied as soon as Congress knows that such a condition exists.

In the matter of fees, as read there, the sixty-third chapter of Mansfield's Digest, is already in force in the Territory, governing the fees; but it is doubtful as to what part refers to the marshals and what part to the clerk. So this bill specifically defines that the fees applicable to the sheriff under the laws of Arkansas shall apply to the marshal, and those applicable to the clerk shall apply to the clerk of that court, and those applicable to the constable shall apply to the constable of the commissioner's court. The design is to make certain the law in regard to these fees. The fees there now are like crimes, "constructive treason" at common law. You never know what they are until you are confronted with the charge. This is in order to make it certain. As shown by this letter, this measure presents a case of urgency, and that it reduces the cost in the enforcement of Federal justice. That is the reason I ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

Now, when our committee was called, the chairman was absent, and consequently we did not respond. But I was directed by the acting chairman to call this bill up as soon as I could get an opportunity. My committee will soon be reached, but I wanted to start home, in order to be there Christmas, and hence I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. From what committee does this come?

Mr. TERRY. It comes from the Committee on the Territories, and it was very fully considered by that committee.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. Has it ever been before the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. TERRY. No, sir, but I have talked with the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary in regard to the matter, and he finds no objection to the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. It seems to me that this bill belongs to that committee if it belongs to any. Has this bill been submitted to the Attorney-General?

Mr. TERRY. No, sir; not that I know of. I had never understood that such a course was necessary. I consulted the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, and he has examined the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. I think, Mr. Speaker, it is too important a bill to be passed without the approval of the Attorney-General.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will my colleague allow me to make a statement?

Mr. TERRY (to Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois). I think Congress ought to have something to say about a matter of this kind.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will my colleague allow me one moment? The jurisdiction of the Committee on the Territories over this matter was decided by Mr. Speaker CARLISLE, when he decided that all matters relating to the courts in the Territories came within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Territories. The provision to which the gentleman refers was originally incorporated in the bill for the organization of this Territory, and looking over the language I see a portion of it was written by myself at that time.

This is a very important matter, and if the gentleman understood it as I do he would not hesitate to give this jurisdiction. It simply enables the commissioners to have jurisdiction over minor matters and misdemeanor cases, so as to dispose of them in the locality in which they occur. To compel the parties to be held over to the United States courts, which meet at Fort Smith and Paris, Tex., because there is no system of local courts that can have cognizance of their cases, causes an accumulation of cases and of expenses that is frequently embarrassing to the parties who are interested or who are defendants in the cases; and I think this jurisdiction ought to be granted at once. All those who are cognizant of the condition in the locality, all the officers of the Government down there recognize the necessity of prompt action upon this subject.

Mr. TERRY. I would like the gentleman from Texas, chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, to make a statement of his examination of this bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this bill ought to be submitted to the Attorney-General.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE (to Mr. CULBERSON). Does this bill apply anywhere except to the Territories?

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. Until this bill has the approval of the Attorney-General I shall have to object to its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects.

WATER COMMISSIONERS OF ERIE, PA.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9826) granting certain rights and privilege, to the board of water commissioners of the city of Erie, Pa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the board of water commissioners of the city of Erie, State of Pennsylvania, be, and they are hereby, granted the right to lay, extend, and maintain their inlake pipe from their present pumping station at the foot of Chestnut street, at Erie, Pennsylvania, across the Bay of Presque Isle to the peninsula, thence across the peninsula to the shore of Lake Erie, thence into the lake as far as may be advisable to secure pure water, together with the use of such land on the peninsula as may be needed for the proper laying, protection, and maintaining the pipe and the erection of all buildings necessary for the construction, care, and supervision of the work, and for maintaining the same.

Also such land as may be required for a road, or roads, to and from the mainland to place of crossing, and the use of same; all according to certain plans and specifications submitted by the above board of water commissioners to the Secretary of War, and under his direction and supervision.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask for the reading of the report of the committee.

The report (by Mr. AMERMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9826) granting certain rights and privileges to the board of water commissioners of the city of Erie, Pa., have had the same under consideration and report it back with the recommendation that it pass with the following amendments:

Strike out the following words in line 3: "board of water commissioners of" and insert "commissioners of waterworks in."

Strike out "inlake," in line 5, and insert "intake."

Strike out the word "certain," in line 16, and insert the word "such."

Strike out all of line 17 and insert the words "as may be approved by."

Insert before the word "under," in line 18, the words "such plans shall be executed."

Amend the title so as to make it read: "A bill granting certain rights and privileges to the commissioners of waterworks in the city of Erie, Pa"

With these amendments the bill is approved by the War Department.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 16, 1892.

SIR: I have the honor to return, herewith, House bill 9826, Fifty-second Congress, second session, granting certain rights and privileges to the board of water commissioners of the city of Erie, Pa., which was referred to this Department on the 14th instant, and invite your attention to the inclosed report of the Chief of Engineers, dated the 15th instant, and to the amended copy of the bill referred to therein.

Very respectfully,

L. A. GRANT,
Assistant Secretary of War.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS,
House of Representatives.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., December 15, 1892.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the reference to this office of letter of the 14th instant from the Chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands of the House of Representatives, inclosing, for views of the War Department thereon, H. R. 9826, Fifty-second Congress, second session, "A bill granting certain rights and privileges to the board of water commissioners of the city of Erie, Pa.," and in returning the same I beg to recommend that the bill be amended as follows:

Line 16, strike out the word "certain," and insert in lieu thereof "such."

Strike out the whole of line 17 and insert "as may be approved by."

Line 18, before the word "under," insert "such plans shall be executed."

A copy of the bill with the proposed amendments indicated thereon is herewith submitted, and, as thus amended, I know of no objections to its passage by Congress.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. LINCOLN CASEY,
Brig. Gen., Chief of Engineers.

Hon. S. B. ELKINS,
Secretary of War.

At the conclusion of the reading:

Mr. DOCKERY. I withdraw the demand for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. That is all of the report.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, this bill has the approval of the War Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania for the present consideration of this bill. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendments proposed by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GRISWOLD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. MCALEER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia demands the regular order, which is equivalent to an objection, otherwise the Chair would recognize the gentleman.

PURCHASE OF FORT BROWN, TEXAS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] desires to make a statement respecting a bill which has passed the House.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask unanimous consent that the action of the House upon the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which House bill 9649, to provide for the purchase of Fort Brown, Texas, was passed on Saturday last be rescinded, so that the motion to reconsider will be still pending.

I make this request because the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN], in whose district Fort Brown is situated, early last summer when the subject was pending before the Committee on Military Affairs, met me in the corridor and asked me to give him notice when the bill was to be considered by the committee, in order that he might be heard on the subject, and I agreed to do so. Subsequently he met me and stated that as to the matter about which he had spoken to me he did not care to give it further attention, and I assumed that this remark referred to this bill.

The gentleman was detained at home by sickness on the day when the bill was taken up and passed by the House, as he is to-day, and he wishes me to make this request because he says that if he had had an opportunity he would have appeared before the committee, and would also have contested the passage of the bill in the House. He further states that when he spoke to me the second time his remark referred not to this bill but to another which also was before the Committee on Military Affairs. I have no doubt that I then misunderstood him. Therefore, in view of these circumstances, and in justice to the gentleman from Texas, I make this request for this unanimous consent.

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I renew the demand for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. That demand is equivalent to an objection. The Clerk will call the standing and select committees.

OFFENSES ON THE HIGH SEAS.

Mr. BYNUM, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2625) to provide for the punishment of offenses on the high seas; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, and ordered to be printed.

LINES OF BATTLE AT GETTYSBURG.

Mr. LAPHAM, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2914) to provide for marking the lines of battle and position of troops of the army of Northern Virginia, at Gettysburg, Pa., and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

APPOINTMENTS IN STAFF CORPS.

Mr. OUTHWAITE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 3013) providing that appointments in staff corps be made from the line of the Army; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PERSONNEL OF THE NAVY.

Mr. HERBERT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back a concurrent resolution providing for a joint commission of three members each from the House of Representatives and Senate of the United States to consider questions relating to the personnel of the Navy; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PAY OF JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL OF THE NAVY.

Mr. HERBERT also, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (H. R. 9932) to amend the act approved June 8, 1880, relating to the pay of the Judge-Advocate-General of the Navy; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PAY AND RETIREMENT OF MATES.

Mr. MCALEER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (H. R. 2708) relating to the pay and retirement of mates in the United States Navy; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This completes the call of committees. The second morning hour begins at 1 o'clock. The call rests with the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state, for the information of the gentleman from Indiana who objected to the pending bill on yesterday, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HOOKER] has charge of the measure and I have received a telegram from him stating that he can not be here to-day. I therefore ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice, so that it may be called up again when the gentleman from New York is present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to understand exactly what the gentleman means by that request.

Mr. PEEL. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that if that request is granted the bill can be called up in any morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to one hour's further consideration of this measure in the morning hour.

Mr. PEEL. I understand that; but I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice until the gentleman from New York [Mr. HOOKER] can be present.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the second morning hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. TERRY objected, but subsequently withdrew the objection.

There being no further objection, the second morning hour was dispensed with.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, does that dispense with the call of the next committee in order, or with the work that we did on yesterday?

The SPEAKER. It dispenses entirely with the second morning hour for to-day. The Clerk will report the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Wednesday, the 21st instant, beginning after the second morning hour, be set apart for the consideration of such business as may be called up by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce; nothing in this order to interfere with the right to consider revenue and appropriation bills.

LIGHT-HOUSES, ETC.

Mr. WISE. I call up the bill (H. R. 9955) providing for sundry light-houses and other aids to navigation.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. WISE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. MCRAE in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9955) providing for sundry light-houses and other aids to navigation.

The bill was read, as follows:

Forty-seventh. At Grays Harbor, Washington, a first-order light-house and fog signal, at a cost not to exceed $60,000 in addition to the appropriation of $15,500 made in the act approved July 7, 1884, for a harbor light at this point.

Forty-eighth. On North Head, Cape Disappointment, in the State of Washington, a first-order light-house, not to cost more than $50,000; and when the light herein provided for shall have been established, the light now at Cape Disappointment to be discontinued and a light of the fourth order to be substituted therefor.

Forty-ninth. At New York Slough, entrance to San Joaquin River, in California, a light and fog signal, at a cost not exceeding $10,000.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Fiftieth. At the mouth of Mermenteau River, in Louisiana, a light-house, at a cost not exceeding $7,000.

Fifty-first. At twenty-five different points on the Willamette River, between the cities of Salem and Portland, Oregon, beacon lights and buoys, at a cost not exceeding $5,000, and the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BRICKNER. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce honored me by assigning to me the duty of formulating this bill for the establishment of various aids to navigation. Heretofore much difficulty has been encountered on various occasions in getting proper establishments of this kind authorized. When measures of this sort have been brought up separately and considered, possibly by unanimous consent, it has sometimes happened that appropriations for unworthy objects have been made, while those for worthy ones have been withheld. The committee has taken great pains in preparing this measure.

Every item embraced in the bill has been approved by the Secretary of the Navy and the Light-House Board, and has been unanimously passed in committee. The bill appropriates no money, but simply provides for the establishment of these light-houses and other aids to navigation. The bill is not confined to a single river or a particular lake or special coast. It covers the entire navigable waters of the United States. While the amount involved in the bill, $656,900, is considerable, it is much smaller than it ought to be, in view of the vast growth of commerce and navigation on the rivers, lakes, and oceans.

I presume it is not necessary for me to impress upon the members of the House the necessity of providing these instrumentalities for the saving of property and life. So many hundreds of millions of dollars having been expended in improving our harbors, our rivers, and our lakes—in affording increased facilities for commerce—it must be apparent that we should provide for the safety of the vast number of lives and afford proper protection for the millions of property that are dependent upon measures of this kind.

As there were no light-houses or fog-signal stations established during the last session of Congress, the bill covers the service for two years. The bill embraces fifty-one items, but they are not all for new stations. Some of these items provide for the removal of stations to more convenient places; others provide for the repair of existing light-houses.

Mr. Chairman, having made this statement, I do not wish to cut off any reasonable amount of debate or inquiry; I am willing to grant reasonable opportunity for amendment or debate, if there is any opposition to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the committee report any amendments?

Mr. BRICKNER. No, sir. If any member desires to oppose the bill I hope he will state what time he wants.

Mr. HOLMAN addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRICKNER] yield the floor?

Mr. BRICKNER. I simply asked how much time other gentlemen wanted. We wish to make an arrangement as to time, if there is any objection to the measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is entitled to an hour.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to take the floor in my own right.

Mr. COOMBS. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like to occupy a few moments.

Mr. BRICKNER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; whenever my friend is through with his remarks I will take the floor.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. We have a great many bills——

Mr. HOLMAN. I am aware of that, but we ought to proceed in the regular way.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. We have a good deal of work in the hands of our committee, and the House has given us only this day for its consideration. We are without a quorum in the House, as the gentleman is aware——

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to my friend that he is consuming time unnecessarily.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. We are perfectly willing to yield to the gentleman ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. BRICKNER. I reserve my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield the floor?

Mr. WISE. How much time does the gentleman from Indiana want?

Mr. HOLMAN. I can not say.

Mr. WISE. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will be frank and fair about this matter.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am.

Mr. WISE. This is the second time that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has been granted by this House a day for the consideration of its business. The day which was assigned to us in the last session was wasted, and we do not want this day wasted in the same manner. Our committee have reported a number of important bills, and I undertake to say that as large a number of people in this country are interested in the measures reported by our committee as in the bills from any other committee. The bills which we have reported have been carefully considered by our committee, and we ask that they shall receive proper consideration.

We are perfectly willing to yield to the gentleman from Indiana, or to any gentleman on the other side of the question whatever time they require. But we do not want the day wasted in filibustering or in proceedings for delay.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. The spirit of economy can apply in the matter of time as well as in anything else. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRICKNER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting the debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I can assure my friend that if he resorts to that expedient to shut off discussion it will probably produce some delay.

Mr. BRICKNER. I am willing that there shall be reasonable time.

The motion of Mr. BRICKNER was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CHIPMAN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCRAE reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9955) had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BRICKNER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to further consider the pending bill; and pending that motion I move that all general debate be limited to twenty minutes, ten on each side.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should think a little more time than that would be required, and I move to amend by making the debate thirty minutes.

Mr. WISE. We accept that.

Mr. BRICKNER. I will modify the motion to that extent.

The motion to limit debate to thirty minutes was agreed to.

The motion to go into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCRAE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9955), and by order of the House all general debate has been limited to thirty minutes, fifteen on each side. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRICKNER], to control fifteen minutes, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] the time in opposition, fifteen minutes.

Mr. BRICKNER. I reserve my time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am a little surprised that gentlemen assume that as a matter of course there will be dilatory tactics employed to defeat this bill. I think gentlemen know that I have never opposed appropriations for the light-house system within reasonable limits, although I have opposed the logrolling method of securing an enlargement of the system.

This class of bills should have a fair and proper consideration. The objection to this bill is in the main that it combines a large number of interests. It stands on the same footing as a bill authorizing the construction of a large number of public buildings. I remember that in the Forty-second or Forty-third Congress a bill authorizing a number of public buildings was laid upon the table and remained there, as it was not regarded as safe legislation.

But I find on examination that in 1888, four years ago, we passed a bill containing seventeen separate provisions for light-houses, so I am not able to say to the House that there is no precedent for this bill. There is such a precedent; I am sorry for it. This provides for fifty-one light-houses. See how rapidly a system of legislation like this expands. But there are two matters to which I wish to call the attention of the House, and two only, for I do not intend to specially antagonize the bill. Under any circumstances I reluctantly oppose a measure intended in any degree to protect human life. Even if the measure is extravagant and manifestly a logrolling measure, I am reluctant to oppose it, for some of its provisions may be important. But I do call attention to the fact that the bill of 1888, to which I have just referred, authorizing seventeen light-houses, applied exclusively to the northern lakes, and this only about four years ago.

All these seventeen light-houses, authorized by the act in question, were for the Northern lakes, and those who are familiar with those lakes know that the most important places where light-houses should be established on those lakes had been supplied years ago. I point to this for another reason, to show that while so recently as 1888 seventeen light-houses were authorized on the lakes, that for years and years before large sums had been expended in the same region for such establishments.

I call the attention of the committee to the fact that expenditure for the light-house system more than keeps pace with our ever-growing extravagance. In 1885 we appropriated $326,750 for this service—the building of light-houses—independent of the cost of equipping them or keeping them in repair or for their superintendence, but for the buildings alone. In 1886 we appropriated $332,602; in 1887, $535,000; in 1888, $519,400; in 1889, $486,750, and provided a further appropriation of $74,500 by special acts in that year, making for that year a total of $561,250.

For 1890 we appropriated $1,073,000, with a deficiency of $213,284, which we appropriated for.

In 1891 we appropriated $1,017,600, with a deficiency, which we appropriated for, of $81,000.

For the year 1892 we appropriated $572,000.

For 1893 we appropriated $170,100, and by special act at the session before last we appropriated $60,000, making for the period since 1885, a period of seven years, the sum of $5,413,896. My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. BRICKNER] will bear in mind that a very large portion of this enormous sum of money has been expended on the northern lakes. We are informed of the magnitude of the commerce of the lakes, but the expenditures are excessive.

I think that comparing our expenditures with other commercial nations having a light-house system, and all commercial powers of course have such a system, taking into the account the great extent of our seacoast as compared to theirs, we have got upon a plane of extravagance in this respect unknown to any other commercial power. We are going away beyond any other power in the current of our expenditures in this field of expenditure as well as in many others.

Mr. WISE. Have we not a larger seacoast?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am indulging in that comparison. Now, how do other nations provide for keeping up their light-house system? Take the Government of Great Britain. That Government does not take money out of the public treasury to keep up its light-house system, but makes a charge upon their own commerce and our commerce and the commerce of the world, enjoying the benefits of the system to keep up their light-house system. It is a matter of common interest to the whole world, not simply upon the high seas, but upon the northern lakes, so far as Great Britain and ourselves are concerned.

Mr. PICKLER. What is the ordinary cost of maintaining a light-house for a year?

Mr. HOLMAN. I could not say, because it depends somewhat upon circumstances. Some are much more expensive than others. It depends upon their location, the ease of access, etc.; but the amount paid for the keeper is comparatively a small sum, a few hundred dollars a year for each light-house. I thought I ought to call the attention of the House to the growth of expenditure in this field in view of this bill proposing fifty-one more in a single year, as in these branches of the public service that appeal to our humanity, that concern human life, we are all inclined to shrink from opposition to any appropriation that is suggested. On that account I have always insisted that the Committee on Commerce, of which I was a member six years, ought to be exceedingly considerate and careful in the reports they make to this House. No member wants to oppose a measure that concerns human safety, or that in anyway tends to promote the security of human life.

Having said this much, Mr. Speaker, intending it rather as an appeal to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to bear in mind the facts which I have thought justifiable to be suggested, I shall not further occupy the attention of the committee; but I hope to see the day when the policy of other commercial powers will be adopted by our Government, and when the commerce of the world will bear a fair and reasonable share of the burden which we impose annually on our Treasury, in view of the benefit which it derives in common with ourselves from the system of lighting the pathways of the seas upon our borders and the lakes.

Of course this system has become more extensive because in the Forty-fourth Congress we commenced the policy of lighting our inland rivers. That has been very beneficial to the inland commerce, and that only concerns our country, and the amount we expend in that direction is comparatively small; but lighting of our seacoasts concerns all commercial powers in common with our own country and the lakes of our country and Great Britain.

I have nothing further to add.

Mr. BRICKNER. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised at my friend from Indiana, who ought to be eminently fitted to properly bring before this House any and every question that may come before it, on account of the long experience he has had as a member. But if the gentleman did not present better arguments upon other questions than he presents upon this important question, bearing so seriously upon the commercial interests of the country, I fear he would strand very soon. In the first place, the gentleman complains that this is a log-rolling bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. But, my dear sir, I have waived that.

Mr. BRICKNER. But the gentleman said it, and I wish to call his attention to the fact that every item in this bill is approved by the Light-House Board. When the gentleman speaks of the amount of money appropriated for harbors and for lights for the protection of commerce is he aware that through one single short canal there passes every year more tonnage than passes through the great Suez Canal, which is the wonder of the world! The fact is, the gentleman is not aware of the vastness of the commerce of the Great Lakes.

Mr. SEERLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BRICKNER. The gentleman speaks of the growth of expenditure in this direction during his long experience.

Mr. SEERLEY. I will say to the gentleman if he will not answer my question, he can not pass this bill to-day.

Mr. BRICKNER. I will answer the gentleman's question in a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRICKNER] yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SEERLEY].

Mr. BRICKNER. I will answer his question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin yields to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BRICKNER. Taking into consideration the large amount that has been expended on the river and harbor bills to increase this commerce, it must certainly be followed by adequate measures to insure the safety of life and property. The gentleman speaks of England and other nations charging tonnage. Very well. I have no objection to that, but let us at all hazards save life and property. I will now yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SEERLEY] if he has any question to ask?

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to make an observation, if the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRICKNER] will yield to me five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. BRICKNER. I have not as much time left as the gentleman wishes.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, a single word.

Mr. BRICKNER. I will yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] three minutes.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, a single word in response to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] with reference to the practice of other nations in the maintenance of a light-house establishment. It is true that a great many nations impose distinct light-house dues, or dues which are used for the maintenance of a light-house establishment. In this country, instead of distinct light-house dues, we impose a tonnage tax that is equivalent to light-house dues, but instead of appropriating the receipts in support of the light-house establishment, we appropriate the money to the support of the hospitals. Now, in England the hospitals are supported by an appropriation by the general government. In this country they are supported by a tonnage tax; so that practically we have precisely the same tax upon tonnage engaged in the foreign trade.

Mr. HOLMAN. But it carries a great many other matters.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is precisely the same—about half a million dollars a year on vessels engaged in the foreign trade.

Mr. HOLMAN. But other nations impose the same kind of tax.

Mr. DINGLEY. Only one tax. That is the light-house dues. We have a tonnage tax, in which the dues are substantially the same.

Mr. HOLMAN. But that supports the entire system.

Mr. DINGLEY. Not entirely.

Now, with reference to the importance of this measure, it should be borne in mind that a country with the large extent of seacoast, lake and river, that this country has must necessarily have a large light-house establishment compared with the small island of Great Britain. Therefore our light-houses must be greatly more numerous. The commerce of Great Britain is largely with foreign nations. It should also be borne in mind that the light-house establishment of Great Britain is the outgrowth of two centuries, while ours is the outgrowth, practically, of seventy-five years. I think there never has been any money squandered by the light-house establishment in this country.

On the contrary, I think every cent has been economically expended, and has been expended, as a rule, only where the development of our commerce required it. I think there are no appropriations made by Congress that are more to be approved and that cover so much the object of public advantage as those that are made for the establishment and maintenance of light-houses. I think the policy that has been established in reference to this matter is one that ought to receive the universal approval of all our citizens who are in favor of the improvement of our commerce.

Mr. BRICKNER. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin has eight minutes remaining. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask that the bill be read by paragraphs for amendments, if general debate has been closed.

Mr. BRICKNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a statement on one point which I do not think I made clear in my previous remarks. There is no appropriation of money by this bill. It simply puts the matter in the hands of the Committee on Appropriations, who can select such places as are most necessary from year to year and from time to time, as the finances of the country will admit doing. I now move to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I observe that the gentleman proposes to omit the reading of the bill by sections.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has been directed to read the bill by sections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Twenty-second. At Devil Island, to complete light station, at a cost not exceeding $22,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, simply for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee if all the light-houses carried in this bill are classed as "indispensable" by the Light-House Board?

Mr. BRICKNER. They are not.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to support all propositions classed as "indispensable;" but I would not like to support any others.

Mr. BRICKNER. I would say that the Light-House Board, and the Secretary of the Treasury, did not give us information on that point last year as he did to former Congresses. He was asked to give information as to which were "necessary," and which were "indispensable;" and the Department refused to make that statement. They made a statement like this: "Formerly we have done it, but we do not intend to do so again."

Mr. DOCKERY. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that the custom has always been to classify the light-houses in the order of their importance. There are three classes, "indispensable," "necessary," and "desirable." Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to support all the propositions in this bill which are regarded as indispensable to the service.

Mr. BRICKNER. Why, they did not give us any statement of that kind.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not desire, in the present condition of the Treasury, to go any further than that.

Mr. BRICKNER. The Light-House Board refused to give us that information. I will state again, that I went there in person and asked for the information, and they gave me as an answer that heretofore it did not seem to have worked well, and they gave me their separate reports on every item; and that is all they would do.

Mr. DOCKERY. What were the grounds of the refusal?

Mr. LIND. If the gentleman will permit me, I would like to make a brief statement, partly in answer to the question of the gentleman from Missouri. The grounds are these: They say that they do not feel justified in stating that a light-house at one place is "indispensable," while describing another as only "necessary," because there may be just as much chance of an accident occurring any day at the one place as at the other, and they do not want to take the responsibility of discriminating in such terms.

I can say, however, for the information of the gentleman from Missouri, that according to the old classification only a small percentage of the works embraced in this bill would be denominated as simply "desirable." Twenty-seven of these items, I think, would come in the class of "indispensable" or "absolutely necessary."

Mr. DOCKERY. How many items are carried in the bill?

Mr. LIND. Fifty-one. I would say further for the gentleman's information, that those which might be denominated only desirable are simply a few smaller lights, costing, perhaps, in the aggregate, less than $40,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. What number of items in the bill would be classed as "necessary"?

Mr. LIND. There are several that would be classed as only "necessary," but two works that are regarded as "indispensable" by the officers of the Light-House Board carry the largest appropriations, the light-ship at Mackinaw Straits and the light-house off Grays Harbor. Those carry nearly $300,000, and they are absolutely indispensable.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman state the limit of cost of the items that he would class as "indispensable"?

Mr. LIND. I should say about $500,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. And what does he state as the cost of those that would be classed as "necessary"?

Mr. LIND. Well, the gentleman must understand that I am not so familiar with the details as some other members of the committee. I have not been on the subcommittee. However, we had the subject up in the last Congress, and I think those that might be dispensed with, although they are necessary, would not aggregate more than $50,000, or possibly $75,000. For instance, on page 2 of the bill there are two or three items provided for, aggregating in cost $4,000 or $5,000, that might possibly be dispensed with; but, as I have already said, it is the large items that are absolutely necessary.

Mr. DOCKERY. But not "indispensable"?

Mr. LIND. Indispensable? I do not see any great difference between "absolutely necessary" and "indispensable."

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, I desired to call out this information because it has been the uniform custom of the Light-House Board, as far as I know, to submit these estimates classified, as I have here indicated.

Mr. LIND. Well, when I say absolutely necessary I mean indispensable in that sense. The Board, as has been stated, refuses to submit to such a classification now because they say that in the past they have been put in dilemmas by making such distinctions. They have heretofore reported one work as "necessary" and another as "indispensable." Accidents have occurred at points where they reported the improvement as only "necessary," and of course they have been criticised for making such a discrimination.

Mr. DOCKERY. I very much regret that the items in the bill are not classified according to the old method.

Mr. LIND. Has the gentleman read the report?

Mr. DOCKERY. I have not.

Mr. LIND. The gentleman will find the report a very good guide in this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] insist upon his amendment?

Mr. DOCKERY. I withdraw it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Twenty-ninth. At Ludington, a fog signal, at a cost not exceeding $5,500, and a dwelling for a keeper at this station at a cost not exceeding $4,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the provision which has just been read. The limit of the cost of the fog signal is $5,500, while the limit of cost of the dwelling house is not to exceed $4,500. Is not the sum named for a dwelling for the keeper of the light-house very materially above the average?

Mr. BRICKNER. I think not.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know there have been instances, peculiar cases, where the foundations have necessarily been very costly, and the appropriations have been large, but except in such cases I do not think that appropriations for dwellings like this have generally reached so large a sum.

Mr. BRICKNER. I think the gentleman is mistaken. I think he will find that in a number of places the house of the keeper has cost a large sum of money.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the occasion for this being a very expensive structure?

Mr. MALLORY. There is a light-house there now, but there is no house for the keeper.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is a light-house there and this provides for a fog signal and dwelling.

Mr. BRICKNER. If the gentleman will read the report he will get the information he desires.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is not time to read the report now.

A MEMBER. It is very short.

Mr. MALLORY (reading from the report):

Twenty-ninth. At Ludington, a fog signal, at a cost not exceeding $5,500; and a dwelling for a keeper at this station at a cost not exceeding $4,500.

This was recommended in the Board's annual report of 1891 on pp. 121, 122.

"This work of extending the south pier, on which a light has been maintained since 1870, is progressing rapidly and will soon be completed. A steam fog signal has long been needed here, but it was deemed impracticable to establish it until the pier was finished. It is estimated that the signal will cost $5,500, and it is recommended that this amount be appropriated therefor.

"There is no dwelling at this station for a keeper. One is needed. The Board estimates that one can be built for $4,500, and it is recommended that an appropriation of this amount be made for that purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know there is a light-house there, but how does it happen that there is no dwelling for the keeper?

Mr. BRICKNER. They have never had an appropriation to construct one.

Mr. HOLMAN. How can the light-house be superintended unless there is a dwelling?

Mr. BRICKNER. They have no dwelling, because the Representative of that district was not fortunate enough to get unanimous consent, I suppose.

Mr. HOLMAN. But there must have been some kind of a dwelling in order to have the light-house superintended.

Mr. BRICKNER. There is none. Here is the language of the Light-House Board. Does the gentleman believe them?

Mr. HOLMAN. Never having visited the place in question, I of course can not speak from personal knowledge——

Mr. WISE. I will state to the gentleman that there is no dwelling there for the keeper and never has been.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then, there is no keeper?

Mr. MALLORY. Oh, yes; there is a keeper.

Mr. SIMPSON. I can speak from personal knowledge on this matter. Having once been shipwrecked at the point in question, I know something about it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Was that after or before the establishment of the light-house?

A MEMBER (to Mr. SIMPSON). Was it before or after you came to Congress?

Mr. SIMPSON. It was before I came to Congress. The light-house has not been there for a long time. The keeper lives in his own house, not in a house provided by the Government. I presume this bill contemplates that the Government shall provide him a house to live in.

Mr. HOLMAN. This light-house, I believe is on the shore?

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes, sir; right by the pier, next to the shore.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think an appropriation of $4,500 for building a residence for a light-house keeper is what may be termed at the very least a very liberal expenditure.

A MEMBER. Does the gentleman move to strike it out?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir. I do not wish to come in conflict with the committee; but my neighbors and their representatives are not able to indulge in such luxuries. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana offer any amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not; but I appeal to gentlemen to keep this bill down as much as possible.

The Clerk read as follows:

Thirty-eighth. At Sheboygan, Wis., a fog signal, at a cost not exceeding $5,500.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of calling the attention of the gentleman in charge of this bill to the fact that in the estimates for the ensuing fiscal year the old classification is maintained. It appears that the Light-House Board estimates only $42,500 for light-houses which they class as "indispensable." For light-houses which they class as "necessary," $538,425; and for light-houses which they regard as "desirable," $1,722,705. Only two of the "indispensable" items are now authorized by law—the Rockland light station, New York, and the St. Catharines Sound light station, Georgia; the others are not authorized.

Mr. HOLMAN. Those are not in this bill.

Mr. WISE. They are not in this bill.

Mr. LIND. They have been authorized heretofore.

Mr. DOCKERY. Only the two to which I have called attention are authorized by law; the others are not. I do not know whether they are carried in this bill or not.

Mr. LIND. The matter is substantially as I stated—that this bill is confined to what the Light-House Board recommend as necessary. The gentleman will see by adding the figures that they make about $650,000, the amount carried by the bill. We have left out all those items classed as desirable, amounting to more than $1,000,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. It seems that the old classification is still maintained.

Mr. LIND. Let me say to the gentleman that the report referred to was made by the Treasury Department; but the Light-House Board has refused absolutely to make any such classification for our committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. No effort was made to obtain from the Treasury Department any estimate of those light-houses which were deemed "indispensable" and those which were merely "desirable"?

Mr. LIND. Oh, yes; there was an effort of that kind made by the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. Only through the Light-House Board?

Mr. LIND. Through the Light-House Board. The gentleman will notice that this bill was reported on the 19th instant; it is a revision of a bill reported by our committee in the last session, which carried a much larger sum. After a personal conference with the officers of the Light-House Board the bill was revised and cut down in the hope that it would pass the House.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, after the subhead "Atlantic region," page 5, as follows:

"Thirty-ninth. At Two Bush Island, west entrance to Penobscot Bay, Maine, a light and fog-signal station, at a cost not exceeding $19,000."

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I supposed until I obtained a copy of the bill last evening that the item which I have now offered as an amendment was included in the bill. But I find that by reason of some of the papers having been mislaid (perhaps by my own fault) this item has been omitted, notwithstanding that it has been recommended as necessary both by the Light-House Board and by the Treasury Department, as appears in the Book of Estimates on page 175. I have conferred with the members of the committee this morning and they have consented to the offering of this amendment, as it stands on precisely the same basis as other items in the bill.

I wish to say that the place where the amendment proposes the establishment of this light and fog-signal station is at the entrance of Penobscot Bay, and is one of the most important points for the passage of vessels upon the coast of Maine. Vessels can now pass only in the daytime and in clear weather. There are sometimes as many as 2,000 vessels a day that pass this point, and shipwrecks have occurred, so that it has become exceedingly desirable that this light and fog signal should be erected in order to meet the demand of the commerce passing there.

Mr. WISE. Will the gentleman withhold his amendment a moment until we reach the conclusion of the bill? I ask that he number his amendment No. 52.

Mr. DINGLEY. I numbered it 39, and the others can be modified by changing their numbers one.

Mr. BRICKNER. But if the gentleman will change the number to 52 it will be more acceptable to the committee, and save the necessity for renumbering the items.

Mr. DINGLEY. The only reason I had for putting it here was that it is in order of light-house districts on the Atlantic coast. It belongs in this district.

Mr. BRICKNER. We would prefer to have it numbered 52, if the gentleman will accept the suggestion.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have no objection, except that it belongs in the Atlantic district.

Mr. WISE. Let it come under the head of "miscellaneous."

Mr. DINGLEY. Very well; I will modify it and make it No. 52.

Mr. WISE. I hope the gentleman will withdraw it until we reach that part of the bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. In deference to the wishes of the committee I will do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment, then, will be temporarily withdrawn.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of correcting a statement I made a few moments ago. In endeavoring to state the list of "indispensable" items embodied in the report of the Light-House Board my eye caught the wrong column and I announced the total as $42,500. That was the amount appropriated for the current year. The total of the items recommended as "indispensable" is $738,792.

I desire to make this correction.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. I now offer the amendment which I withheld at the request of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after line 156, page 7, as follows:

"Fifty-two. At Two-Bush Island, west entrance to Penobscot Bay, Maine, a light and fog signal station, at a cost not exceeding $19,000."

Mr. BRICKNER. I accept the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BRICKNER. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with favorable recommendation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee, before that is done, to the fact—I have not had an opportunity of preparing a comparison of the items in this bill with the report of the Light-House Board, though it is a very interesting subject—I find, however, that Ludington, to which I referred a little while ago, and where this building is to be erected, comes in the estimates of the Treasury Department simply under the head of "desirable." I repeat, I have not had time to go through the list.

Mr. LIND. But this is for a building where a light-house has been established.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it would hardly be in order to go back and consider items that have already been passed over, except by unanimous consent. Besides, there is a motion pending

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last word of the pending bill only to call attention to that fact. I have not had time since the bill came up to see in what classes these various items were placed by the estimates of the Treasury Department. I find quite a number—well, some four or five, but notably Ludington—under the head of "desirable" simply, and I believe all of these are found in the classification made by the Treasury Department.

Mr. BRICKNER. I wish to answer the gentleman from Indiana by saying that the Light-House Board has made its report different, it appears, from the Treasury.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. WISE. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is pending.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTONY. I demand a division.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I make the point of order that the gentleman is too late. The Chair had announced the result.

Mr. ANTONY. The Chair stated that it seemed that the ayes had it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had announced the result, but if the gentleman from Texas states that he was on his feet for the purpose of demanding a division, the Chair, under the rules, would have to permit him to exercise that right.

Mr. ANTONY. That was my purpose.

The question being taken on a division; there were—ayes 80, noes 2.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTONY. I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I now make the point that the result was announced before the gentleman made the demand for a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think that in this instance the point is well taken.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DOCKERY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCRAE reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9955) had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, and as so amended that the bill do pass.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. OHLIGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 570) to provide for the removal of the remains of the late Ensign D. F. Terrell, United States Navy, from Sitka, Alaska, to his home in the State of Mississippi:

A bill (S. 1675) granting an increase of pension to soldiers of the Mexican war in certain cases;

A bill (S. 2981) for the relief of the Citadel Academy of Charleston, S. C.;

A bill (S. 3059) for the relief of the Old Dominion Steamship Company;

A bill (S. 3298 (authorizing the sale of land in the vicinity of Fort Mifflin on the River Delaware;

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole to consider the bill (S. 1104).

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. ANTONY) there were—ayes 64, noes 7.

Mr. ANTONY. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker appointed as tellers Mr. ANTONY and Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee.

Before the result of the division was announced,

Mr. LIND said: Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered on the bill last reported, and that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ANTONY. I object.

Mr. LIND. It is evident that there is no quorum here.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ANTONY].

The tellers reported—ayes 145.

Pending the announcement of the negative vote,

Mr. WISE said: Mr. Speaker, there is evidently not a quorum present. I suppose it would be impossible to procure one to-day, and I therefore move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. LYNCH, from the Committee on Claims, reported the bill (S. 1465) for the relief of Frank J. Burrows (Report No. 2193), and the same was delivered to the Clerk and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills; which were re-referred as follows:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 22, 1892.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Vice-President being absent, the President pro tempore [Mr. MANDERSON] took the chair.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 1484) for the relief of Mary A. Lewis was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. 8915) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Coffman was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 9649) to provide for the purchase of Fort Brown, Texas, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 9826) granting certain rights and privileges to the commissioners of waterworks in the city of Erie, Pa., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

ARMY DRILL REGULATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 112) to print and bind 1,000 extra copies each of the Drill Regulations for Infantry, Cavalry, and Artillery. The amendments were: in line 3, to strike out the word "one" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two," and to amend the title by striking out the word "one" and inserting the word "two."

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendments simply increase the number of copies to be printed from 1,000 to 2,000 copies. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9527) to restore to the public domain a portion of the White Mountain Apache Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Arizona, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill H. R. 6737) granting a pension to Delzell R. Bradford, Twenty-fourth Michigan Volunteers; and

A bill (H. R. 9417) to incorporate the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have a large number of what purport to be petitions from citizens of various counties in Missouri. The paper is headed "Grain Growers' Memorial," and the signers represent that they are farmers and grain-growers, and that many of them are the wives, the sons, and the daughters of farmers and grain-growers, and that all of them are citizens of Minnesota, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Arkansas, and Texas, and at the time of affixing their signatures they were visitors attending the St. Louis fair. The petition is in regard to the Washburn-Hatch option bill and the elevators and millers' trust. At the bottom of the petition is the following:

N. B.—This memorial is indorsed by the leading officials of the Farmers' Alliance in all the Northwestern States.

I hold in my hand one of these petitions, which is only a sample of all of them. It is backed "Memorial of A. T. Todd, Platte County, Mo., and 21 citizens, praying for the appointment of a Senate committee to investigate the combine formed to depreciate the price of grain, and now existing between the elevators, millers, and railroads at Minneapolis and St. Louis, and asking for the postponement of the Washburn-Hatch option bill until said committee reports." In looking over the signatures I find the name of Mr. Todd, from Platte County, Mo. The first two names are from St. Louis, and the third is from Yorkshire, England. Then some of them are from Tennessee, some from Rhode Island, some from Illinois, and they are scattered all over the face of the green earth. The lady from England who signs the petition doubtless knows all about what the Farmers' Alliances are doing in the great Northwest. There is scarcely one of these petitions which has more than two or three names of citizens of the counties which are indorsed on the back in which the petitioners are supposed to reside; in other words, the indorsement is a fraud upon the face of the petitions.

The petitions are too numerous to attempt to call attention to them. They are all backed "Memorial" of so and so, "St. Louis, Mo.," or "Saline County, Mo.," "and 25 citizens," etc.; and yet there are not more than two or three residents of the place they are represented to be from by the indorsement on the back of the petition. They are stereotyped petitions, and I hardly know whether they are entitled to be recognized as the kind of petitions which ought to be presented to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petitions will be separately noted and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

A petition of A. T. Todd and 21 other citizens of Platte County;

Petition of C. K. Smith and 25 other citizens of Saline County;

Petition of William H. Steincamp and 15 other citizens of Sedalia;

Petition of A. B. Eader and 21 other citizens of Cooper County;

Petition of James Anderson and 20 other citizens of Pettis County;

Petition of Herman N. Martin and 22 other citizens of Jefferson County;

Petition of J. L. Dunson and 21 other citizens of Lincoln County;

Petition of William F. Clodius and 21 other citizens of St. Louis;

Petition of Theodore Gerber and 20 other citizens of St. Louis County;

Petition of T. B. Douthitt and 24 other citizens of Ritchey;

Petition of George Wameck and 17 other citizens of Jasper County;

Petition of L. L. Rarrer and 19 other citizens of Louisiana;

Petition of E. McKimm and 18 other citizens of St. Louis;

Petition of John Mehlen and 19 other citizens of St. Louis;

Petition of George Dahnum and 25 other citizens of St. Louis;

Petition of Thomas Masterson and 22 other citizens of St. Louis;

Petition of J. P. McKinny and 22 other citizens of St. Louis;

Petition of Joseph T. Boland and 15 other citizens of St. Louis; and Petition of J. W. Corsius and 16 other citizens of Bates County.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of the Presbyterian Synod of Illinois, praying that Congress adhere to its action requiring that the World's Columbian Exposition be closed on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of Whitmore Grange, No. 985, Patrons of Husbandry, of Illinois, praying for the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Klio Club, of Chicago, Ill., praying that the World's Columbian Exposition be opened on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. CULLOM. I hold in my hand fourteen petitions purporting on the indorsements to be signed by citizens of different localities in my State. I suppose they are exactly of the character of the petitions referred to by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. I have not taken time to examine them to see whether the outside indorsement and the inside signing correspond, but I ask that they be noted in the RECORD according to the indorsements.

The petitions praying for the appointment of a Senate committee to investigate the combine formed to depreciate the price of grain, and now existing between the elevators, millers, and railroads at Minneapolis, Minn., and St. Louis, Mo., and asking for the postponement of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill until such committee shall report, were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

Petition of D. F. Mueller and 23 other citizens of Randolph County, Ill.;

Petition of James R. Lewis and 21 other citizens of Salem, Ill.;

Petition of Joseph Erlinger, jr., and 24 other citizens of St. Clair County, Ill.;

Petition of H. H. Moore and 20 other citizens of Wayne County, Ill.;

Petition of Joseph C. Knott and 24 other citizens of Hancock County, Ill.;

Petition of Amos Squires and 22 other citizens of Madison, Ill.;

Petition of J. R. Pear and 17 other citizens of St. Clair County, Ill.;

Petition of Jacob Carokee and 23 other citizens of Union, Ill.;

Petition of William McIntosh and 22 other citizens of Mattoon, Ill.;

Petition of Edson Weld and 22 other citizens of Brighton, Ill.;

Petition of R. V. Chadwick and 22 other citizens of Fayette, Ill.;

Petition of John L. Dickson and 21 other citizens of St. Clair County, Ill.;

Petition of J. E. Smith and 23 other citizens of Chillicothe, Ill.; and Petition of D. B. Elliott and 19 other citizens of Edgar, Ill.

Mr. DAWES. I present a petition of the National Pro Patria League for the Protection of American Institutions, signed by W. H. Parsons, its president, and James M. King, its general secretary, and George S. Baker, praying Congress to make no more appropriations for sectarian schools for the Indians. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of Rt. Rev. Bishop Hennessy and sundry priests and students of theology of the diocese of Iowa, praying for the passage of legislation to settle and adjust the accounts of George Wallace Jones, of Dubuque, Iowa; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CASEY presented a petition of Capt. W. S. McCaskey Garrison, No. 21, Regular Army and Navy Union, praying for the passage of legislation for the retirement of the enlisted men of the Army after twenty-five years' service; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the executive committee of the Sabbath Association of Illinois, praying that legislation requiring that the World's Columbian Exposition be closed on Sunday be not considered, and offering eleven reasons in support of this memorial; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. PROCTOR presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Vermont; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution relating to free delivery of mail.

Whereas a free delivery of the mail in all towns would greatly promote the welfare, happiness, and prosperity of the people, and materially increase the value of real estate in agricultural communities: Therefore,

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are hereby requested to use their best efforts to secure the enactment of such laws as shall achieve that result.

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing resolution be transmitted to each Senator and Representative in Congress from this State.

WILLIAM W. STICKNEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
F. STEWART STRANAHAN,
President of the Senate.

Adopted November 12, 1892.
A true copy. Attest:
[SEAL.] CHAUNCEY W. BROWNELL,
Secretary of State.

Mr. PROCTOR presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Vermont; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution relating to the immigration of paupers, criminals, and dependent persons.

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives, That the senate and house of representatives of the State of Vermont respectfully request the Congress of the United States and the legislative departments of the several States to enact laws establishing a uniform policy of immigration from foreign nations and of migration from State to State of persons who are dependent upon charity and are of idle or vicious habits.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be requested to transmit copies of the foregoing resolution to the presiding officers of both Houses of the Congress of the United States, to each of the Senators and Representatives therein from this State, and to the governors of the several States of the United States.

WILLIAM W. STICKNEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
F. STEWART STRANAHAN,
President of the Senate.

A true copy. Attest:
[SEAL.] CHAUNCEY W. BROWNELL,
Secretary of State.

Mr. PROCTOR presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Vermont; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution in reference to proposed sixteenth amendment to Constitution of United States now pending in Congress.

Whereas there has been introduced into the Fifty-second Congress, and is now pending therein, the following proposed form of sixteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, viz: "No State shall pass any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or use its property or credit, or any money raised by taxation, or authorize either to be used, for the purpose of forming, maintaining, or aiding by appropriation, payment for services, expenses, or otherwise, any church, religious denomination or religious society, or any institution, society, or undertaking which is wholly, or in part, under sectarian or ecclesiastical control:" Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and hereby are, requested to take all proper measures to secure the approval of said proposed amendment by the Houses of which they are members, respectively.

F. STEWART STRANAHAN,
President of the Senate.
WILLIAM W. STICKNEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Adopted November 16, 1842.
A true copy. Attest:
[SEAL.] CHAUNCEY W. BROWNELL,
Secretary of State.

Mr. CARLISLE. I present a paper in the nature of a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Phœnix, in the Territory of Arizona, and other papers, favoring the admission of that Territory as a State. I move that the papers be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BATE presented the petition of B. B. Rodgers and 19 other citizens of Shelby County, Tenn., praying for the appointment of a Senate committee to investigate the combine formed to depreciate the price of grain, and asking for the postponement of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill until such committee shall report; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PASCO presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Jacksonville, Fla., praying for the passage of such legislation as shall absolutely prohibit indiscriminate immigration from all foreign countries for a period of one year; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented petitions of L. M. Thayer and 11 other members of prominent business houses of Florida, and of the Hartshorn Phosphate and Mining Company, and five other representative business houses of Florida, praying that immediate appropriation be made to continue the harbor improvement of Cumberland Sound, and protect the entrance to the port of Fernandina, Fla., from the danger of obstruction of, and perhaps closing, the channel, which now appears to be imminent; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WASHBURN presented a petition of the Journeymen Tailors' Union, No. 89, of Minneapolis, Minn., praying for the passage of House bill 8535, limiting the free entry of wearing apparel of foreign manufacture; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORGAN. I present a petition signed by thirteen members of the senate of the Legislature of Alabama and fifty-odd members of the house, praying Congress to legislate in some direction to prevent dealings in futures and options. I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of the Trinity Evangelical Church of York, Pa., and a petition of the first United Brethren Congregation of York, Pa., praying for the closing of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented the petition of William Hutton and 22 other citizens of Chester County, Pa., praying for the appointment of a committee to investigate the combine formed to depreciate the price of grain, and asking for the postponement of the Washburn-Hatch option bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BLACKBURN presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Kentucky; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution concerning weather forecasts.

Whereas the study of meteorology is hopefully engaging the attention of science and promises wonderful benefactions to civilization in the near future, and especially to the great agricultural interests of the people of all the United States: Therefore,

Resolved by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to lend all necessary encouragement and aid to such measures as in their judgment shall stimulate investigation and quicken discovery in the great field of weather forecast and give greater efficiency and value to the Signal Service Bureau in gathering and more widely disseminating in the shortest period and most timely hours its weather bulletins.

Resolved, That the clerk of the house be directed to transmit a copy of these resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives and also to the Secretary of Agriculture at Washington.

Attest:

G. R. KELLER,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Mr. SQUIRE. I present a petition adopted December 6, by the Chamber of Commerce of the City of Seattle, Wash., urging Government support for the Nicaragua Canal.

The petition sets forth that the Chamber of Commerce of the City of Seattle believes that the present session of Congress should not be allowed to end without favorable action upon the Nicaragua Canal. The necessity and value of this enterprise are not questioned. The work is so stupendous, however, so difficult, and so sure to be affected by matters international, that it is not likely private capital will engage in it to an extent sufficient to insure its completion.

With the protection and aid of the Government of the United States it will be different. The money will be forthcoming, construction will be prosecuted, and shortly thereafter the commerce of the world will be making use of the channel created.

Recent affairs in Chile, the Argentine Republic, in Venezuela, on the Isthmus of Panama, and at other points, have shown to the people the uses that could be made of the canal by our own Government while every ship that goes through the Straits of Magellan or round Cape Horn between the United States and Europe, or between our own Atlantic and Pacific ports, makes a voyage thousands of miles longer, at an expense thousands of dollars greater, than would be required were the Nicaragua Canal completed. Upon its completion the American coasts, now so separated, will be brought closer together, the interests of our people will be unified, their associations made more intimate, and the love of country increased and intensified. In fact the United States, in justice to itself and to its own people, can not afford to do without the Nicaragua Canal, nor can it afford to allow its construction by a foreign corporation or by any other Government.

The Chamber therefore petitions Congress for immediate action looking to the consummation of this most desirable scheme.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will lie on the table, the bill having been reported.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of citizens of the District of Columbia, owners of lands in the Petworth addition to the city of Washington, praying that an appropriation be made for the completion of the sewerage of that tract of land; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARRIS. By a majority of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, I am authorized to report back with amendments the bill (S. 2707) granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service. Hereafter I shall file a written report to accompany the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

SUSPENSION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. CHANDLER. From the Committee on Immigration I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (S. 3513) for the suspension of immigration for one year. I ask that the bill may be read, as it is a measure of importance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire desire to have the amendments read?

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to have the amendments read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be read.

The Secretary read the amendments proposed by the committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the bill may be placed upon the Calendar; and I desire to say that this subject is of such importance that there ought to be at the reassembling of Congress in January an immediate consideration of it. I shall therefore ask the Senate on the first day of its reassembling to take up the bill for consideration and action.

Mr. PLATT. This, as the Senator from New Hampshire reporting the bill has said, is a very important subject. The bill was therefore upon his request read at length, with the amendments proposed by the committee; but I venture to say that from the reading of the bill and the proposed amendments no Senator listening to it could understand just exactly what the committee proposes in its report or what the bill would effect if it should be passed into law with the amendments. I suggest to the Senator that the bill had better be printed in some way so that we can see it as it would be if the amendments were adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the general practice of the Senate the Chair will state the bill will be printed with the proposed amendments. Does the Senator from Connecticut desire that it shall be printed in the RECORD with the proposed amendments?

Mr. PLATT. If the bill could be printed in the RECORD as it would stand if the amendments of the committee should be adopted, then we could see just what is proposed to be done.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to have that order made, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be made if there be no objection. It is ordered that the bill be printed in the RECORD as it would stand if the amendments were adopted by the Senate.

The bill, as proposed to be amended by the Committee on Immigration, is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the admission of alien immigrants for settlement or residence now allowed to enter the United States under the act of March 3, 1891, and the other immigration acts, is hereby suspended and prohibited for and during the term of one year from and after the 1st day of March, 1893, except as to immigrants coming from American countries who were citizens thereof and actually resident therein for not less than one year before their departure.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to make and issue rules and regulations for the enforcement of the prohibitions of this act which shall not hinder or delay the admission of returning American citizens or of aliens coming only as visitors or for a temporary sojourn in the United States.

SEC. 3. That any alien immigrant entering the United States contrary to the provisions of this act shall be subject, in accordance with existing laws, to be sent back to the country from which he came, and all persons who shall bring into or land, or aid to bring into or land in the United States any such alien immigrant, shall be subject to the penalties now by law provided for bringing or landing or aiding in bringing or landing excluded immigrants.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, in this connection I desire simply to say that I have not expressly concurred with the committee in the report of this bill. There is one feature of the bill to which I think I shall object. I think a bill can be framed which will meet the views of the country better than the measure proposed. I desire to reserve the right to present at some future time, in case I wish to do so, a minority report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill with the favorable report will be placed on the Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 3649) for the relief of William J. Cornell and Joseph M. Cornell; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CASEY introduced a bill (S. 3650) to reduce the fees on domestic money orders, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 3651) to amend the articles for the government of the Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3652) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Frederick Diss; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3653) for the relief of Joseph W. Parish; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3654) for the relief of Elias E. Barnes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GORMAN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3655) to incorporate the Washington, Burnt Mills and Sandy Spring Railway Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 3656) to enable the people of the Territory of Oklahoma and of the Indian Territory to form a constitution and State government, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 3657) to provide for the survey of public lands in the State of Washington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MITCHELL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3658) to prohibit electro-magnetizing, mesmerizing, or hypnotizing human beings, or affecting one person through another by electricity, and to declare the same to be a crime against the law of nations and to define its punishment; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RED RIVER CART.

Mr. CASEY. I introduce a joint resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 127) authorizing the Smithsonian Institution to lend to the North Dakota World's Fair Commission the Red River cart now in the National Museum was read the first time by title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, That the secretary of the Smithsonian Institution be, and he hereby is, authorized to loan to the World's Fair Commission of the State of North Dakota for use as part of its exhibit at the Columbian Exposition the Red River cart now in the National Museum, and originally received from Pembina, Dak., in 1882: Provided, That such loan be made entirely on the responsibility of said North Dakota Commission, and shall be returned to the Smithsonian Institution in good order, and without expense to the Government, within one month after the close of the said Columbian Exposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. ALLEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

NICARAGUA CANAL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit a resolution for reference to the Committee on Printing.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That 5,000 extra copies of the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations on Senate bill No. 1218, relating to the Nicaragua Canal, and the accompanying documents, be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. My purpose is to restrict the number of copies so that the cost of printing may fall within the limit of $500. I respectfully ask the occupant of the chair to consider the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That 1,000 copies be printed for the use of the Senate of the immigration act, Public No. 152, of March 3, 1891.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

An act (S. 869) to provide an American register for the barge Sea Bird, of Perth Amboy, N. J.;

An act (S. 1956) to make Punta Gorda a subport of entry;

An act (S. 2451) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to reconvey to Lucius U. Maltby and Louise W. Maltby, his wife, Margaret Elizabeth Lucas, and the Sea Girt Land Improvement Company a piece of land selected as a site for the Squan Inlet light station, New Jersey, but found to be unsuitable for the purpose of said station;

An act (S. 3188) to extend to Duluth, Minn., the privileges of the first section of an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1888;

An act (S. 3418) making Saturday a half holiday for banking and trust company purposes in the District of Columbia; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 73) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Francisco Alcantara, of Venezuela.

MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 54) to amend chapter 6 of title XXXII of the Revised Statutes, relating to mineral lands and mining resources. The bill has been read and amended, and was laid over with a view perhaps to present further amendments. It will take but a moment I think to dispose of it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has heretofore been read as in Committee of the Whole, and certain amendments of the Committee on Mines and Mining have been agreed to, the Chair understands.

Mr. STEWART. Yes, and the amendments in regard to time will have to be changed, because when the bill goes into operation and passes the other House it will be a year later.

On page 3, line 55, in section 1 of the bill, I desire to have the amendment of the committee reconsidered and changed to three instead of two. There are several amendments to be made of this character, which are merely formal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 55, amend the committee's amendment by striking out "two" and inserting "three;" so as to read, "in the year 1893."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. In line 57, on page 3, I move to amend the committee's amendment by striking out "one" and inserting "two;" so as to read, "in the year 1892."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. In line 58, on page 3, I move to amend the committee's amendment by striking out "two" and inserting "three;" so as to read, "in the year 1893."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. In section 2, line 54, I ask the Senate to disagree to the amendment of the committee proposing to insert the words, "Or land that is chiefly valuable for building stone." That clause should be stricken out, as a special act has been passed on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, agreed to that amendment, and a motion will have to be made to reconsider.

Mr. STEWART. I make that motion.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should like to know what the effect of this proposed legislation is to be upon the existing law?

Mr. STEWART. It makes no radical change. It makes a few small changes to harmonize the proposed act with the present condition of things. The substantial provisions of the law are retained. One of the principal provisions that is changed is the time for the performance of annual work. The work under the law as it now stands must be performed within one year, the year terminating on the 21st day of December, in midwinter. Then the claim becomes liable to be relocated; but in midwinter in most of the localities it is almost impossible to go upon the ground. The bill changes that time to October. There are other changes of that kind which have appeared necessary in the course of practice under the mineral-land law, which has not been amended since it was passed in 1872.

This bill has been before the mining communities and the courts and has been published and republished for several years. It has been reported in substantially the same form three or four times by the Committee on Mines and Mining, and twice passed the Senate in substantially the same form with some slight variation, but it has failed in the other House. We have not pushed it because we wanted time for the courts and the practitioners to understand the little matters that are arranged under the bill. Most of them are mere matters of practice. They do not go to the substantial merits of the law as it stands, and it is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Then practically all the bill does is to extend the time in which work may be done upon mining lands?

Mr. STEWART. It does not extend the time, but it fixes the termination at a different period, when it is convenient for people to go on the ground. That is the most substantial change made in the bill. Then there is another provision in the bill which should be mentioned. As the law now stands, parties can get any number of claims in the same application. This limits it to a reasonable amount, so that there can be only one application for a patent. Each change has been thoroughly examined by the parties who are engaged in this business, and I believe the report of the committee is substantially unanimous. I do not know whether my friend from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] has any further amendment that he desires to propose.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think I can answer the Senator from New Jersey. The whole bill looks to accomplishing two results. The first is to so amend the mining law as that there shall be definiteness as to when the annual work is to be done upon a mining claim. The present provisions of the law are that each year upon unpatented claims so much work, $100 worth of labor, must be done. The bill fixes the time when the year shall commence, so as to make it uniform upon all mining claims. It also changes somewhat the character of the testimony which the Land Office shall receive before issuing a patent. The old law required the affidavits of two people. This, I think, requires but one affidavit.

Outside of that the bill seems to be unimportant and free from criticism. It is simply a bill going to the details of the patenting of mining claims, and in no wise enlarges the law or enlarges anybody's rights.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. President, I believe I am entitled to the floor after the routine morning business is over, and I ask my friend from Nevada not to interfere further with the regular order.

Mr. STEWART. There is nothing more to be said on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada moves that the vote, whereby the committee's amendment on page 8, line 54, in section 2, was agreed to be reconsidered. If there be no objection it is so ordered. The Senator from Nevada asks that the committee amendment be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish to delay the passage of the bill, but I do not understand it, and I suppose the Senate does not. I call the attention of the Senator from Nevada to the importance of having a brief report in regard to a bill of this kind. Its title will naturally excite attention, as in the case of any legislation in regard to the mining laws, which affects the interest of the United States, and I think we ought to have placed on our files a report showing the general purpose of the bill and why it is required. Otherwise we are all laboring in the dark. I shall take the statements of the Senator from Nevada as sufficient, but it would be a wise thing to have a report.

Mr. STEWART. All the parties who represent that region have studied this bill very thoroughly, and a report, unless it was very elaborate, explaining the whole mining law, would be incomprehensible to those not familiar with the slight changes made by the bill. The Senator from Colorado nearest me [Mr. TELLER] has assisted me in preparing the bill, and we have done it with great care. It has been printed and reprinted many times in all the newspapers of the West. I hope the bill will not be delayed now on that account.

Mr. PLATT. May I inquire whether the amendment on page 8, inserting at the top of the page the words "or petroleum," has been agreed to or disagreed to?

Mr. STEWART. That amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. Then, may I inquire further whether it has been determined in the office of the Secretary of the Interior hitherto that ground on which petroleum deposits are found is mineral land, or whether the bill proposes to change or add to the law in that respect?

Mr. STEWART. It has been held to be mineral land, but the question was whether to apply the placer rule to it or the vein rule. The law is indefinite in that respect, and those engaged in that work want it made more definite.

Mr. PLATT. I suppose that the places where petroleum deposits occur are very limited in the United States?

Mr. STEWART. They are limited.

Mr. PLATT. There are very few of them.

Mr. STEWART. There are very few of them. In the southern portion of the State of California there is some petroleum, and some of it is on mineral land, and the Department is at a loss as to what rule to apply in determining the size of the claims. This provision in the bill appears to be satisfactory.

Mr. PLATT. I know very little about these matters, but it struck me that we were adding quite an important item to the mineral laws in relation to petroleum. I suppose it will be all right. I do not know anything to the contrary.

Mr. STEWART. I think it is all right.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM B. BARNES.

Mr. WILSON. I desire the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] to yield to me for a moment that I may ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2730) granting an honorable discharge to William B. Barnes. If the bill excites any discussion I will withdraw the request. I think the bill can go through without discussion.

Mr. HUNTON. Without discussion how long will it take?

Mr. WILSON. I do not think it will take three minutes.

Mr. HUNTON. I yield to the Senator from Iowa, but I hope no other Senator will ask me to yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to issue an honorable discharge to William B. Barnes, late major of the Eleventh New York Heavy Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM M'GARRAHAN—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order of the Senate, the Senate resumes the consideration of the bill (S. 1958) to submit to the Court of Private Land Claims, established by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, the title of William McGarrahan to the Rancho Panoche Grande, in the State of California, and for other purposes. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding? on which the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. President, in tracing the history of the McGarrahan claim I had gotten to the point where the last act of the executive department of the Government had been finished and the last decision of the Supreme Court of the United States upon the subject had been made. Senators will recollect that in the course of my remarks I took the ground that the Supreme Court of the United States, when it delivered its final judgment dismissing the petition of Mr. Gomez or Mr. McGarrahan, was in utter ignorance of the fact that the executive department of the Government had passed upon this claim of Gomez for a patent favorably, that the President had signed the patent and sent it back to the Land Department for recordation and for the counter signature of the recorder of the General Land Office.

That statement of mine is borne out in a wonderful degree by the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States delivered in the case of McGarrahan against the New Idria Mining Company, found in the ninety-sixth volume of the United States Supreme Court Reports. As I stated yesterday, the Supreme Court in passing upon the title of McGarrahan to the property in question in that ejectment suit, declared that the title of McGarrahan was only defective because the recorder had not countersigned the patent. The irresistible and only inference to be drawn from that declaration of the Supreme Court is that if the signature of the recorder had been attached to that patent and copied upon the record, Mr. McGarrahan would have had a perfect title to the land in question and be entitled to recover in that action of ejectment.

I say it is a confirmation from the highest court in the land of the position I took earlier in the remarks which I have submitted. A coördinate and coequal department of the Government had passed favorably upon the claim of Gomez to this land. The President had signed the patent and sent it to the Land Department to be recorded and issued. The only defect about it was that the recorder of that office, whose duty was merely executive, and whose absolute duty under the law was to countersign a patent which had been signed by the President of the United States, failed to sign it.

But for that omission on the part of the recorder, occurring in the General Land Office, which as I showed in the earlier part of the remarks I submitted in this case, was at all times from the beginning of this controversy down to, I would say a very late period, hostile to the claim of Gomez and working in favor of the New Idria Mining Company—but for (I was about to say) the accidental omission of the recorder (but it may have been the intentional omission of the recorder) McGarrahan's title to the property occupied by the New Idria Mining Company in the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States would have been perfect and complete. But the recorder did not countersign the patent, and the Supreme Court decided that by his failure to do that act of duty, which the law enjoined upon him, the title of McGarrahan to the property occupied by the New Idria Mining Company was not such a title as he could maintain an action of ejectment upon.

From that day to this, having exhausted his efforts before the Executive Department of the Government, as well as the judicial department of the Government, McGarrahan appealed to the only other department, the Congress of the United States. From the time that case was decided in the Supreme Court by Judge Clifford, down to the present time, William McGarrahan has pursued this claim of his before the two Houses of Congress. In the progress of that pursuit fifteen committees, either of the House or of the Senate, have reported upon the McGarrahan title. Two committees have reported adversely; a third was equally divided between a favorable and an unfavorable report. With the exception of those three committees, all the rest have reported in favor of this grant in some shape or form.

In the progress of legislation it was impossible to get a bill through both Houses during the same Congress, and by reason of the difficulty in getting it before the two Houses during the existence of the same Congress, the claim of William McGarrahan lingered before the two Houses until the first session of this present Congress, when both Houses agreed upon the bill under discussion.

Mr. President, we all know that this bill was passed by the Senate of the United States practically with unanimity; there was no division when it came to a vote, and there is not the vote of a Senator on the floor recorded against the McGarrahan bill when it passed the Senate of the United States at the last session of the Senate. The bill went from this body over to the House of Representatives, and under a suspension of the rules it passed the House in identically the same form that it passed the Senate by 7 more than two-thirds of that body.

So the bill now under consideration was passed practically unanimously by the Senate and by more than two-thirds of the House of Representatives. This bill, coming from the Judiciary Committee of the Senate and the Committee on Mines and Mining of the House of Representatives, and, as we have a right to suppose, thoroughly considered and discussed by these two committees, and passing the two Houses in the manner it did, we had a right to suppose that it would become a law; but the President of the United States returned the bill to the Senate without his signature and with the reasons for his failure to attach his signature of approval to it.

In the proposition to pass that bill, notwithstanding the objections of the President, we must look to its provisions to see whether or no it is a proper bill and whether it ought to pass the two Houses of Congress under the constitutional requirement notwithstanding the objections of the President. While I have no time to go into a critical analytical discussion of the provisions of the bill, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to its general features and to show that the only effect of it, if the bill becomes a law, will be to turn McGarrahan back to the beginning of this controversy, to file his application before a court of the United States composed of five judges. In that court he has to establish his right to this property step by step, just as he had in the court of California when the case came up originally before the land commission, thence to the district court of the United States, and to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Let us look at the provisions of the bill and see whether there is a single feature of it to which anybody ought to object who believes that McGarrahan has a claim as the assignee of Gomez to the Rancho Panoche Grande.

Upon the subject of a grant, I take it for granted that there is nobody who has examined the evidence in this case who has at this moment a single doubt that a grant was made by Micheltorena to Vicente P. Gomez, because while the Supreme Court, through Judge Clifford, did say that the grant was not established to his satisfaction, since that time we have taken the testimony of four or five witnesses, who altogether establish beyond a peradventure that Gomez had a grant from the governor of California to this identical land.

Mr. FAULKNER. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FAULKNER. Was not all the evidence to which the Senator refers as applying to the grant from Mexico taken by the committee of which the then Senator from Indiana [Mr. Mc-

Donald] was chairman, and prior to the report he made in which he found that the grant had never been in existence?

Mr. HUNTON. That is an argument of the Senator from West Virginia, and I submit to him in all kindness and candor that that argument would better be made in answer to my remarks.

I do not care where the testimony was taken. I do not care what the tribunal before which it was taken did. I state the fact that the testimony taken since the decision of the court by Judge Clifford establishes beyond peradventure that that grant was made.

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator will understand me of course as only asking that question by reason of the statement which he made that there was no difference of opinion as to the existence of the grant by reason of the evidence.

Mr. HUNTON. I state now, and reaffirm the statement I made a while ago, that if any Senator upon this floor will take the testimony which was taken before the land commission in the State of California and supplemented by the testimony taken since, and there being no countervailing testimony from any source, he can not fail as a candid lawyer to come to the conclusion that Gomez had the grant from Micheltorena.

But that is not all. This fight has been made and continued, not by the Government of the United States, but by the New Idria Mining Company. We have in the papers the testimony of a man by the name of Gibbs, who was at one time the backbone of the New Idria Mining Company, in which he said the company admitted that Gomez had the grant, and at one time by resolution that company determined that they would cease to fight McGarrahan and compromise; but, as I stated some time ago, Mr. McGarrahan is not a man to compromise a claim when he knows he has a just right to it. Failing to compromise, the New Idria Mining Company determined to renew their fight. So I say the only party who has ever fought McGarrahan in the case, or who has ever had any interest to fight McGarrahan in the case, has admitted by the testimony of one of its own members, that this grant from Micheltorena was given to Vicente P. Gomez for the very land in question.

That being so, I wish to ask the Senate, and I wish to ask the Senator from West Virginia, has not the Government of the United States failed to live up to the requirements and the treaty obligations of the Government as embodied in the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo? If this is a valid Mexican claim and a grant made, as the evidence proves, was it not the duty of the United States Government, the highest duty known among the nations of the earth, to stand by its treaty obligations and to say that Gomez or his assignee had the title to the property which the United States guaranteed to him in the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo? I say, instead of debating what sort of relief and whether any should be given in this case, the Congress of the United States and especially the Senate of the United States, which is the only legislative body which has anything to do with treaties, ought to hasten with quick step to live up to the obligations of their treaty and protect the Mexican grant of the governor of California to Vicente P. Gomez. Yet, sir, while that, in my opinion, is the duty of the Government, of both Houses of Congress, and especially of this body, we find Senators here hesitating about whether they will by their votes live up to the requirements of the Government as embodied in the highest stipulation among nations, to wit, the treaty between the United States and Mexico.

Mr. President, if this be so, if this was a grant to Gomez when this treaty was made and the Government of the United States stood pledged to protect that grant, every step in this controversy from the time that treaty was made down to the present, by which the Government failed to stand up to its treaty obligations and protect the grant of Gomez, places it before the eyes of the civilized world as the violator of its own most solemn contract—a treaty.

This being the duty, in my humble judgment, of the Government of the United States, and more especially when you come to the legislative department, it being especially the duty of the Senate of the United States—when at this late period, after William McGarrahan has spent years of toil and labor and trial and tribulation and has at last gotten from the two Houses of Congress a bill which does not give him his rights under the treaty, but which puts him in a way of obtaining his rights after a struggle before the courts, it may be for years to come, and when this bill has passed both Houses of Congress under the circumstances I have stated, we find the President of the United States sending the bill back with his objections, and Senators upon this floor unwilling at this late day to render justice to this honest claimant.

Mr. President, what does this bill provide? It provides, in the first place, that Mr. McGarrahan, the assignee of Gomez, shall file his petition in the new land court, a court composed of five gentlemen appointed by the President of the United States, whose salaries are paid by the Government of the United States. Mr. McGarrahan, by the provisions of this bill, is allowed to carry his claim to that court, which takes the place of the district court of California under the law passed in 1851 to settle private land grants in the State of California. When that petition is filed and the evidence is laid before that court, McGarrahan has to satisfy that court just as Gomez had to satisfy the land commissioners and the district court in California that he had a valid grant through his assignor, Gomez, from Micheltorena, governor of California.

The bill does not come forward and say the Government will protect this grant, which the proof shows was unquestionably made to Gomez, but it says to Mr. McGarrahan, "You may go into that court and you may have the privilege of proving forty years after the grant was made"—I believe it was forty-eight years after the grant was made—"you shall have the poor privilege of going into that court and proving that you had a valid grant for this tract of land." But unless he proves that he has a valid grant, unless he satisfies the court that the grant to Gomez was a valid and a legal grant, his case fails, he goes out of court, and there is an end of the McGarrahan case. But if the court believes from the testimony that there was a valid grant made by the governor of California to Gomez, then this bill provides that the court shall go on and ascertain what has been done with the land which was granted to Gomez and owned by McGarrahan from 1857 down to the present time. If the court shall find that the Government has patented any of this land to any of Mr. McGarrahan's adversaries, such land is to be excepted from the patent which shall issue to him for the residue of the tract.

Criticism has been made upon that, but are McGarrahan and his claim to be criticised and damned forever because there is excepted from the patent a tract of land or a portion of his land which the United States wrongfully dispossessed him of and wrongfully withheld from him the title which would enable him to assert his claim against the New Idria Mining Company?

This bill excepts all lands patented by the Government to anybody else. It is a very small quantity; it amounts to about 2,000 acres out of 4 square leagues of land; and it is a mere bagatelle so far as this land is concerned compared with the whole grant. If the court finds that Mr. McGarrahan had a valid grant to this land, and the United States, in violation of its treaty obligations, has patented a portion of that land to somebody else, the bill provides that that shall be excepted out of the patent to be issued to William McGarrahan, and for that property thus taken from Mr. McGarrahan by the Government the bill provides that he shall be compensated. That is not objectionable. If he had this grant and was entitled to his patent by the decision of the President of the United States and two Secretaries of the Interior, and the Government has, by the wrongful act of its Land Department, deprived him of the means of asserting his title to this land, the United States ought to pay him for the use and occupation of the land which they have patented to others.

Mr. FAULKNER. If the Senator will permit me, I should like him to inform the Senate, or give me the information, as I am very anxious to learn—what does he mean by the term "use and occupation"?

Mr. HUNTON. The Senator knows as well as I do.

Mr. FAULKNER. What compensation, I mean, is to be given for the use and occupation of this land during the last forty-five years?

Mr. HUNTON. The Senator knows as well as I do, and it seems curious that the Senator should ask such a question, if he will excuse my remark.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will state what I understand it to be and see whether the Senator and myself agree. As I understand, under that clause of the bill the court would have to ascertain what would be a fair and reasonable rental value for the last forty-odd years for this entire grant, if it is established by the court in the proceedings authorized by this bill. It would not be as to whether or not the Government received any benefit from the land; it would not be as to whether anyone else received any benefit from it, but what is a fair and reasonable rental value of that land during the period from 1857 to the present time.

Mr. CULLOM. As the Senator has been interrupted by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], I should like to call attention to two or three things which seem to be contemplated.

Mr. HUNTON. One at a time, please. I hope the Senator will wait till I get through with the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. CULLOM. My suggestion is in harmony with what the Senator was talking about. He was speaking of the value of the use and occupation of the land. The bill goes on to say:

and of the minerals or other valuable substances so extracted.

And there are some other items. Now, while the Senator is speaking on that feature of the bill I should like to know if he has any idea how much it would cost the Government.

Mr. HUNTON. I mean to come to that. I do not mean to omit that. Whether asked the question or not I had intended to refer to it.

Mr. CULLOM. Very well. I shall be glad to have the Senator do it.

Mr. HUNTON. I mean to argue the case fully and fairly, as far as I am able.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like the Senator to give us definite information on that point.

Mr. HUNTON. I will.

In regard to the question submitted by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], it is the use and occupation of that portion of the property which has been taken away from the grant.

Mr. FAULKNER. Is not that all the property?

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir. The report of the Secretary of the Interior says there were two thousand and some odd acres of land only for which patents have been issued, and 4 square leagues is the amount of the grant. Two thousand acres of land compared with 4 square leagues is a mere bagatelle, and those 2,000 acres are not valuable except for the minerals they may contain; it is wild mountain land, and the price for the use and occupation of it would be almost nothing. It would not be 5 cents an acre during the period of its occupancy by the New Idria Mining Company or anybody else.

Mr. FAULKNER. I suggest to the Senator, unless he has particular information, which I have not, whether part of the Southern Pacific land grant is not included within the boundaries of this supposed grant. If that is true, and those lands have not yet been forfeited—I am not informed as to that—that takes over 8,000 acres out of the 17,000 acres of this grant.

Mr. HUNTON. Seventeen thousand acres?

Mr. FAULKNER. Yes.

Mr. HUNTON. How does the Senator get that?

Mr. FAULKNER. I think the Commissioner of the General Land Office reports 17,000 acres as the amount embraced within this grant.

Mr. HUNTON. It far exceeds that amount. The Senator is a fine arithmetician, and I beg him to sit down at his desk while I am talking and figure up how many acres there are in 4 square leagues. He will find it greatly beyond 17,000 acres. Four square leagues make a large territory.

Mr. FAULKNER. That point is not material. The Commissioner reports 8,700 acres of land taken by the Government unless that grant to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company has been forfeited.

Mr. HUNTON. I hope my friend will not interrupt me any more than is necessary, because I am under a pledge to finish what I have to say to-day.

In regard to that use and occupation, it is merely for the use of the surface of that land held by other people, and I say it is a mere bagatelle. But if the Government has been in default and failed to protect this grant, and by its failure has allowed these adverse claimants to take possession of it, is it not fair and right and just that the Government should pay for the use and occupation of that land?

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] asked me some days ago whether the question of liability for use and occupation was an open question. I say it is not; that if the court finds that this was a valid grant and that Gomez was entitled to it, and McGarrahan is his assignee, then he is absolutely entitled to what the court shall say is a fair value for the use and occupation of this land that has been used by others under Government permission. That is all right.

You know, Mr. President, that if a man brings an action of ejectment for a piece of land which a party has held without any right to hold it, he has a right to recover the land and for use and occupation of the land in an action of ejectment.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President——

Mr. HUNTON. Let me finish my sentence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUBOIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. HUNTON. No sir, not yet.

If that man should take violent possession of the property of another and had committed a trespass upon the property which went beyond the use and occupation of that property, Senators know he would be liable to an action of trespass, and a recovery of damages for that trespass in an action brought by the owner of the land against the trespasser.

Now I will yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. SANDERS. If Vicente P. Gomez filed an application for a grant and secured the order of the governor whereby an inchoate title was vested in him—which, in order to be perfected, must have other legal proceedings—if the Republic of Mexico had continued in the possession of the land applied for from the time the inchoate right, the inceptive right was created until the final confirmation of the grant, in law or equity would the Republic of Mexico have been liable to Vicente P. Gomez for the use and occupation of the land applied for while it was sub judice?

Mr. HUNTON. I ask the Senators on both sides of the Chamber not to interrupt me any more, if they please, as I can not finish to-day if they do.

I will say to the Senator from Montana that we are not trying this case under Mexican law; we are trying it upon the pledge of the Government of the United States in its treaty with Mexico and the law of Congress passed in compliance with that treaty obligation. If the Government is not liable under the treaty or the law the claimant can not recover. That is my answer to the Senator.

If I was right in saying that the owner of the land had the right to bring his action of ejectment and recover the land and for its use and occupation, that is exactly the provision here. When we come to the minerals, it is likened further to the case of the landlord owning the land and the tenant going there without permission, and not only occupying the premises, but committing a trespass upon it by taking from a safe in that house the jewels of the true owner. We know, in addition to recovering the property, and for the use and occupation, he would have the right to bring his action of ejectment and recover the value of the jewels taken from it. So this bill proposes that McGarrahan, if he had a valid grant, shall have the right to recover the land or compensation for it from the Government, and he shall have the right to recover for the use and occupation from the time the New Idria Mining Company or somebody else took possession of it. He has a right also to recover what was taken from the bowels of the ground embraced in that grant by some trespasser against his rights. That is all the bill provides.

Therefore it is provided that if the land court, to which we have to go in the trial of this case, and the Supreme Court of the United States upon appeal, say that under the laws of the United States the grantee of a Mexican grant, protected as he is by the treaty between the two Governments and the laws of the United States, is entitled in law and in equity to the minerals under the surface, then it is further said that the Government shall be held responsible for the minerals taken out of the land.

Mr. President, I beg to say that McGarrahan has tried everything that the human intellect could devise to make the Government stop the trespass of the New Idria Mining Company. I will show you what he did.

On the 7th of June, 1860, which was before any considerable trespassing had occurred by the New Idria Mining Company, William McGarrahan, at that time the owner of the grant, urged the Attorney-General, the Hon. Jere Black (who, while he was defending for the United States, was attorney for the New Idria Mining Company) to enjoin the New Idria Mining Company as a trespasser in illegal possession, McGarrahan not then being in a position to enjoin or eject the trespasser. The Attorney-General was reminded that the same course had been taken by him in the Almaden case, a case exactly similar to this, where the trespasser upon that mine was enjoined by the Government until the title of the mine had been settled by the courts.

Again, on the 24th of June, 1861, the counsel of McGarrahan addressed a letter to the Attorney-General, requesting him to enjoin and restrain the New Idria Mining Company from further waste of the property. Nothing was done. In the Forty-second Congress McGarrahan applied to the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives to instruct the Commissioner of the General Land Office to proceed against that company. Then, the House of Representatives in the Forty-third Congress passed a resolution requesting the Commissioner of the General Land Office to institute proceedings against the New Idria Mining Company.

Not one thing was done by the Government, although implored by McGarrahan, to take steps to protect this property, which the Government was bound to make good to him under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. The Government folded its arms, though it knew of the trespass committed by the New Idria Mining Company, and refused to intervene until the title to the property had been settled, and although they had intervened in the Almaden grant. Now we are told by Senators upon this floor, notwithstanding that McGarrahan had his property destroyed with the knowledge of the Government, with the acquiesence of the Government, he is to get no compensation for it, although he would have been perfectly able to protect himself if the Government had lived up to its treaty obligations, and given him his title. It is too late for Senators to say that the Government ought not to pay McGarrahan for the minerals taken out by the New Idria Mining Company, if the courts shall say under the law that the mines passed with the grant of Micheltoreno upon the acquisition of this territory by the United States.

I was somewhat struck with the argument of the Senator from Montana [Mr. SANDERS]. He said in one part of his argument that this bill would give millions of dollars to McGarrahan, and in the subsequent part of his remarks he took the ground, and argued most vociferously—I beg pardon of the Senator for saying "most vociferously"—but most earnestly that Mr. McGarrahan had not the right to a single dollar's worth of the mineral under the surface when that grant was given. I do not see how the Senator can reconcile those two positions, because, if the court shall decide, as the Senator argued, that Mr. McGarrahan was not entitled to the minerals, he gets nothing but the bare earth embraced in that grant to Gomez, less what was patented afterwards to the New Idria Mining Company and some others. I do not know how the court will decide this question. I presume the Senator from Montana does not know; but if the court shall decide that when this grant was made and the territory was acquired by the United States, the royal prerogative of Mexico and Spain followed the land and vested that royal prerogative in the Government of the United States, then McGarrahan gets nothing for his minerals.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator a question in order to see whether I understand the facts exactly as he does?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the court should ultimately decide in this case, provided this bill should become a law, that the minerals, gold, silver, quicksilver, and the precious metals, did not pass by the original grant, then McGarrahan would not get a dollar?

Mr. HUNTON. Not a dollar or a cent for the minerals.

Mr. SANDERS. But the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HUNTON. I ask the Senator not to interrupt me. I have but a few moments left.

Mr. SANDERS. We will certainly give the Senator all the time he desires, but he certainly would not put me in the wrong.

Mr. HUNTON. I would not do it if I knew it.

Mr. SANDERS. I know that. Section 3 of this bill provides:

That if said court shall find and adjudge that the said grant from said Governor Manuel Micheltorena to said Vicente P. Gomez was valid and protected under and by virtue of the treaty—

Then section 4 provides:

That if the court shall adjudge in favor of said William McGarrahan, as provided in section 3—

Namely, that the grant was valid and was protected by the treaty with Mexico—

the United States—

This is a legislative provision—

the United States shall indemnify the said William McGarrahan for such portion of land as may have been heretofore and may hereafter be disposed of by the United States within the aforesaid boundaries, and for the use and occupation of the same, "and for any mineral or valuable substance whatever extracted from said lands by any person or corporation other than the said William McGarrahan."

There is a phrase following that which I think an analysis of the original section shows has been clerically misplaced, and it is claimed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] that it is a condition inserted after all that I have read; but it reads like this:

And if the said court shall find that the said William McGarrahan is or was entitled in law or equity to the minerals or valuable substances on, in, or under said lands.

Mr. HUNTON. There is no trouble about that. This bill provides that if the court shall find that by law and equity William McGarrahan was entitled to the minerals he shall get judgment for them. I will ask the Senator from Montana how on earth the court could give judgment for the minerals if they found Mr. McGarrahan was not entitled to them.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President——

Mr. HUNTON. I can not be interrupted. I ask the Senator to excuse me.

How can the court give a judgment for minerals under this section of the bill if the court finds that Mr. McGarrahan is not entitled to them?—because the bill says if he is entitled the court shall give the judgment. Could the court give the judgment if he was not entitled? With great respect to Senators who see differently, it is so absolutely plain to my mind that there is no room for two opinions about it.

Granting that McGarrahan has no chance to recover for the minerals—the Senator from Montana says he has not the ghost of a chance—then the courts will have to decide that this royal prerogative which belonged to the King of Spain and the Emperor of Mexico to own all the mines has passed by the treaty to this republican Government.

Mr. SANDERS. That has been decided already.

Mr. HUNTON. I am not going to discuss that question, because that question will be left to the court, and must be discussed before the court; but if that court find, notwithstanding the opinion of the Senator from Montana, that McGarrahan was entitled to these minerals, then the bill does provide that he shall be paid for what was taken out by the New Idria Mining Company, I was about to say, with the connivance of the Government of the United States, because McGarrahan begged the Government to intervene; and the House of Representatives passed a resolution instructing the parties to sue the New Idria Mining Company and enjoin them from trespassing. Therefore, I say I am not overstating the case when I contend that this mineral was taken from the mines of the Rancho Panoche Grande, with the connivance of that portion of the Government of the United States, which alone could have prevented it.

It is said if Mr. McGarrahan is entitled to the minerals the recovery under this bill will be fabulous. I do not know what it will be. I have not the remotest conception, but I say, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] said the other day, that whatever it may be this Government is too big and too rich to say "We will not pay an honest debt because it is a large one;" and I trust, sir, so long as I occupy a seat in the Senate of the United States I shall never take the position as a Senator which I would not take as an individual that I withhold payment from a creditor of mine, not because the claim is not a just one, but because the claim is a large one. If the Government is not able to pay it, if the Government is bankrupt, that is another question; but if the Government is able to pay McGarrahan his just rights in the premises then it is the duty of the Government, whether the claim be large or small, to meet it and meet it under its solemn obligation to the Government of Mexico as embodied in the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.

But, Mr. President, upon the subject of the value of the New Idria mine I have but one single point of evidence which I will give to the Senate, and that is in the testimony of D. O. Mills, a name familiar to every Senator upon the floor. He was examined January 24, 1868, before a committee of the House of Representatives, and I read from his testimony:

D. O. Mills sworn and examined by Mr. Lake, counsel for the New Idria Quicksilver Mining Company:

Q. You are a resident of California, and are the president of the Bank of California?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you state some of the principal stockholders in the New Idria Mining Company?

A. Barron & Co., consisting of Mr. W. E. Barron, Mr. Thomas Bell, and Joseph Barron, and some others whom I do not know—being in foreign countries—owned perhaps one-half of the stock. I own about one-eighth of it, and Mr. Ralston owns about one-eighth.

Q. (By Mr. Woodbridge.) What, in your judgment, is the property worth?

A. I should think it is worth from $500,000 to $750,000 in gold. That may be overestimating it.

Q. (By Mr. Eldridge.) How much of the mining estate do you include in that?

A. I include the whole mining estate; the whole Idria mine proper.

Q. What do you claim that that covers?

A. The mine, as developed, does not cover nearly what the company has put in for. I think the company has put in for three or four thousand acres.

And yet the fancy of Senators here has magnified the probable claim until I do not know what it will amount to. D. O. Mills said the ultimate value of the property was $750,000, but it has been magnified upon this floor into untold millions. I ask in all seriousness, if the amount be $500,000 or whether it be ten times that amount, if it is an honest debt arising under the treaty obligation of the great Government of the United States, if a Senator on this floor ought to hesitate about paying it because the amount is large?

I read also an extract from the testimony of D. O. Mills, taken on behalf of the New Idria Company before the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives January 24, 1868:

Q. Mr. Ralston is cashier of the Bank of California?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you and Barron and Ralston purchase in?

A. About two years ago.

Q. Something has been said about the New Almaden Quicksilver Mining Company controlling the market for quicksilver. Explain.

A. The New Almaden Company does not control the quicksilver market. The only connection it has that way is that Barron & Co. made a contract nearly two years ago for the production of the New Almaden mine, to run for two years, or up to the 1st April next, to the extent of 50,000 flasks. The Barrons also contract for the product of the New Idria mine. They are not only part owners of the mine, but are the commercial agents for it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Is there a similar arrangement with the other quicksilver mines in California?

A. Yes, sir; nearly or quite all the quicksilver produced in California goes into the hands of Barron & Co., and is distributed by them over the world.

Q. Can you state any reason for that arrangement being made?

A. Barron & Co. made certain large advances to the New Almaden Company; and to repay those advances and a considerable debt which the company already owed to the Barrons, the sale of this large amount of quick-silver was made to the Barrons, to run for two years. It was then to the advantage of the Barrons and to the advantage of the New Idria Mining Company that they should also control the product of that mine.

Q. For what purpose?

A. I suppose for the purpose of getting a fair price for the quicksilver. The market for quicksilver is limited. The markets of the world only take a certain amount, and any competition or any urging of the sale of quicksilver would be disadvantageous.

Q. What other quicksilver mining companies do the Barrons control under this system?

A. They control "I Excel" Company, and the Guadalupe or Santa Clara Mining Company, but they are small producers. There are one or two other small producers that are just getting started.

Q. Then under this arrangement the Barrons have control of the quicksilver market?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know what attorneys held claims against the company, Idria, at that time?

A. I think that Mr. Black, the Attorney-General, was employed, and Mr. Goold.

Q. Do you know at what time they were employed by the New Idria Company?

A. I never had charge of the accounts of the company, and am therefore not familiar with the facts.

Q. Do you know when they were first employed by the company?

A. I do not; perhaps some years before we bought in.

Q. (By Mr. Eldridge.) Did you know of Mr. Sweet being employed?

A. Mr. Sweet had some interest, but what it was I am unable to state.

Q. Was he a former partner of President Lincoln?

A. I believe he was.

Q. (By the CHAIRMAN). How many of the stockholders in the New Idria Company are stockholders in the Bank of California?

A. The Barrons are stockholders in the Bank of California, and Mr. Ralston and myself are stockholders in the Bank of California.

Q. What is the extent of interest in the Bank of California of the persons who are stockholders in the New Idria Mining Company?

A. The Barrons hold perhaps three thousand shares of the Bank of California. Mr. Ralston stands on the books for three thousand shares, and I stand on the books for three thousand shares. The shares are $100 each.

There is another view of this question which I merely desire to present and not to argue. This bill provides that McGarrahan shall give a quitclaim deed to the Government for the land that is excepted out of his patent. Therefore the Government will have a perfect right to what it never had any right to before—because the property belonged to McGarrahan, and if they had improperly, by design or otherwise, given away a portion of this property, they have given away that which did not belong to them—they have a right to file a bill and set aside the patent to these lands, and when that shall have been accomplished, then the New Idria Mining Company and all others are responsible to the United States Government, just as the Government is responsible to McGarrahan by the provisions of this bill.

I take it, sir, that it would be difficult to find a lawyer who would undertake to controvert that proposition. Mr. McGarrahan can not hold them responsible when he gets his patent, because the statute of limitations bars him of that right; but that statute does not apply to the Government, and when that patent is set aside by the Government of the United States the Government has a right to sue this enormously rich corporation, the New Idria Mining Company, and recover back from that company every dollar which it has to pay to Mr. McGarrahan under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. President, where is the enormity of this bill? I have looked at it with diligence and care and as far as I can see, as far as I can learn from a diligent study of the bill, it gives to Mr. McGarrahan his smallest rights after forty years of toil on his part to obtain them from the Government. Ought we to hesitate a moment to give him those rights so long delayed by the action of the Government itself?

Mr. President, allow me to call the attention of the Senate for a few minutes to the objections of the President. When this bill reached the President of the United States, he says himself that he was immersed in business; it was just at the close of the session of Congress; he had hundreds of other bills to examine, and he had no time or opportunity to make himself familiar with the provisions of this bill or of the history of the McGarrahan case. I ask you, sir, and I ask any Senator upon this floor, if President Harrison had known the history of the McGarrahan case as we know it now, and as I have tried to tell it to the Senate, is there a Senator who believes that he would have hesitated one minute to have signed the bill, which proposes, after forty years, to give an honest claimant his rights? He could not do it.

The President says in two places in his veto message that McGarrahan is entitled to relief. Here is what he says:

This bill came to me on the 20th instant, at a time when very many other bills were submitted for my consideration, and it has not been possible for me to make such examination of the history of Mr. McGarrahan's claim as would be necessary to form an intelligent judgment as to its merits and just extent.

When the President of the United States starts out in a veto message with a confession of ignorance—not criminal on the part of the President, but absolutely impossible to avoid, because he had never studied this case and he had not the time to study it when the bill came before him, and he says in his message that he had not time to learn the merits or demerits of the McGarrahan bill—if he had known them as we know them, we have a right to suppose, and I do suppose, he would not have hesitated to append his approval to the bill; but he says:

It is quite possible that he has been wronged—

That is putting it rather mildly, but still the President believes, just from a casual glance at the claim and the history of the case, that McGarrahan has been wronged—and that he has a claim for some reparation from the Government.

When the President of the United States admits that a claimant in a bill passed by the two Houses of Congress has a just claim for reparation, I ask the Senators around me if the quantum of reparation, if the mode of reparation, ought not by the President of the United States to have been left to the two Houses of Congress which had investigated the claim and knew its history? When the President of the United States in his veto message admitted that McGarrahan had a claim to reparation, I say that it became the duty of the President of the United States to leave the amount of that reparation to the two Houses of Congress; it was not such legislation as our fathers intended should be vetoed by the President of the United States unless there was something vicious in the bill itself, and the President says twice in his message that McGarrahan is entitled to reparation at the hands of the Government of the United States.

A step further. The President says:

I can not, however, think that this bill proceeds upon a just basis. It provides that Mr. McGarrahan shall file his claim as the assignee of Gomez in the Court of Private Land Claims for the lands described in the title; and that if the court establishes the grant to Gomez it shall be confirmed to McGarrahan.

That is practically true as the President states it; but why is it true? Does not every man who has been in the Congress of the United States for the last twenty-five years know that McGarrahan has the title that Gomez had to this grant? Does he not know, as I do, that Gomez deeded the land to McGarrahan, and that deed, which I have in my desk, is on record in California, by which Gomez conveyed to McGarrahan all his right and title to the Rancho Panoche Grande under the grant of the governor of California?

The only intervening right which can be put up here by any Senator on the floor is that Pacificus Ord had a contingent fee for one-half of the land if he succeeded in confirming the grant; but Pacificus Ord's title to that one-half, whatever it may have been, has been long ago extinguished. And every committee—I will not say every committee—but committees of both Houses of Congress have passed upon the title of McGarrahan and reported that if Gomez had the title McGarrahan has it. The only outstanding title that can possibly be conceived of so far as the papers go is the claim of Pacificus Ord. Pacificus Ord lives in the city of Washington; he is a brother of General Ord; he has been living here for the last ten years, or it may be twenty years, and he has never put up a single claim to this land. There is not a single human being who has examined this case who does not know that the title of McGarrahan to the Rancho Panoche Grande is good if that of Gomez was good.

The President's criticism might have something in it if we did not know the facts better than the President, but knowing the facts as we do, it does not matter whether McGarrahan is presumed to be the owner of Gomez's title or not, because we know he is. It seems to me, therefore, that there is nothing in the objection of the President to that part of the bill. The President further says:

If the claim is established it is provided, in substance, that all lands, part of said grant, which have been conveyed by the Government or are in the occupancy of actual settlers, or "upon which there are any smelting or reduction works, or the lands claimed in connection with such reduction or smelting works," shall be excepted from the patent which the Secretary of the Interior is directed to issue to McGarrahan. By this provision the title of the New Idria Mining Company, which has long contested with McGarrahan the title to a large part of this property, is established and that company is relieved from any responsibility to account for the profits made in mining.

Yet one provision of the bill provides that a deed from McGarrahan shall be made to the Government of the United States for his right and title to this property, which is excepted out of this patent. As I said awhile ago, the Government would have a right under that deed of McGarrahan to set aside the patent of the New Idria Mining Company and all the other patents and hold the patentees to the responsibilities to which this bill holds the Government so far as McGarrahan is concerned.

On the other hand, the United States waives all benefit of judicial proceedings which have resulted in its favor and gives Mr. McGarrahan an opportunity de novo to try all such questions.

I think I have satisfied the Senate that under the circumstances he is entitled to that new trial, not only by what has occurred in the executive department, which if known to the judicial department would have prevented a decree of the Supreme Court of the United States against him, but McGarrahan is entitled to try this question de novo because there is evidence now of the grant and of its bona fides which the Supreme Court did not have at the time this question was passed upon.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HUNTON. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand that when the case was in the court heretofore Mr. McGarrahan did not have the benefit before the court of the alleged fact that the patent had been issued by the Government?

Mr. HUNTON. Not at all.

Mr. MITCHELL. Could he by the exercise of reasonable diligence have had the benefit of that fact in the former trial?

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir, because that fact was suppressed in the Land Department and concealed from McGarrahan and his counsel, and not until 1870 was it unearthed by McGarrahan and the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. HUNTON. My dear sir, I have only ten minutes left.

Mr. FAULKNER. I should like merely to add that certainly the Supreme Court did pass upon the whole question of this patent in a subsequent decision.

Mr. TELLER. That was another patent, and a mutilated patent.

Mr. FAULKNER. That is the one that was in evidence before all the committees, and the only one we have heard of in this case.

Mr. TELLER. It is not.

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir. The Senator will have an opportunity to present that patent, and when we get to that bridge we will cross it.

Mr. President, these are the objections of the President of the United States. Then he goes on to say about what may possibly be recovered under this bill, to which I have already called the attention of the Senate. I do not propose to discuss the President's message any more, because he admits that McGarrahan is entitled to reparation, and the two Houses of Congress are the proper tribunals to determine the amount of reparation where reparation is unquestionably due, as the President admits in his veto message.

Now, Mr. President, I am done. But I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that McGarrahan has been pursuing this claim, to which he believes he has as honest a title as ever a man had to any species of property that he owned. He has pursued this fight not against the Government of the United States, but the officials of the Government of the United States, who in many instances were corrupted by the gold of the New Idria Mining Company that was coined out of the minerals extracted from the land belonging to McGarrahan and used by the New Idria Mining Company to defeat the claim; which they themselves acknowledged by resolution of the company to be absolutely just and proper.

Mr. President, this case, taken in all of its ramifications, sounds to me more like a romance. A man like McGarrahan, entitled even according to the declaration of the President of the United States in his veto message to reparation, and being entitled to reparation is entitled to the grant, and being entitled to that grant he has pursued his claim with an honesty of purpose and a diligence in its pursuit that no man could have employed who did not know that he had an honest and a just claim.

Mr. President, we have seen Mr. McGarrahan around the corridors of this Capitol for the last twenty-five years. I do not believe there is a Senator upon this floor or a member of the other House who ever heard a sentiment fall from the lips of that man which was not creditable to an honest man and did not show him to be a man of the highest integrity. If I am right, Mr. President—if I have stated this case correctly, and I have certainly tried to do it—if I have approximated the truth in the case, I ask you if it is not time that the great Government of the United States should live up to its treaty obligations, and right the wrongs which have been inflicted for the last forty years upon William McGarrahan?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is: Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not suppose it is the purpose of Senators who favor the measure before the Senate to press it to a vote at this time. I know of several Senators who have remarks to make upon it, and the hour is within seven minutes of the time when we shall have to conclude any discussion upon the bill. I suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill whether it would not be better just by agreement to let it go over until after the holidays and retain its place before the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I do not suppose of course that we can get a vote on the bill this morning. I should like, if possible, to fix a time to take the vote after the holiday recess. Taking up the bill soon after the recess, which terminates on the 4th of January, we might dispose of it very soon; but as several Senators have notified me that they would not return for the first few days after the recess, I suggest that we might agree to take the vote, say on the 17th of January. That would give ample time to discuss the bill and ample time for Senators to return who are away. I suggest that we agree to take the vote at half past 1 on the 17th day of January, the second Tuesday after the reassembling, there being, however, in the meantime opportunity given for anyone to debate the bill who wishes to do so. I do not want to shut off any debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the request. The Senator from Colorado asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the vote upon the pending question be taken on the 17th day of January, 1893, at half past 1 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. MORRILL. There will be no objections to postponing the bill until the 17th of January, but there would be objection to any time being fixed for taking the vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. TELLER. I will then simply ask that the bill may stand over in the same order it now occupies until the next legislative day, to come up on the 4th of January of course, and we will either dispose of it then or dispose of it later.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator mean that the bill is to be taken up immediately after the routine morning business as heretofore?

Mr. TELLER. Precisely as before, immediately after the routine morning business on the next legislative day. I suppose there will be no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the pending measure be taken up during the morning hour on the next legislative day, after the conclusion of the routine morning business. Is there objection?

Mr. SANDERS. Would it not so stand without any order or without any agreement? Would it not be the order of business then?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would not so stand without the unanimous consent or order of the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. No. We have no unfinished business of the morning hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. WHITE. I ask to be excused from further service upon the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore The Senator from Louisiana asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to be excused from further service upon the Committee on Epidemic Diseases. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Louisiana is excused.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the Chair fill the vacancy on the committee occasioned by the resignation of the Senator from Louisiana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Chair filling the vacancy upon the committee? The Chair hears none. The Chair appoints the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] as a member of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 9527) to restore to the public domain a portion of the White Mountain Apache Indian Reservation in the Territory of Arizona, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

DEALING IN "OPTIONS" AND "FUTURES."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7845) defining "options" and "futures," imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and requiring such dealers and persons engaged in selling certain products to obtain license, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. DANIEL to strike out section 10.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon the pending amendment the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, there have been some criticisms by Senators upon various portions of this bill, and while it is not my purpose to reply to any of them nor all of them in bulk, I wish to suggest for the consideration of the Senate that the bill will be construed as a whole if it ever passes into the courts. That is a rule of construction familiar to all lawyers, and in construing the effect of the bill while pending before this body it is well for us to remember that rule of construction.

Further, Mr. President, the bill as it is now framed, with amendments pending and proposed, presents to the Senate the best thought of the strongest men in both branches of the present Congress. Besides that, the measure itself in the concrete has been considered time and time again by men of distinction in different parts of the country, and especially by men who are interested in agriculture, and with a rare unanimity the bill is favored by the agricultural classes.

I took occasion to suggest yesterday that the object of the bill is not to suppress the sale or the purchase of articles to be exchanged in the future, because that is a common and a necessary proceeding, but it is to suppress a fictitious commerce which injuriously affects the commercial industry in the country, or, if you prefer the expression, to eliminate the element of gambling from commerce.

It has been suggested that the bill has been framed in the interest of a particular class of manufacturers, namely, the millers. If when the bill becomes operative it should appear to have the effect of concentrating in the hands of millers the power which is now concentrated in the hands of the traders, the people would immediately proceed against the millers and clip their wings, just as it is proposed now to clip the wings of the traders in the great trade centers.

There has been some objection made to language which has been used by speakers upon the floor in describing the class of persons who are engaged in this business. The words may not have been elegant, but I am not certain that they were used in any offensive sense. Men are in the habit of wagering money and other valuable things upon the result of elections or upon the result of other pending or coming events. They are not classed in the law as gamblers, and yet such things come within the definition of the common word "gambling."

It seems to me that the only difference between this form and the ordinary gaming which the law prohibits, and where the persons engaged in such habits have the doors of respectable people closed against them, is that one plays dice upon a high plane where all the world sees him, and the stakes are great, not a dollar, nor five dollars, nor ten dollars, but thousands or a hundred thousand or a million dollars, it may be; that one has the protection of the law thrown about him, and the custom of society to approve his conduct, and the plaudits of admiring millions to encourage him, while the other is denounced by the law, his practice is prohibited, and his conviction is duly followed by punishment prescribed in penal enactments.

It is not expected that this or any other one act of Congress will restore former conditions to business, nor is it expected that this bill will have the beneficent result to wholly do away with the particular evil at which it is aimed, for the business of dealing in futures is too strongly intrenched, and it will be difficult to dislodge it by one attack or by a dozen attacks from only one direction. So intimately has this nefarious business become interwoven in our commercial system, that boards of trade, stock exchanges, and other like bodies, at all the trading marts of the country come to its defense. They remonstrate against the passage of this and all similar bills and they send men of law learning and social influence here to help them.

To destroy this business would relieve from responsible duties a considerable number of Christian gentlemen whose solicitations are embarrassing at the business centers; they must be heard and their business defended, though they produce nothing and add not an atom to the wealth of the world or to the comfort or happiness of the people, while the men and women whose toil supplies the arteries of trade with the food on which commerce thrives—farmers, mechanics, wage-workers generally—must be pushed aside as unworthy of thought. To pass this bill is to disturb the harmony of the privileged classes who have so long been petted by our lawmakers that they have come to regard their special privileges as of first importance in the economy of the Government. The business of dealing in futures and options has defenders in every body of speculators in every great city and in every line of business which is enjoying special advantages by reason of our peculiar legislation. They are all but parts of one stupendous wrong which has grown up under our vicious laws. What affects one of them injuriously arouses the opposition of all the rest. Attack one and the others fly to its rescue. It would be impossible to capture such an enemy by the firing of a single gun or by the use of a single battery.

In this connection I desire to call attention briefly to some considerations which I have not heard referred to in this discussion. They may not appear to be altogether relevant, yet it seems to me that they are pertinent. While I concur in the conclusions of Senators who favor this bill with respect to the evils of the business which it is intended to remove; I do not believe the depression in agriculture is wholly chargeable to option dealing. We all have observed steady tendencies of prices upward or downward during certain well-defined periods when speculation in farm products was quite as active as it is now.

Take the cereals, for example. The total number of bushels of corn, wheat, oats, barley, rye, and buckwheat raised in the United States in the year 1867 was 1,329,729,400, of the value of $1,284,037,300, an average of 96 cents per bushel. That was the value of the cereals in 1867. Coming down twenty years, to 1887, we find the total production of the same crop to have been 2,660,457,000 bushels, of the aggregate value of $1,204,289,370, being an average value of 46 cents per bushel.

But this great depreciation was not a steady and regular decline during the whole period of twenty years, and that is a point to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate. There was a period of depression; then again a rising period; and another period of fall. The amount of cereals in 1878 was 2,302,254,950 bushels, and the aggregate value of the crop was $913,975,920, equal to 40 cents per bushel. The number of bushels produced in 1882 was 2,699,394,496, of the value of $1,469,693,393, or equal to 54 cents per bushel.

It appears that the value of the grain had fallen lower in 1878 than it has been at any time since. It appears further that in 1882 the price had risen 33 per cent above the price in 1878; and that from and after 1882 the price fell to 46 cents a bushel in 1887; and it has been about that ever since.

Then if we will compare the years 1867 down to 1887 in three-year periods we will find that there were fluctuations in price during those periods. I have a table before me showing the acreage and the total amount of crops with the aggregate price for four separate periods of three years each, which I present in order that the fluctuations during those periods may be seen:

Periods.	Total production.	Total area of crops.	Total value of crops.
	Bushels.	Acres.
Three years, 1867, 1868, 1869	4,272,130,500	201,810,132	$3,496,422,071
Three years, 1876, 1877, 1878	6,444,611,696	288,027,165	2,884,555,842
Three years, 1879, 1880, 1881	7,221,705,371	346,575,306	4,077,582,623
Three years, 1886, 1887, 1888	8,712,778,000	429,961,971	3,686,706,678

The average price per bushel for the first period, from 1867 to 1869, was 81¼ cents per bushel; for the second period, from 1876 to 1878, the average price was 44¾ cents per bushel; for the third period, from 1879 to 1881, the price was 56½ cents per bushel; and for the fourth period, from 1886 to 1888, the price was 42½ cents per bushel.

So it appears that to take the prices of products, whether of grain or of manufactured articles, for one year and then jump over a long period of years to another one, and select years in order to suit the particular view of the calculator, is not a fair method. While prices of farm products and prices of manufactured products have been falling they have also been rising and falling during certain years of long periods of time.

In connection with that (and this is a point to which I call attention particularly) I wish to state that during the first period we had a very large amount of money in circulation, beginning, say, with 1866, when we had 5-20 bonds outstanding amounting to $722,205,500. Passing over to the report for 1869 we find that the amount had been increased to $1,602,671,100, showing an absorption of currency in the three years equal to $880,465,600. That amount of the circulating money of the country had been withdrawn during the three years, and while that was going on the prices of farm products and the prices of all other products fell very nearly in the proportion that our circulating medium was diminished. That is a point to which I wish to call the special attention of the Senate, and still more especially the attention of the friends of the bill who believe that in the enactment of a law like this we shall have a universal panacea for the ills that affect agriculture.

Then, beginning with 1879, the national banks began to largely increase their circulation, and from that period of time to 1882 the operation of the Bland silver act was active in giving an average of perhaps $25,000,000 annually of silver money. The banks were increasing their circulation at the rate of between $8,000,000 and $9,000,000 a year, giving us, with the two agencies of increase, about $33,000,000 or $34,000,000. During the time of that rapid increase of the currrency prices began to rise again, as the figures to which I have called attention plainly show. The increase in the bank circulation continued until 1882. Then the banks began to withdraw their paper, and from that time until 1890, when the contraction largely ceased, the amount of bank-note circulation withdrawn was somewhere between $230,000,000 and $240,000,000, and during that time of the withdrawal of the bank notes prices again began to fall. So, in my judgment, this diminution and enlargement of the circulating money of the country had something to do with the fall and the rise of prices—that in connection with these other matters.

While I am satisfied that option and future dealing injuriously affects the business of farming and occasions much loss to other callings, I am not satisfied from anything which has been said in this debate that the extent of such injury and loss can be exactly determined. There are two parties to each of all contracts in this business—bears and bulls, so called because it is to the interest of one party to pull prices down, while it is equally to the interest of the other party to push prices up. Between the two opposing interests markets are often feverish, farmers are frequently subjected to losses on that account, and these losses are never made good to them. And in addition to this irreparable injury, consumers suffer quite as much as the producer, for the scale is against him quite as often as it is against the farmers. The speculator alone profits by his trade.

But what is the net amount of loss to agriculture for which future dealing is directly responsible, we shall probably never know. Whatever it is, it is not reasonable to charge to that source all of the misfortunes which have fallen upon farming as a business, for many other departments of industry have suffered in like manner. Prices quite generally have fallen, and as to a great many articles so affected they are not handled by the "operators." Options and futures are limited to a comparatively few articles. Besides, competition and invention have had some influence in depressing values, and extortion and usury have been powerful agencies in the same direction.

I do not desire to detract an atom from what has been said concerning the evils of this business. I only wish to call the attention of the friends of the bill to other agencies which have been operating in connection with this to depress prices, and that our efforts ought to be combined quite as firmly and quite as strongly in other directions as well.

In conclusion, Mr. President, permit me to suggest what has already become painfully apparent to every thoughtful observer of the times. The gambling spirit is rife among the people. The public conscience is being blunted by this prevailing moral malady. It is rapidly making its way into every department of our society. Whole columns of metropolitan periodicals are taken up with reports of proceedings in the stock market; men are sent a thousand miles to report a prize fight, and Christians read the sickening recitals in the morning before they attend divine service; a game of ball is telegraphed to a thousand newspapers; respectable gentlemen gamble on a horse race; patriotic citizens stake wagers on elections; even the church is becoming tainted with this debauching vice.

Option and future speculation is only one of many symptoms of a disease which is deeply seated in our national character. What we most need now is to get rid of these evil agencies, quicken the public conscience, get more honor in our politics and more justice in our laws. From what I have said it must not be inferred that I am as one without hope. I am not a pessimist. I believe in progress—a grand, glorious progress for the American Republic.

I believe that in the pregnant years to come this nation will be, as it has been the last hundred years, the leading nation of the world; and that for us, with us, and around us and about us will be always active those elements of progress which have brought us thus far, only they will grow stronger and more powerful as the years to come reach us, moving us onward and upward as we go.

I have faith, Mr. President, in the energy, intelligence, and the moral courage of our own people to so great an extent that I believe we are amply able to solve all these problems ourselves with the aid of the Power above us. But what I am trying to do in my weak way is to call attention to existing evils and to join hands with others in arresting pernicious tendencies and in restoring the Government of the country to the people for whose protection its powers were organized.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to thank the Senate for the courtesy which has been extended to me. My remarks have gone far beyond what I expected they would in the matter of time.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. President——

Mr. QUAY. I desire to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WASHBURN. I wish the Senator would withhold that for a few moments. I wish to make a statement, and then I will renew the motion.

Mr. QUAY. Very well.

Mr. WASHBURN. I intended to make that motion before I sat down. I presume it is impossible to have a vote on the pending bill to-day, although I had hoped that such a vote might be had before taking the holiday recess. As there are other Senators to speak, and as I understand no one is prepared to go forward to-day, I will directly move an executive session. Before doing that, however, I should like very much if we could agree upon some time, after the reconvening of Congress on the 4th of January, when the vote can be taken. Of course as far as I am concerned I propose that everybody shall have a full opportunity to discuss this measure to the fullest extent, but I should very much like to have some reasonable time fixed, after reconvening, when a vote may be taken.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Minnesota will allow me to suggest to him that the Senate is now too thin for one reason. Another reason is that there are several Senators I know who desire to debate the measure, not at any great length, but we can not tell at what length until the time is reached. For that reason we could not afford now to fix an hour of a day upon which the vote shall be taken; but I think the Senator may rest assured that at some reasonably early day in January an agreement will be reached. When various Senators have had an opportunity to give their views upon the question, we can then reach with absolute certainty an hour of a day upon which we can commence voting upon the measure.

Mr. WASHBURN. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this bill was passed through the other House in June by an overwhelming majority. It is very evident that there is a pronounced majority in this body in favor of it. In my opinion nine-tenths of the people in the country are looking anxiously for the passage of this bill, and ninety-nine one-hundredths of the farmers of the country are praying for it. I feel that an early day should be fixed upon for the final vote; and while I am very much obliged for the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee, I shall feel it my duty when we reconvene to ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the bill continuously until we reach a vote, even though it is done at the expense of long sessions. After six weeks have been occupied in this Chamber in discussng the bill, and when it was so long since passed by the popular branch of Congress, I feel that I should be false to my duty unless I pursued that course after the Senate reconvened.

I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being under the concurrent resolution of the two Houses, until Wednesday, January 4, 1893, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 22, 1892.

The House met at 12 o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. GEORGE H. COREY, of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with the deficiency act of July 28, 1892, a schedule of the claims certified by the accounting officers of the Treasury to be due to the several Pacific railroads; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have an order made to have that printed.

The SPEAKER. It will be ordered printed.

CONTRACTS ENTERED INTO BY THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a statement of contracts entered into by the various bureaus of the War Department during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1892, which, with accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House letters from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with letters of the Chief of Engineers, reports of preliminary examination of Lewis River, Washington, from its mouth to Speliah Creek; Yamhill River, Oregon, and the channel through Sabine Lake, Texas; which were severally referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

BOARD OF REGENTS OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the secretary of the Smithsonian Institution respecting vacancy in the Board of Regents; which was referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

STREETS AND HIGHWAYS IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following Senate concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 30,000 copies of the special consular report relating to streets and highways in foreign countries, heretofore published by the Department of State, of which 10,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 20,000 for the House of Representatives.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. OHLIGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 6737) granting a pension to Delzell R. Bradford, Twenty-fourth Michigan Volunteers; and

A bill (H. R. 9417) to incorporate the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia.

JOSEPH S. HURST.

Mr. HITT, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files the papers in the case of Joseph S. Hurst, filed in the Fifty-first Congress.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2923) for the relief of——

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman from Tennessee withdraw his motion and allow me to offer a bill, which is of some importance, relating to the conduct of passengers on steamships?

Mr. McMILLIN. Does the gentleman desire to introduce it for reference?

Mr. REED. I desire to have the bill passed.

Mr. McMILLIN. The regular order has been demanded, and that stops all requests for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the regular order.

Mr. KILGORE (to Mr. REED). What is the character of the bill?

Mr. REED. It is a bill to allow officers of steamships to have some control of the passengers. It is a bill which has passed the Senate, and is favorably reported by the committee of the House.

Mr. OUTHWAITE (to Mr. KILGORE). To control passengers on steamboat excursions.

Mr. KILGORE. I am willing that the bill shall be read.

Mr. McMILLIN. I withdraw my motion for the present.

The SPEAKER. The matter immediately before the House at the moment the regular order was demanded was the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COBB] for unanimous consent.

Mr. ANTONY. Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is a quorum present, and I shall object.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Immigration asks leave to file a report.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the Committee on Immigration will be permitted to file a report.

There was no objection.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to offer a resolution for reference.

The SPEAKER. That can be filed at the desk.

Mr. STUMP. Have I permission to file the report?

The SPEAKER. Permission has been granted.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BROSIUS. I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. Unless the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee is withdrawn that request can not be submitted.

Mr. BROSIUS. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee to withdraw his motion.

Mr. McMILLIN. The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. KILGORE. I will demand the regular order.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and on a division there were—ayes 42, nays 48.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which is the call of committees for reports.

LIGHT AND FOG SIGNAL, BUTLER FLATS, MASS.

Mr. RANDALL, from the Committtee on Commerce, reported back with a favorable recommendation an act (S. 1632) for the establishment of a light and fog-signal station near Butler Flats, New Bedford, Mass.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SUSPENSION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. STUMP, from the Select Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 9980, a bill (H. R. 9999) for the establishment of a foreign quarantine and suspension of immigration under certain conditions; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on Printing, reported a joint resolution (H. Res. 176) making available the sum of $250,000 appropriated in 1890 and suspended in 1891 to provide accommodation for the Government Printing Office; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call of committees has been completed. The morning hour begins at 15 minutes past 12 o'clock. The call rests with the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, there is evidently no quorum present, and I move that the morning hour be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that there is no quorum here and the regular order has been demanded, so I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly, pursuant to concurrent resolution, adjourned until January 4, 1893, at 12 o'clock m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. PEEL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported the bill (S. 2398) for the relief of Henry W. Lee (Report No. 2194); which was delivered to the Clerk, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. WARREN, from the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a joint resolution (S. R. 129), proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, extending the right of suffrage to women; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. VANCE subsequently said: I ask leave to submit the views of the minority of the Committee on Woman Suffrage on the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution extending the right of suffrage to women, in order that it may be printed with the report of the majority of the committee which was submitted this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The views of the minority will be received and printed with the report of the majority of the committee.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, submitted a report to accompany the bill (S. 2707) granting additional quarantine powers, and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service, heretofore reported by him.

WATER WORKS IN ERIE, PA.

Mr. QUAY. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 9826) granting certain rights and privileges to the commissioners of water works in the city of Erie, Pa. If there is no objection, I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill at this time.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

After reading, the Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

The first amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was, in line 8, after the word "across," to insert "the land belonging to the United States on;" so as to read:

That the commissioners of water works in the city of Erie, in the State of Pennsylvania, be, and they are hereby, granted the right to lay, extend, and maintain their intake pipe from their present pumping station at the foot of Chestnut street, at Erie, Pa., across the Bay of Presque Isle to the peninsula, thence across the land belonging to the United States on the peninsula to the shore of Lake Erie, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 15, after the word "also," to insert "the use of;" in the same line, after the word "land, to insert "belonging to the United States;" and in line 16, after the word "crossing," to strike out the words "and the use of same;" so as to read:

Also the use of such land belonging to the United States as may be required for a road, or roads, to and from the main land to place of crossing; all according to such plans and specifications as may be approved by the Secretary of War, and such plans shall be executed under his direction and supervision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add the following additional section:

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. QUAY, Mr. MORRILL, and Mr. VEST were appointed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 3659) authorizing the appointment of a commission to make a settlement of the claims growing out of the issue of bonds by the United States to aid in the construction of certain railroads and to secure to the United States payment of all indebtedness of certain railroad companies therein mentioned; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee on the President's Message transmitting the Report of the Pacific Railway Commission.

Mr. COKE introduced a bill (S. 3660) for the establishment of a light-house, fog signal, and line lights at or near the mouth of the Brazos River, Texas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 3661) for the relief of the estate of John R. Bigelow; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 3662) to prohibit unlawful military organizations; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee on the Employment of Armed Bodies of Men for Private Purposes.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3663) establishing additional regulations concerning immigration to the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. MCMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 3664) creating form of real-estate deed for the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 3665) for the relief of George R. Burnett; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3666) enlarging the limit for the construction of a post-office building at Allegheny, Pa.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 3667) granting a pension to Willis Clayton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3668) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah Beardsley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3669) granting a pension to Isaac Newman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 3670) granting an increase of pension to Charles A. Lang; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MCMILLAN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 130) to amend an act entitled "An act making Saturday a half holiday for banking and trust companies in the District of Columbia," approved December 22, 1892; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 131) giving the views of Congress on the construction of the swamp land act, approved September 28, 1850; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

USE OF STREETS IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. GORMAN. I introduce a joint resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 128) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant permits for the use of reservations and public spaces in the city of Washington, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to grant permits to the executive committee on inaugural ceremonies for the use of any reservation, or other public space, in the city of Washington, on occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on the 4th day of March, 1893, which in his opinion will inflict no serious or permanent injury upon such reservation or public space; and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may designate for such and other purposes such streets, avenues, and sidewalks in the District as they may deem proper and necessary therefor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOAR. Let the joint resolution be read again.

The joint resolution was again read.

Mr. GORMAN. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that by the appropriation act of 1890 special provision was made that no seats or structures of any kind should be erected upon the streets in this city without the consent of Congress.

Mr. HOAR. I thought when I heard it first read that it was read as a Senate resolution solely, which was the reason for my asking that it be read again. It is all right if it is a joint resolution.

Mr. GORMAN. It is a joint resolution, and is all right.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. QUAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Louis Volchhausen be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, there being no adverse report.

INTRODUCTION OF CHOLERA.

Mr. STEWART. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the joint resolution (S. R. 126) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend all purchases of silver bullion as provided in the act of July 14, 1890. I should like, if I can have unanimous consent, to submit some remarks at this time upon the joint resolution and the amendment I propose.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Nevada will permit me, I desire unanimous consent that an order of the Senate may be made, which I ask to have read.

Mr. STEWART. I will give way to that, if I can have unanimous consent when it is concluded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That on Friday next, after the routine business of the morning hour is transacted, and on Saturday if necessary, bills on the Calendar reported by the Committees on Epidemic Diseases and Immigration having relation to the danger of the introduction of cholera into this country during the present year shall be the special orders and have exclusive consideration on those days, without otherwise displacing the present unfinished business.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I desire unanimous consent to say that the two bills referred to are the last bills on the Calendar. One is a bill for the suspension of immigration for one year, reported from the Committee on Immigration, and the other is a bill reported by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], from the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service. It would seem that if there were any bills here that are entitled to preference these are the bills. They are urgent in their character. They represent two different methods of dealing with apprehended cholera, one the total suspension of immigration for one year and the other increased quarantine powers to the executive branch of the Government. I also understand that the Executive, without additional legislative authority, proposes to issue within a few days regulations concerning quarantine which will have an important bearing upon the subject under discussion.

I am willing that the bill reported by the Senator from Tennessee should be first considered, and to allow the bill providing for suspension of all immigration for one year to remain until after the legislation proposed by that committee shall be considered and disposed of; but I do think—and I appeal to the Senator from Tennessee to make a statement on this subject—that the measures which are to be adopted by the present Congress to prevent, or calculated to prevent, the introduction of cholera into this country during the present year should not be delayed by any business now pending before the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. I quite agree with the Senator from New Hampshire that the questions referred to by him are of the highest importance, and if this Congress is to take action upon those measures at all it is very important that that action should be taken at the earliest day possible.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. President, I recognize the importance of the measures to which the Senator from New Hampshire refers. It is a very disagreeable thing to interpose any objection to the course indicated by him, but the bill now pending as unfinished business is, in my mind, the most important legislation, certainly with the exception of these two measures that we have before the Senate, and to which the country is looking with more anxiety than any proposed enactment.

Could there not be an understanding as to a vote on the pending measure some time next week? I had hoped to reach a vote this week. We have already spent six or eight weeks in discussing the measure. I thought from the intimations of the Senator from Tennessee that possibly this week we might agree on some time to take a vote. If that could be done I should interpose no objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to say to the Senator from Minnesota that I do not think there is any disposition anywhere to defeat a final vote upon the bill he has in charge. I am sure I desire to come to it as early as we conveniently can do so. I do not know how many Senators desire to be heard, but I know there are several, and I think they ought to have an opportunity to be heard. That opportunity can not be furnished this week.

I see no reason, however, in the condition of the business of the Senate, why we may not reasonably hope that at some time in the coming week we may come to a vote upon the bill the Senator from Minnesota has in charge. But whether unanimous consent shall or shall not be given to devote two days to the consideration of the measures referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire, I do not think it would be possible to come to a vote upon the antioption bill during the present week.

Mr. WASHBURN. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if one day will not probably be sufficient, and whether Saturday will not give him sufficient time for the consideration of the measures which he wishes to bring up.

Mr. CHANDLER. That would depend upon the opinion of the Senator from Tennessee rather than upon my opinion. I believe that one day will be sufficient to dispose of the legislation reported from the Committee on Epidemic Diseases. If the bill for the suspension of immigration for one year follows that in consideration it might not be possible to dispose of that bill also the same day. The bills we do not anticipate will take a great while, but they are not bills that either the Senator from Tennessee or myself feel warranted in asking to have disposed of in the morning hour, and we only ask that we may have Friday, and Saturday if necessary, not anticipating that Saturday will be necessary.

The difficulty, as the Senator from Minnesota will see, is that if we consent to take Saturday we are not certain to have so full an attendance in the Senate as ought to be found when a subject of this important character is being considered. I leave the question as to whether we shall have Friday or Saturday to the Senate.

Mr. WASHBURN. Under the circumstances, regarding the importance of the measures, I would very gladly agree to devote Saturday to them, and then if anything should turn up whereby more time should be required a future arrangement can be made. I suggest that the Senator from New Hampshire change the order so as to fix Saturday. To that I have no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the Senator had better give us Friday. If we start on Saturday and the subject is delayed, it may go over until next week, whereas if we start Friday we shall probably get through Friday, and it will not be necessary for the Senate to sit on Saturday, as it is very much disinclined to do.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that if the measures are taken up for consideration and one day shall be found insufficient to dispose of them, I am quite satisfied that the Senate and the Senator himself would concede such additional time as may be necessary to finally dispose of them. So I do not think it very material whether at this moment two days or one day shall be given.

Mr. WASHBURN. Very well. With that statement and with the general disposition there is to consider the question, I shall not interpose any objection so far as I am concerned.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order will be considered as agreed to by unanimous consent.

WILLIAM M'GARRAHAN—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the bill known as the McGarrahan bill is the special order after the routine morning business to-day. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] desires to occupy the floor upon another subject. I ask, in view of the order that has just been taken, that that bill may stand over until next Tuesday with the same right that it has this morning.

Mr. MILLS. I did not understand the statement of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the McGarrahan case may go over until next Tuesday with the same privilege it has this morning, so that the Senator from Nevada may be heard at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That arrangement will be understood as agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. DAWES. I do not see the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] in his seat. I should like to inquire the place on the Calendar of the joint resolution recently introduced by him in reference to a commission to be appointed to negotiate with the five civilized tribes. I understood that it was laid aside temporarily.

Mr. COCKRELL. My colleague [Mr. VEST] was here a moment ago. I will have him here in a minute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution is on the table.

Mr. PLATT. I do not rise to object to the discussion of the McGarrahan claim or to any arrangement which has been made with reference to the immigration and quarantine questions, but simply to say that at some time, and at no very distant time, I shall feel that it is my duty to insist upon the consideration of the agreement made by the Cherokee Commission for the purchase of the Cherokee Outlet. If that is not ratified by the 4th of March it falls to the ground. While I do not give any notice this morning, I feel that the importance of that measure is such that I shall be justified in asking for its early consideration by the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills:

A bill (S. 1786) granting a pension to Mrs. Jennie Gray;

A bill (S. 1831) to admit free of duty the wreckage of the ships Trenton and Vandalia presented by the United States to the King of Samoa;

A bill (S. 3029) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River in the State of Washington; and

A bill (S. 3048) granting to the Blue Mountain Irrigation and Improvement Company a right of way for reservoir and canals through the Umatilla Indian Reservation in the State of Oregon.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2395) granting a pension to D. M. Lang; and

A bill (H. R. 9824) to amend "An act to promote the construction of a safe deep-water harbor on the coast of Texas," approved February 9, 1891.

COINAGE OF SILVER.

Mr. STEWART. If there is no objection, I will now proceed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. HARRIS. I did not hear what the request was.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to make some remarks on the silver question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from Nevada will proceed.

Mr. STEWART. I submit an amendment to Senate joint resolution 126, and ask that the joint resolution and the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (S. R. 126) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend all purchases of silver bullion as provided in the act of July 14, 1890.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to suspend, until otherwise ordered by Congress, all purchases of silver bullion as provided in the first section of the act of July 14, 1890, entitled "An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Nevada will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the joint resolution the following sections:

SEC. 2. That the silver coins of the United States shall be composed of standard silver. That of the silver coins the dollar shall be of the weight of 412½ grains, the half dollar of the weight of 206¼ grains, the quarter dollar of the weight of 103⅛ grains, and the dime or tenth part of a dollar of the weight of 41¼ grains. And that dollars, half dollars, quarter dollars, and dimes shall be legal tenders of payment, according to their nominal value, for any sum whatever.

SEC. 3. That silver bullion brought to any mint of the United States for coinage shall be received and coined by the proper officers for the benefit of the depositor: Provided, That it shall be lawful to refuse at the mint any deposit of less value than $100, and any bullion so base as to be unsuitable for the operations of the mint. And all silver bullion belonging to the United States shall be coined as rapidly as possible without delaying coinage.

SEC. 4. That the depositor of silver bullion at any mint of the United States for coinage shall receive therefor silver coin or Treasury notes of the United States, to be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury in such form and of such denominations, not less than $1 nor more than $1,000, as he may prescribe. The Treasury notes issued according to the provisions of this act shall be redeemable on demand at the Treasury of the United States, or at the office of any assistant treasurer of the United States, in either gold or silver coin, at the option of the United States; and such Treasury notes shall be a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the repeal of the act of July 14, 1890, providing for the purchase of four and a half million ounces of silver bullion per month, and the issue of legal-tender Treasury notes thereon without substituting free coinage would be disastrous. To make the evils of such legislation understood it is necessary to review some of the facts relating to the production and use of gold and silver as money.

THE GOLD FIELDS OF CALIFORNIA AND AUSTRALIA.

The great gold fields of California and Australia were extraordinary. No similar discoveries had been made since the placer mines of Spain and Italy were exhausted, more than eighteen hundred years ago. No other similar gold fields are likely to be found. Gold placers are easily discovered because they furnish abundant evidence of their existence in the gravel and sand of the beds of the streams which drain the country where the mines are located. The world has been sufficiently explored to remove all reasonable probability of another California or Australia, unless it be found in the interior of Africa where the daring prospector has been unable to explore. The placers of California and Australia are about exhausted; and the world must hereafter obtain its supply of gold from silver mines where that metal is found in combination with silver; in the gleanings of the old placers fields, and in the few vein mines containing gold.

FULLY HALF THE SUPPLY OF GOLD DERIVED FROM SILVER MINES.

It is estimated that in ordinary times, and in the absence of such gold placers as were found in California and Australia, fully one-half of the supply of gold is derived from the silver mines. If silver mining were not prosecuted, the supply of gold would be reduced fully one-half. The attempt to maintain a gold metallic basis is about as revolutionary as the issuance of the French assignats and other unlimited issues of paper money. Gold never was and never can be used by the great mass of the people as money. Its quantity is too limited. Its function has been and must be to supplement silver for reserves in banks and moneyed institutions; not to be used as a general circulating medium.

RATIO OF PRODUCTION OF GOLD AND SILVER.

What would have been the condition of the civilized world for the 350 years preceding 1850 if gold had been the only money metal? During that period more than 32 ounces of silver were produced from the mines of the world for every ounce of gold. If the coinage ratio had followed the ratio of production, it would have required 32 ounces of silver to be equal in value to an ounce of gold. But the coinage ratio in Europe at no time exceeded 15½ ounces of silver to one ounce of gold.

UTTER DEMONETIZATION OF SILVER WOULD STOP SILVER MINING.

As before stated, the weight of silver produced during the period mentioned was more than thirty-two times greater than the weight of gold, and more than double the value of the gold produced. Assuming that one-half of this gold came from silver mines, the rejection of silver, which would have closed all silver mines, would have cut off half of the supply of gold. But if the output of gold was only one-half of the value of the product of silver, or one-third the aggregate of gold and silver, the demonetization of silver, which would have stopped silver mining, would have cut off half the supply of gold, and the gold produced during the period named would have been but one-sixth of the aggregate of the gold and silver which was actually extracted from the mines.

CIVILIZATION DEPENDENT UPON PRODUCTION OF PRECIOUS METALS.

Could modern civilization have been achieved if the production of the precious metals had been reduced five-sixths? Would it have been possible to distribute so small an amount of gold among the masses of the people, or would the gold have been confined to the rich and the great mass of people deprived of money?

PROSPECT FOR THE FUTURE UNDER GOLD STANDARD.

If the gold standard would have been disastrous in the past, what is the prospect for the future? The gold fields are about exhausted and the relative production of the two metals will soon assume their normal proportions. There will be at least two dollars of silver produced to one dollar of gold on the ratio of 16 to 1. The last report of the Director of the Mint shows how rapidly we are approaching former conditions which were interrupted by the gold from California and Australia.

A NEW ERA IN SILVER MINING.

For several years after 1850 the value of the product of gold was many times the value of the output of silver. But the discovery of the Comstock inaugurated a new era in silver mining; since which time the product of silver has increased, and the output of gold from all sources, except from the silver mines, has rapidly declined. In 1891, according to the report of the Director of the Mint (which probably exaggerates the products of both metals about equally), the coinage value of the annual product of silver in the world was $173,000,000, while the coinage value of the output of gold was only $125,000,000. If the silver mines had not been worked, no gold would have been produced from them, and the output of gold would not have exceeded $60,000,000. What would be the effect of such a meager supply of gold?

PRODUCT OF GOLD CONSUMED FOR NONMONETARY PURPOSES.

The entire annual product of gold from the mines has been consumed in the last nineteen years for nonmonetary purposes. The stock of gold coin which existed nineteen years ago has not been materially increased. The demand for gold in the arts is increasing with great rapidity. Dentistry, photography, gilding, ornamentation, jewelry, and numerous other demands absorb the entire output of the mines. If silver were entirely discarded and its money value destroyed, silver mining would cease. Under such circumstances there would not be gold enough to supply the arts, and the existing gold coin would be rapidly absorbed for nonmonetary purposes.

METALLIC BASIS ONLY HALF WHAT IT WAS NINETEEN YEARS AGO.

At the time of the unfortunate legislation which excluded silver from the mints of the United States and Europe, it is estimated by statisticians that there were $7,500,000,000 of gold and silver coin in the world. In the language of the Royal Commission of England, all this coin constituted one money and formed a basis for paper circulation and credit. It was all good metallic money for every purpose, including reserves of banks and other monetary institutions. When silver was excluded from the mint and the money market for that metal destroyed, silver bullion declined in price as compared with gold.

THE BASIS OF CIRCULATION AND CREDIT.

The civilized world then discarded silver coin as money of ultimate payment or redemption. In other words, the credit and business of the world nineteen years ago rested on $7,500,000,000 of metallic money as a basis, but to-day, on account of the demonetization of silver, there is only half that amount, namely, $3,700,000,000, to sustain a volume of credit which has greatly extended and a volume of business which has enormously increased. The result is that the financial superstructure of the civilized world is tottering on its base and every financial institution in Europe and America is making desperate efforts to curtail credit, increase its reserves, and maintain solvency.

INSUFFICIENT QUANTITY OF GOLD FOR MONETARY PURPOSES.

How long can this condition of things continue without universal bankruptcy? The advocates of gold tell us they are aware of the fact that there is not gold enough for use as money. This is admitted on all hands, but they suggest no remedy. Some of them are willing to use a limited amount of silver redeemable in gold. Why use a limited amount of silver? If the amount of silver to be used is to be limited by law, and not by the quantity obtainable, why use silver at all? The only indispensable office which either gold or silver performs is limitation of quantity. If silver is denied that function, and legislation must limit the quantity, silver is only credit money depending upon redemption in gold for its value; and as credit money it is more expensive and not as convenient as paper. The only way the metallic basis can be enlarged is to use all the silver as well as all the gold for money which the people will take to the mint for coinage. Such has been the practice of all the ages; such is the duty of Congress under the Constitution of the United States.

EQUAL COINAGE RIGHTS FOR GOLD AND SILVER PREVIOUS TO 1873.

From prehistoric times until the passage of the mint act of 1873, the owner of silver bullion could take it to the mint and have it stamped or coined into money. The denial of this privilege to the owner of silver bullion by legislation in which the people had no voice, if persisted in, will be more destructive to civilization than all the calamities of war and pestilence which have inflicted mankind since the Dark Ages.

EXCLUSION OF SILVER FROM THE MINT DESTROYS ITS MARKET.

The most unreasonable argument used by the defenders of the act of 1873, demonetizing silver, is the suggestion that the silver in the silver dollar is not worth a dollar in gold. While 412½ grains of standard silver, which constitute a dollar, could be taken to the mint and coined, such quantity of silver was always worth as much as the 25.8 grains of standard gold which are contained in the gold dollar. It was the exclusion of silver from the mint which destroyed its market, impaired its value, and enhanced the value of gold.

The inconsistency of the men who passed or who defend the act of 1873 in using the results of that great wrong as a reason why the price of silver should not be restored by correcting the wrong which depreciated its price is insulting. The restoration of the market which was destroyed by excluding silver from the mint and the unlimited demand to be created by free coinage must restore the value of silver and place silver bullion on a par with gold bullion at the ratio of 16 to 1. If the market for gold had been destroyed by denying it the sovereign privilege of coinage, it would have declined in value and silver would have advanced equally with the advance which has taken place with regard to gold.

NOT TOO MUCH SILVER PRODUCED.

But it is argued that there is too much silver produced and that it must be discarded as money in consequence of its great quantity. If that be so, gold must be discarded on account of its small quantity. The output of silver has not at any time equaled the yield of gold forty years ago. But the product of silver, according to the experience of mankind, can be double the product of gold without disturbing their relative value. Twelve hundred million people use silver as money, and less than one hundred million ever used gold in actual circulation.

AN ATTEMPT MADE TO DEMONETIZE GOLD.

The change in the relative production of the two metals produced by California and Australia alarmed the money lenders. In 1852 the output of gold reached nearly $200,000,000. The contractionists contended that the yield of gold was so great that it ought not to be used as money. A vigorous effort was made to stop the coinage of gold. Germany, Austria, and Holland actually demonetized gold. If they had succeeded the disaster would have been great; but the injury would have been much less than the evils of demonetizing silver. Excessive production of silver can not be urged as an excuse for its demonetization. In 1873 there were only $81,000,000 of that metal produced. The increase of the combined product of the two metals since 1852 to the present time has been very gradual. Their coin value forty years ago was more than $200,000,000.

The rapid increase from 1848 to 1852 was a great blessing and harmed no one. The combined annual product of the two metals during that period rose from about $40,000,000 to over $200,000,000, and injured nobody. On the contrary, the business and prosperity of the world were enormously advanced and promoted by it. The increase of the annual products of the two metals combined during the last forty years has not reached $100,000,000. The coinage value of the gold and silver produced in 1891 was less than $300,000,000. If an increase of $160,000,000 in four years was beneficial, an increase of $100,000,000 in forty years could not be injurious. Such increase is not equal to the increase of population and business. It does not keep pace with the increased demand in the arts. The fear of overproduction of silver was not the cause of the legislation of 1873. The motive was to reduce the supply of money and enhance its value. There is no danger of too much of either gold or silver, or of both combined. No country in any age has had too much of the precious metals.

USELESSNESS OF UNITED STATES TO SEEK EUROPEAN COÖPERATION.

It is urged that the United States can not remonetize silver alone; that we must obtain the consent of Europe before we can legislate for the interests of our own people. We sent delegates to Europe to obtain permission from the gold kings to legislate for the United States. Our delegates have failed to obtain that permission. Why should the gold trust of Europe surrender to us the right to manage our own affairs as long as we will submit to be ruled by a foreign gold syndicate? Why have not the gold kings of the Old World the right to dictate what Congress and the Administration shall do so long as we will obey?

THE UNITED STATES CAN ABSORB ALL SILVER SHE CAN PROCURE.

Why can we not use all the silver we can procure? The entire product of silver is annually absorbed in the arts and for coinage. If the mints of the United States were open the balance of the world must take less silver than they now do, or we would obtain no more than 54,000,000 ounces per annum, which we now purchase under the act of 1890. Other countries would have to take much less than they now absorb before the United States could get sufficient for our purposes. But would they use less? Would they be less inclined to coin and use silver as money if silver were advanced by free coinage in this country to par with gold? The very fact that silver would be advanced in price by free coinage would create new demands for silver, because it is human nature to desire any commodity which is advancing in price.

NO DANGER OF A FLOOD OF SILVER.

It is contended that the free coinage of silver would make the United States the dumping ground for the coined silver of Europe. Would that be possible? Europe has only $1,100,000,000 of coined legal-tender silver. The silver money of Europe circulates on a par with gold at the ratio of 15½ to 1, which is at the rate of $1.33 an ounce. For what purpose would Europe send her coined silver here? If it were brought to our mint it would be coined into dollars at the ratio of 16 to 1, or $1.29 an ounce, a loss of over 3 per cent. After it was so coined it could not be taken back to Europe and used as money there. It would be only bullion and would be worth less than its original value in coin.

SILVER WOULD NOT DECLINE IN PRICE UNDER FREE COINAGE.

The advocates of gold assert that in case of free coinage the silver dollar would decline in value to the present bullion price of silver, say 83 or 84 cents an ounce. At the same time they tell us that the people of Europe would bring silver coin to the United States which is worth in Europe about $1.33 an ounce to be coined into our dollars which would be worth only 83 or 84 cents an ounce. Such arguments may deceive the unthinking, but they can not be made in good faith by intelligent men.

FREE COINAGE WILL NOT DRIVE GOLD OUT OF THE COUNTRY.

It is contended that free coinage would drive all the gold out of the country. This argument is stale. It is used on all occasions when an effort is made to right the wrong of 1873 and restore silver to its place as money. The fact that all such predictions have been contradicted by experience counts for nothing. There are three times as much gold in the country as there was when the Bland act was passed. A moment's reflection ought to satisfy every intelligent man that gold will not go until there is enough of some other kind of money to occupy its place. If there should be a deficiency of money in the United States as compared with Europe, prices would fall here below the European level and money would flow back. Property could be bought cheaper in the United States under such circumstances than elsewhere, and gold will always go where it will buy the most property.

If the United States could obtain silver enough for business purposes in this country, we could spare a portion of our gold to relieve the necessities of Europe. Who would be injured by such a transaction? Certainly not this country, because we would have plenty of money to sustain prices and stimulate production. Europe is the market for our surplus farm products. If money were plentier in Europe, prices would rise there and our farmers would receive more gold for their wheat and cotton. Would they be injured by plenty of money at home to aid production, and plenty of gold abroad to secure good prices for their surplus products?

NO DISASTER TO BE FEARED FROM PREMIUM ON GOLD.

But the contractionists predict that free coinage will advance gold to a premium, and assume that ruin would be the consequence. Gold rose to a premium during the war. Were the producing classes ruined? Gold is at a premium to-day in Mexico over the currency of that country, which is silver. Is Mexico suffering on that account? On the contrary, has she not been able, against all predictions and expectations, to pay her vast railroad subsidies without default, and did she not a few months ago borrow three millions in Europe without the slightest difficulty? Is not her credit better to-day than it ever was? Mexico has become a manufacturing country. She is doing her own work and using her own money. Cotton mills are being erected, vast reduction works for treating the gold and silver ores of the country are being established by our own citizens, because enterprises can be prosecuted to a better advantage in a country where money is plentiful. What is the cause of this unusual prosperity of Mexico if it is not free coinage of silver?

INDIA BENEFITED BY THE SILVER STANDARD.

Has India been ruined by the silver standard? The Royal Commission which investigated that matter decided that cheap silver had benefited India. While silver was at par with gold India depended upon England for manufactures, and was unable to export either wheat or manufactured textile fabrics in any considerable quantities. She now manufactures textile fabrics extensively for home consumption, and she exported during the year ending March 31, 1892, $50,000,000 in value of textile fabrics of her own manufacture, and $53,000,000 in value of raw cotton. She also exported during the same year 56,566,400 bushels of wheat. If there is any suffering in India in consequence of the low price of silver, it is certainly not among the producing classes of that country.

The persons who are most affected by cheap silver are Englishmen employed in India who are paid in silver and compelled to suffer a discount of 35 or 40 per cent in transmitting their savings to England. Indian credit is benefited in one way and injured in another by cheap silver. India owes a very large foreign debt payable in gold. Her revenues are collected in silver, and she is compelled to suffer the discount in buying gold to pay the interest on that debt. It was argued that such discount was disastrous.

THE PERSONS BENEFITED BY CHEAP SILVER.

But others contended before the Royal Commission that it was easier for India to raise the required revenue with silver at a discount than it was before the price of silver depreciated, and that the increased obligation of the foreign debt created by the advance of gold was more than compensated for by the increased production caused by plenty of money. The bondholders are not the only persons benefited by cheap silver for India. Operators who buy silver in the United States at the market price and exchange it at par in India for wheat, cotton, and other farm products make enormous profits. One of the principal arguments of Englishmen against the restoration of silver is that cheap silver liberates them from paying tribute to the United States and enables them to procure cheap food and cheap raw material from India.

The great advantage which India obtains over the United States in supplying Europe with wheat and cotton is illustrated by the fact that for many years the average price of a bushel of wheat in the Liverpool market has been an ounce of silver. The Indian farmer exchanges his bushel of wheat for an ounce of silver in that market and coins his ounce of silver into $1.37 in India. This is because the ratio of silver to gold in the Indian coinage is 15 to 1, which is about $1.37 an ounce. The American farmer obtains his ounce of silver in the same market for his bushel of wheat, and is compelled to sell it for 83 or 84 cents, according to the fluctuations in the market. Competition with India, under such circumstances, in supplying Europe with wheat is disastrous. The same is true of cotton and all other farm products.

FINANCIAL CONDITION OF THE UNITED STATES UNSATISFACTORY.

It is admitted that the financial condition of this country since the failure of the Barings has been unsatisfactory. The anxiety and dismay with which our people look upon the outflow of gold shows the dangerous condition of the money market. The advocates of gold suggest no remedy for the deficiency of gold, but continue to insist that nothing but gold shall form the basis of circulation and credit. We submit that free coinage is the only possible remedy for continued contraction, that the basis of circulation and credit can only be enlarged by the unlimited use of silver as money. Any limitation upon the use of silver as money destroys its essential function as a money metal. Silver itself must be the limitation, or silver has no place in our system of finance, because, if the quantity must be limited by legislation, such limitation can be applied to paper or some other substitute more convenient and cheaper than silver.

Will the advocates of gold consent that the admitted deficiency of gold shall be supplied by any means whatever? If so, what shall take the place of silver to supplement gold? Gold must flow out, because every moneyed institution in Europe is struggling to increase its reserves in gold. The money kings are constantly forcing new customers into the market to compete for gold. Austria has recently been compelled to discard her silver and buy gold to form a new and narrower basis for her circulation. She must have gold at any cost. A large part of it we must furnish. The resources of every country in Europe are heavily mortgaged for the gold they have acquired.

DISADVANTAGE OF UNITED STATES IN COMPETING FOR GOLD.

But Europe has an enormous advantage of the United States in the competition for gold. Europe holds stocks and bonds of the United States amounting, it is estimated, to $5,000,000,000. If Europe is forced to the wall by an effort on our part to buy gold, she must sell her stocks and bonds and other United States securities for what they will bring and buy the gold back as fast as we take it from her. We are the debtor nation, and before we have paid $5,000,000,000 in gold to Europe our resources will be seriously impaired. If we obtain European gold, we must pay a higher price for it than can be obtained elsewhere, which means that we must sell our wheat and cotton and all other commodities which we have to sell cheaper than they can be bought in either Europe or Asia.

In other words, we must bid higher for gold than Europe or we can not obtain it, and when we have offered a higher price for gold than Europe can afford to give, we are still in her power because we are her debtor and she can call the gold back by selling our securities. Such a contest for gold means continued falling prices, stagnation, and hard times. It means that the property and hard earnings of the masses must be transferred to the gold kings. It means tenant farmers and feudal lords. It means an approach toward the Dark Ages and feudalism.

FREE COINAGE WOULD SECURE FINANCIAL INDEPENDENCE.

It is the manifest duty of Congress to open the mints to the free and unlimited coinage of silver; to use the better metal—silver—and terminate this competition for gold. Such legislation would make this country financially independent. It would remove all fear of losing gold or being deprived of money with which to transact business. Europe would then recognize our advantage and remonetize silver. But whatever she might do our currency would be on a solid metallic basis. We would be using the better metal; the metal which has been the conservative regulator of the volume of money since civilization began; the metal which is not accidental, but which is procured by an established industry and is obtained in uniform quantities; the metal which has been used through all time by the great mass of the people; the only metal which has been in general circulation among the people at large; the metal which our own country produces. Such a policy would free us from all apprehension of panic or scarcity of money. Europe could no longer embarrass our finances or rob us of our circulating medium.

REMONETIZATION OF SILVER SAFE AND CONSERVATIVE.

The remonetization of silver is safe and conservative. The struggle to gain possession of the shrinking supply of gold has already produced disaster and must end in ruin. The Rothschilds and their associates in Europe and their followers in the United States use the press of both hemispheres to disparage and defame silver miners. They divert attention from the act by which silver was demonetized by asserting that free coinage is solely for the benefit of silver miners, and is urged by the silver miners to secure from the Government more for silver than its market price. The suggestion is unfair. The silver miners do not ask the Government to buy silver. They are opposed to the purchase of silver by the United States, but they demand the right, secured by custom from prehistoric times and guaranteed in the Constitution, to have their silver coined into money for the use of the people.

THE MANIPULATIONS OF THE GOLD KINGS.

The hue and cry against silver miners is the old trick of "stop thief!" The men who originated this clamor have already doubled the value of their property—money—and reduced the price of all other property fully 50 per cent. Nothing is said in the commercial press against the manipulations of the gold kings who have deprived the people of half of their coin and two-thirds of the future supply of money metal. No one would complain of the vast fortunes accumulated by the absorbers of wealth and the parasites of society if they obtained it honestly and by fair dealing, and not by controlling legislation. Silver mining was regarded as an honorable and useful industry until it interfered with the purpose of the gold monopoly. Now all who are engaged in that industry are slandered and abused by the united voice of the gold press of Europe and the United States.

BENEFITS OF SILVER MINING NOT CONFINED TO MINE OWNERS ALONE.

The agents of the gold monopoly tell us that the industry of silver mining benefits no one but the silver mine owner. They even contend that it is an unworthy and dishonest pursuit. By the demonetization of silver the value of gold has been enhanced more than 50 per cent, and the miners of gold have been largely benefited by the increased value of their product. Why not revile the gold miners for the gains they have made? The statesman who would contend that agriculture was beneficial only to the farmers would be listened to with impatience; or if he should contend that manufactures were injurious to all except those engaged in the industry the protectionist would revile him. A cause which can only be maintained by abusing honest men engaged in a great industry must fail.

THE ACT OF 1873 AN ACT OF CONFISCATION.

The motive of this wholesale abuse of silver miners is plain The wrongdoer hates the man he has injured, because his victim reminds him of his wickedness. The men who abuse the miners have robbed them. The act of 1873 was an act of confiscation. The miners explored the mountains and deserts of the continent and developed silver mines, which, if worked and the product used as money, would have continued the prosperity inaugurated by the great discoveries of California and Australia. It is not the fault of silver miners that the world is trembling upon the brink of bankruptcy and the masses of the people are suffering from dear money, stagnation, and hard times, because the mines which they developed were amply sufficient to supply the world with metallic money; but it was the act of 1873, passed and defended by the men who are now defaming the miners of the West, which has caused universal distress in a time of profound peace and abundant harvests.

SILVER HAS THE CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT OF COINAGE.

The miners who explored the mountain ranges from Patagonia to Alaska had a right to believe that silver would always be used as money. Such had been the custom from prehistoric times; such was the mandate of the Constitution. The discovery and development of silver mines entitled their owners to protection from the manipulation of foreign syndicates or domestic money changers. The financial revolution inaugurated by the demonetization of silver violated every principle of justice and honor. It doubled the obligation of every contract. It robbed the people of money and destroyed the property of the pioneers of the West who had furnished a metallic basis for the credit of the United States which made it possible to preserve the Union.

DISHONESTY OF THE DEMONETIZATION OF SILVER.

The manipulators who destroyed the basis of credit founded upon gold and silver, and changed the obligation of every contract from an agreement to pay in either gold or silver to an undertaking to pay in gold alone, forfeited every right of protection of law or government. Their hypocritical cant about honest money disgusts the people. Was it honest to double the value of money by legislation? Was it honest to change all existing contracts? Was it honest to deprive the world of the rich heritage of precious metals which the pioneers of the West had discovered? Was it honest to substitute falling prices and hard times for progress and prosperity? Is it honest to continue such wrongs? Is a dollar honest which is worth twice as much as the debtor agreed to pay?

THE ALLEGED SIXTY-CENT DOLLAR.

What right have the men who reduced the price of silver, by excluding it from the mint and destroying its time-honored market, to sneer at the sixty-cent dollar and take advantage of their own wrong to prevent the restoration of silver to its proud place as money of equal value with gold? What is more unreasonable than the bold assertion that free coinage will not restore silver to par with gold, when previous to its demonetization silver never fell below par in gold during all the ages? Silver was par so long as its sovereign privilege of coinage was acknowledged. Why will not the par be restored when the privilege shall have been again accorded to silver, the better of the precious metals?

FREE COINAGE WILL MAINTAIN PARITY BETWEEN GOLD AND SILVER.

Like causes produce like effects. In the past free coinage maintained the parity between gold and silver. Why will it not in the future? Right the wrong of 1873. Nothing short of that will satisfy the people. Assertions and predictions of interested parties are unsatisfactory evidence against the experience of ages. The advocates of free coinage have long predicted the baneful results of the demonetization of silver. They have warned the gold kings that there was not gold enough for use as money. The gold produced in the last nineteen years, as before stated, has been absorbed in the arts and for other nonmonetary purposes.

REPEAL OF ACT OF 1890 WITHOUT A SUBSTITUTE DISASTROUS.

The repeal of the act of 1890 without a substitute will soon stop or so cripple silver mining as greatly to reduce the supply of gold which comes from silver mines. The arts will then make rapid inroads upon the stock of coined gold, and if the gold standard is maintained gold will advance with such rapidity as to destroy the producers of wealth. The obligations now in existence, if they must be paid in gold under such conditions, are sufficient to absorb all the property of the civilized world.

WHEAT AND COTTON CORRESPOND WITH PRICE OF SILVER.

An investigation of the question of the average price of commodities for the last twenty years will show that the price of wheat, cotton, and all other farm products have responded to and corresponded with the price of silver. Silver has not depreciated in value as compared with commodities. It is gold which has enhanced in value, because the supply is insufficient, because the demand for it as money is far in excess of the supply, and because there is not enough gold to sustain the credit and business of the world. The deficiency of gold is made painfully manifest by the struggles of every great financial institution in the civilized world to obtain gold to save itself from bankruptcy.

FREE COINAGE A NECESSITY FOR BETTER TIMES.

The demonetization of silver has already enhanced the price of gold as compared with commodities fully 40 per cent, and the work of contraction is but just begun. The price of commodities must decline so long as the gold standard is maintained. If it is desirable that the farmer should obtain a better price for his products; if it is desirable that he should be able to relieve himself from mortgages which have been doubled by legislation since they were executed; if it is desirable that there should be independent real-estate owners cultivating the soil; if it is desirable that our farmers should not be converted into tenants of the gold kings; if it is desirable that the productive energies of the country should be developed; if it is desirable that civilization should be maintained for all the people and its benefits not confined to the hoarders of gold alone, then silver must be remonetized, and no fair-minded man ought to complain if such restoration should repair a part of the loss which has already been sustained by silver miners.

THE ENORMOUS LOSS TO SILVER MINERS BY DEMONETIZATION.

The miners of the United States alone have already been robbed of more than $100,000,000 in discount in consequence of the act of 1873. Not only this, but the value of their mines has been destroyed. Poverty and misery prevail in large sections of our country where prosperity was at its greatest height when the secret and clandestine blow was struck which deprived the world of the best of its money metals. It is not possible to recompense those who have been ruined by the loss of fortunes in the confiscation of their property, but it may be possible to relieve silver mining from the odious discrimination against that industry and assist those who have not been absolutely destroyed in prosecuting a most necessary and useful employment.

FREE COINAGE WOULD FURNISH ABUNDANCE OF MONEY.

The prosperity of silver miners would be more beneficial to the people at large than the success of any other industry, because it would insure to all an abundance of metallic money. It was gold and silver mining which laid the foundation of the great States west of the Missouri. It was the pioneers engaged in mining who made it possible to found the empire of the West. The miners are a brave, generous, honest, and enterprising people. They are citizens of the United States, and it seems hard that they should be destroyed to satisfy the greed of a combination organized to enhance the value of money at the expense of the masses of the people.

GOLD TRUST CONSTANTLY DISPARAGING SILVER.

The gold men demand the repeal of the act of 1890 and the utter destruction of the market for silver in Europe and America. If this can be done, silver bullion will fall very low, perhaps to 40 or 50 cents an ounce, and the silver miners will be ruined. The gold kings will then urge the great difference between the prices of gold and silver bullion as a reason for continuing the use of gold alone. They will maintain that silver is no more useful for money than iron, lead, or any other metal. Every decline in the price of silver has been used as an argument against its remonetization. The repeal of the act of 1890 is demanded to strengthen the hands of the gold kings and destroy the advocates of honest money.

The advocates of gold are willing at any time and at all times to do anything to disparage silver, and the repeal of the act of 1890, without substituting something better, would be the last and final blow which would bring disaster. If the gold kings can repeal the act of 1890 and close the silver mines, the farmers and producers will be at their mercy. In that event the gold now obtained from the silver mines would be cut off; the volume of gold coin would diminish year by year; the monopoly of the gold combination would be complete, and the will of the gold kings would be the law of the civilized world. Nothing could wrest their power from them but revolution. Let them take warning. The reëstablishment of the feudal system in this country can not be effected without revolution. In that revolution the gold kings may be dethroned.

THE FREE COINAGE OF SILVER THE PEOPLE'S CAUSE.

The free coinage of silver is the people's cause. The unrest and discontent now universal is the distant thunder before the storm. The people know that prices are falling, that the value of money is advancing, that business is stagnant, and that vicious legislation is the cause. Politicians may deceive them for a time. They may tell them that it is tariff schedules, civil-service reform, prohibition, or any other reason they can invent and divert them from the real cause of their troubles. This deception can not last. The people will discover that want of money resulting from gold contraction is the cause. Discontent is on the increase, and will continue so until it ripens into revolt against the tyrants whose cunning in financial legislation has usurped the civil and political power of the Government.

CUNNING AND FORCE.

Cunning is no more justifiable than force. Cunning is always the aggressor. Cunning enslaves; force liberates. Cunning absorbs wealth; force destroys the accumulation of cunning. The contest between cunning and force is perpetual and universal. The French Revolution is a conspicuous example of the results of this contest. Cunning transferred the wealth of the masses to the church and the nobles. Force tore down the Bastile erected to protect cunning and either destroyed or divided all accumulated wealth. While cunning absorbs wealth the end justifies the means; but after force has destroyed the acquisitions of cunning and liberated the people, impartial history explains the necessity of force and approves its use.

JUSTICE STANDS BETWEEN CUNNING AND FORCE.

Cunning is now victorious. By the act of 1873 cunning is transferring the wealth of the civilized world to a gold monopoly. Justice stands between cunning and force. Justice rebukes cunning and avoids force. The people are appealing to justice to right the wrong of 1873. If justice is deaf or powerless to enforce the right, history will repeat itself. The ownership of property must be general to be enduring. Large accumulations in the hands of the few are dangerous. Such accumulations acquired by cunning are condemned by reason and justice. Cunning relies on law and mocks justice. When law becomes powerless, force destroys or divides. Let the kings of avarice take warning in time, and let the voice of justice be heard before it is too late.

PROMISES OF THE REPUBLICAN AND THE DEMOCRATIC PARTIES.

In 1884 the Republican party was defeated because of hard times. The Democratic party promised free coinage of silver and financial relief, but that party failed to redeem its promises. The administration of President Cleveland maintained the corner on gold for the benefit of fixed capital. The convention which renominated Mr. Cleveland in 1888 made no mention of silver. The Republican party promised relief, and promised to use silver as money, and condemned the Democratic administration for its efforts to demonetize silver; but the Republican party failed to redeem its promises and adhered to the policy of the Democratic party which it condemned.

HARD TIMES CREATE DISCONTENT AND DISSATISFACTION.

Discontent increased. Hard times made the people restless and dissatisfied. The gold kings nominated both candidates for the Presidency and furnished them the same platform on the money question. The Democratic party promised relief by tariff reform. The Republican party promised nothing but adherence to existing conditions both as to tariff and money. The people rebelled against such existing conditions. They decided that no change could be for the worse, and that any change might be for the better. Some in their apathy and disgust remained away from the polls; others, and a sufficient number, voted for a change, and the Republican party was defeated.

The people put in a protest under the name of the Populist party. The Populist party was without position, without organization, without money, but by way of protest and without hope of success polled more than a million votes. The Democratic party has a lease of power limited to four years unless it mends its ways. If it maintains the corner on gold and does the bidding of the gold kings, the day of reckoning is at hand. The next election will bring another change, more radical and more decided than any that has taken place since the war.

THE OLD PARTIES HAVE JOINED HANDS ON FINANCIAL QUESTIONS.

The strongest evidence of the necessity of a new party consists in the fact that the two old parties in their conventions have joined hands on the financial question and have agreed to sustain the act of 1873. The same plank on the money question in both platforms is irritating to the people. This system of tactics is not new. The experiment was tried by the Whigs and Democrats in antebellum days. Examine the platforms of those parties from 1848 to 1860, and you will find that the Whigs and Democrats took common ground on the slavery question. They tried by that means to prevent agitation and to prevent the people voting on the question of the extension of slavery. But the effort to prevent agitation created agitation and brought into existence the Republican party, which overthrew both the old parties, abolished slavery, and cemented the Union on the basis of equal rights before the law without regard to race or color.

HISTORY OF THE GREAT POLITICAL PARTIES.

The Republican party started as a party of the people. It came into power without money and without corruption. It came into power because the people ordained it. Its record will always be the most conspicuous page in the history of the United States. But its leaders have surrendered it to the kings of avarice. The power conferred upon that great party by the people has been turned against the people. The Republican party is out of touch with the masses on the money question. The Democratic party, which has at times been near the people, is also trembling before the majesty of money kings.

The shadow of Lombard and Wall streets hangs as a cloud over the deliberations of the Democracy. Although nine-tenths of the voters of that great party are in favor of the free coinage of silver and the liberation of the masses, yet it is feared that the next administration may serve only the gold combination. I sincerely hope that such fear is without foundation, and that the operation of the Treasury Department may be under the influence of the great mass of the party.

GRAND OPPORTUNITY OF THE DEMOCRACY.

Foreign influence in our financial affairs is hateful to the people of the United States, and they will repudiate it. No party in the history of this country ever had such an opportunity as is now enjoyed by the Democracy. If the Democratic party will break the corner on gold, give back to the people the money of the Constitution, and restore prosperity to the masses, its lease of power will be indefinite. The pledge in its platform to do the work of the gold kings was obtained by strategy and is not binding upon the representatives of the people. Unless Congress repudiates the pledge to which the people were not a party, but which was secured by manipulating a convention, the lease of power which was obtained on account of the discontent of the people will be abruptly terminated.

THE CALL OF THE PEOPLE.

If neither of the old parties will respond when the people call, a new party, a party of the people, will come into power and take charge of the Government. Free local elections still exist. The will of the people can not be resisted so long as the ballot is free and local self-government remains. The gold kings, who now seem omnipotent, will be dethroned. They have passed the limits which the people can endure. Their rule must be ended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the Chair). What action does the Senator from Nevada desire to be taken upon his proposed amendment?

Mr. STEWART. I ask that it be printed and lie on the table with the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER That order will be entered.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 2395) granting a pension to D. M. Lang, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 9824) to amend "An act to promote the construction of a safe deep-water harbor on the coast of Texas," approved February 9, 1891, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

COMPENSATION OF UNITED STATES MARSHALS AND DEPUTIES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not fully understand what the order of the Senate was in relation to what is known as the McGarrahan claim, but supposes that the Calendar is now in order. The Secretary will report the first case on the Calendar under Rule VIII.

The bill (S. 419) fixing compensation of United States marshals and deputies, and for other purposes, was announced as first in order on the Calendar.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that that bill be laid aside without losing its place upon the Calendar, as it is likely to lead to debate and take up time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

COMPENSATION OF CLERKS OF CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS.

The bill (S. 3196) fixing the compensation of the clerks of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, if it will suit the convenience of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who has charge of this bill, I should be glad that it might be passed over for the present. I think the general plan of the bill is a wise one; but I believe there are some inequalities as respects the salaries named in it, and I should like an opportunity of examining into it a little further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. VEST. Of course, if the Senator from Iowa wishes to examine the bill, I have no objection to its going over; but I wish to make a single remark about the three bills from the Judiciary Committee, which change the present system of compensation to United States attorneys, marshals, and clerks.

These bills have been carefully prepared. They substitute the salary system for fees, and I was instructed by the Judiciary Committee to ask the consideration of these bills specially by the Senate. I have discharged my duty from time to time as I could. Everybody seems to concede the propriety of the reform, because we are paying out now hundreds of thousands of dollars every year without any necessity for it. I shall be glad if the Senate will fix a day for the consideration of these three bills, although I have very little hope, in the scramble which will result from the shortness of time between now and the end of Congress, that anything can be done.

Mr. ALLISON. I am in entire sympathy with the Senator as respects these bills, and I will not object to proceeding with the bills now, if it is understood that they shall not reach a final conclusion to-day. I examined these bills last year as regards the salaries and compensation of the officers named, and I must say, with due respect to the Committee on the Judiciary, that I think so far as the salaries provided for the officers in the State in which I live are concerned, they are too small relatively. I only wish an opportunity to look into the matter again, and perhaps to offer an amendment or two. I shall not interpose any objection to the consideration of the bill which has been placed before the Senate.

Mr. VEST. Of course I have no disposition to push the bills through without examination by every Senator. The salaries named in the bills are fixed after consultation with the Attorney-General and the Auditor of the Treasury. I confess that I have no special personal information on the subject except in regard to my own State. We may have fixed the salaries too high in some places, and they may have been fixed too low in others.

I make no concealment of the fact that my principal object is to get rid of the present system of fees, which leads to all sorts of abuses as to the attorneys, marshals, and clerks. I have a calculation which I shall present to the Senate at the proper time showing the actual saving in money by the year by the passage of these bills. But that is an inferior consideration to the one which I shall always press in connection with that matter, the getting rid of the greed, avarice, and corruption that come from the present system, which makes the fees of the office the only pay received by these officers.

I should be glad if a time could be fixed for the consideration of the three bills, because they all belong, I may say, to the same subject.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to the Senator examining the bill. I hope he will, and I should like to have his suggestions. Of course the only object the committee had was to do its duty fully in the premises. If the Senate would agree to make these bills the special order after the next special order is disposed of I should be very well satisfied. I do not know, for I have not looked at the Calendar, what is the next special order, unless it be the antioption bill, as it is termed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are several special orders.

Mr. VEST. Let the bills be made special orders after the next special order is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. After the special orders now existing are disposed of?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, as one member of the Judiciary Committee, I did not concur with the committee in the favorable report of the bills, and if one objection can prevent their being made special orders, I desire them considered as being objected to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule requires a vote of two-thirds to make a special order. The Chair understood the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to ask unanimous consent that the bills be made special orders.

Mr. VEST. I will make the motion, then, so as to dispose of them. I move that the three bills in regard to attorneys, marshals, and clerks be made special orders.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are only two bills on the subject on the Calendar under Rule VIII—Senate bill 419 and Senate bill 3196.

Mr. VEST. Then, let the order apply to the two bills named.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They should be made special orders for a day certain.

Mr. VEST. The Presiding Officer has the Calendar before him. Let the bills be made special orders for the day after the last special order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The last special order was made for December 14, 1892, the time having already passed. The Chair understands that special orders are to be considered in the order of the date upon which they were made.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be considered in that way, then.

Mr. VEST. Coming in after the last special order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that some day should be named—January 10, or some other.

Mr. VEST. Say January 10. That will do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves that the two bills already referred to may be made special orders for January 10, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the order will not be made in that form, because that may displace other special orders.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that such an order would not displace any special order; that they are to be taken up according to the time when the orders were made, and not as to the date upon which the orders were to be considered.

Mr. WILSON. With the understanding that the present proposed order will not interfere with other special orders, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that it will not under the rule. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], that the two bills which have been referred to be made the special orders of the Senate for January 10, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. [Putting the question.] The Chair thinks two-thirds have responded in the affirmative.

Mr. GEORGE. I suggest that there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi suggests that no quorum is present. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Pasco,	Vance,
Allison,	Dubois,	Peffer,	Vest,
Berry,	Felton,	Perkins,	Vilas,
Blackburn,	Frye,	Platt,	Voorhees,
Blodgett,	George,	Proctor,	Walthall,
Butler	Gorman,	Pugh,	Warren,
Call,	Hansbrough,	Quay,	Washburn,
Carlisle,	Hill,	Sawyer,	White,
Chandler,	McMillan,	Sherman,	Wilson,
Cockrell,	Mills,	Shoup,	Wolcott.
Coke,	Mitchell,	Squire,
Cullom,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Daniel,	Morrill,	Teller,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have responded to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to make Senate bill 419 and Senate bill 3196 special orders for January 10, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. SHERMAN. What bills are they?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills will be reported by their titles.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 419) fixing compensation of United States marshals and deputies, and for other purposes, and a bill (S. 3196) fixing the compensation of the clerks of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know whether this question is debatable or not, but I wish the Senator from Missouri would agree to its postponement until to-morrow at least. It may be by that time that some arrangement can be made. For the present I shall vote against making anything a special order, but if the Senator will wait a day or two such an arrangement may possibly be made. I submit to his judgment whether, on the whole, it is not better to allow the matter to go over informally until to-morrow.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills will be passed over without prejudice.

THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator from Missouri to have the joint resolution which he submitted in regard to the five civilized tribes referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The committee have had the subject under consideration for a great while and have reported a bill. All discussion, therefore, upon the matter will be in order when the bill comes up on the Calendar.

Mr. VEST. I prefer that the joint resolution should lie upon the table. Several Senators have notified me that they desired to submit some remarks upon it, and two of them are not present to-day. I will say to the Senator that, as the bill to which he refers has been reported, the joint resolution can lie upon the table. After Senators have discussed it, it can either be referred to the committee or taken up and considered in connection with the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts make any motion?

Mr. DAWES I do not make any motion if the Senator from Missouri objects.

Mr. VEST. Let the joint resolution lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

LESTER NOBLE.

The bill (S. 1664) for the relief of Lester Noble was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, in line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "one thousand six hundred and eighty-nine dollars and eighty-eight cents" and insert "five hundred dollars;" and in line 9, after the word "war," to insert "Provided, That the sum hereby appropriated be accepted in full of all claims on account of any and all the matters aforesaid;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Lester Noble, of Springfield, Mass., the sum of $500, being for supplies, crops, and timber taken and used and land occupied by the Army during the late war: Provided, That the sum hereby appropriated be accepted in full of all claims on account of any and all the matters aforesaid.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MUSCATINE, IOWA.

The bill (S. 2996) providing for the erection of a public building at Muscatine, Iowa, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that bill be passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice, and the next bill on the Calender will be stated.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF JOHN ROACH.

The bill (S. 457) for the relief of the assignees or legal representatives of John Roach, deceased, to pay balance due on the United States steamer Dolphin, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that bill be passed over without losing its place on the Calendar, in the absence of the Senator who reported it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

WETMORE & BROTHER.

The bill (S. 29) for the relief of Wetmore & Brother, of St. Louis, Mo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Wetmore & Brother, of St. Louis, Mo., $220, being the amount in part of fees due them as attorneys in colored bounty cases, retained and covered into the Treasury.

Mr. CULLOM. I observe that the Senator who reported the bill is not present.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is a report which explains the whole case. Let that be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. MITCHELL May 25, 1892:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 29) for the relief of Wetmore & Brother, of St. Louis, Mo., having had the same under consideration, beg to submit the following report:

"A similar bill was before this committee at the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress, at which time a favorable report was made, being Report No. 545. This report states the facts of the case accurately and is readopted as the report of this committee. It is as follows:

"The said Wetmore & Brother, it appears from the proofs before your committee, were attorneys for a large number of colored men who had claims for bounty against the Government, growing out of military services rendered during the war of the rebellion. For some cause, to your committee unknown, the said Wetmore & Brother were suspended from practice in the Second Auditor's Office in bounty cases.

"When thus suspended, the Freedman's Bureau found that in the bounty cases pending, in which Wetmore & Brother were attorneys, there were due attorneys' fees and expenses amounting to $415.50. This amount was turned into the Adjutant-General's Office by the late chief disbursing officer of the Freedman's Bureau. Of said amount there was paid to Wetmore & Brother, on April 22, 1878, under instructions of the accounting officers of the Treasury, the sum of $195.50, and the balance ($220) was, on April 25, 1878, under instructions of the same officers, covered into the Treasury of the United States.

"In the opinion of the committee the officials of the Treasury had no right to withhold from attorneys fees which had been properly earned before suspension; and as this amount, $220, remains in the Treasury apparently earned by claimants and unclaimed by any other parties, in the opinion of your committee it should be paid to the claimants, Wetmore & Brother.

"Your committee therefore report back the bill (S. 391) with the recommendation that it do pass."

Your committee therefore report back the bill without amendment and recommend its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEALING IN "OPTIONS" AND "FUTURES."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7845) defining "options" and "futures," imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and requiring such dealers and persons engaged in selling certain products to obtain license, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], to strike out the tenth section of the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN. On that I call for the yeas and nays. I hope that the amendment will not be adopted.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] is not in his seat. He doubtless did not suppose that there would be a vote on his amendment this morning. I do not see anything to be gained, as we can not vote finally on the bill to-day by taking a vote in his absence.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it be passed over informally.

Mr. WASHBURN. Then we will pass over the amendment informally.

Mr. WHITE. I think that would be the best course.

Mr. WASHBURN. Let the amendment be passed over informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks that the amendment be informally passed over. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. Are there further amendments to be proposed to the bill as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. WASHBURN. I move to amend the bill in section 2, page 3, line 35, by inserting after the word "made," the words "settled for by delivery or settlement of differences or by any other mode of performance or settlement;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, however, That such contract or agreement shall not be made, settled for by delivery or settlement of differences or by any other mode of performance or settlement in or upon any board of trade, produce, cotton, merchants', or other exchange, or other commercial association, or in any place or upon any premises where price quotations of said articles are announced, bulletined, or published, nor be subject to the rules or regulations of any such board, exchange or other commercial association.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. On page 3, section 3, line 2, after the word "corn," I move to insert the word "flour;" so as to read:

That the articles to which the foregoing sections relate are raw or unmanufactured cotton, hops, wheat, corn, flour, oats, rye, barley, pork, lard, and bacon.

Mr. WASHBURN. I shall not interpose any objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana. As a matter of fact, there is not the slightest point to the amendment. The provisions of the bill are aimed at what is commonly called gambling on the produce exchanges of this country, and the articles which are dealt in in that way are the only ones the bill proposes to deal with. The markets of the world in wheat, corn, pork, and cotton are made artificially on the different produce or cotton exchanges, and in my judgment the people of the country, those raising both cotton and wheat, are largely despoiled by the reduction of prices. The bill proposes to deal only with such articles as are bet upon or waited upon every day of the year on the produce exchanges.

As a matter of fact flour is not and from the nature of the case can not be thus dealt in. Flour is not sold by any general grade, but is sold upon its merits on a particular brand. No gambler on the Chicago Board of Trade can sell 100,000 barrels of flour made in Minneapolis by a certain mill, because he can not secure it. He can not fulfill his contract in the nature of the case.

So there is no earthly point in putting flour in the bill. Yet I have not the slightest objection, and if the Senator from Louisiana will feel any better in his mind on that account I hope it will go in. There is the same propriety precisely in putting in the bill cotton cloth made at the Wamsutta Mills or any of the great mills of New England that there is in putting in flour, and perhaps some gentleman may insist upon doing that.

As far as I am concerned, I have not the slightest objection to the amendment, and I hope it will be agreed to without any opposition.

Mr. WHITE. Do I understand the Senator from Minnesota to say that it is impossible that flour shall be covered by the provisions of the bill because flour is sold on the marks of the millers?

Mr. WASHBURN. I do not know that I understand the Senator's inquiry.

Mr. WHITE. Do I understand the Senator to say it is impossible that flour can be covered by the provisions of the bill because in the nature of things flour is sold under the brands of the millers by whom it is made, and therefore a contract in advance——

Mr. WASHBURN. No, no; that is not the point at all. Wheat is sold on the Chicago market under a certain grade, No. 2 wheat. Cotton is sold on the New Orleans market at a certain grade, middling or fair middling, whatever it is. Those grades sweep the products of the country. Mess pork and different articles are graded in that way, so that they can be sold upon the boards of trade, and those are the only articles the bill involves. Flour is never sold for future delivery on the boards of trade, because there is no grade of flour that makes it possible. In Minneapolis we have thirty mills making flour, and each mill sells its flour on its own merits, and the prices of what are called the same general grade of flour vary from 10 to 50 cents a barrel. So practically it cuts no figure whatever.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him through the Chair, although of course he knows everything about flour and I know nothing, I am informed that his conception of the methods of dealing in flour is an entire mistake. I understand that flour is sold for future delivery, and I understand that the millers make flour and put no brand on it, and that the floor is shipped to the market without brand, and is branded to suit the convenience of the people who have bought it.

Mr. WASHBURN. The Senator misapprehends me entirely. I did not intimate that flour is not sold for future delivery. It is done every day in the year. Every day of the year flour is sold for thirty or sixty days delivery. But it is not sold on the Chicago Board of Trade, or the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce, or the New York Produce Exchange, where the prices are made artificial. The man in London, or Liverpool, or Antwerp, buying flour for future delivery, buys a particular kind of flour and made at a particular mill. As to the idea the Senator alludes to, of flour going abroad without any mark, there is nothing of it. I am a practical miller, and have been for twenty-five years, and I say there is nothing of it, except that some of the very lowest grades of flour, the flour which is called in common parlance "red dog," which is very little better than offal, sometimes goes abroad without any particular brand; that is, not generally branded. But flour that has any reputation, of course, is branded by the mill where it is made and sold on its merits.

Mr. WHITE. I should like to send to the desk and have read a certificate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana asks to have a paper read. If there be no objection, it will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

BOARD OF TRADE OF THE CITY OF CHICAGO,
SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Chicago, July 25, 1892.

DEAR SIR: Complying with your request, I have the honor to inform you that fully 75 per cent of the receipts of flour in the Chicago market are without any brand, the majority of buyers in this market preferring to receive their flour in blank, so that they, both shippers and buyers for domestic and foreign markets, can place upon this flour their own brand. By far the larger part of the sales of flour in this market is made by sample and not by brand. The sample is placed in my hands as chief inspector of flour, with instructions that the flour must conform in all respects to such sample.

Very respectfully,

R. W. RATHBORNE,
Chief Flour Inspector of the Board of Trade of Chicago.

Mr. CHARLES D. HAMILL,
President Chicago Board of Trade.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I am very much gratified that the Senator from Minnesota accepted the amendment in respect to flour, because, whatever may be said in regard to the sale of flour, there has been a good deal of criticism in the papers, especially in those opposed to this bill, because flour is excepted. Although the statement made by the Senator from Minnesota may disclose a reason why it should not be included in the bill, I believe that it would be wiser to insert flour among the articles to be protected from improper competition.

In respect to the pending bill, personally I stand neutral. I am not entirely satisfied that the bill will accomplish the objects which are proposed, nor do I very much like the extension of the system of bringing about reforms by the exercise of the taxing power. That power has been exercised two or three times with great benefit, I think, to the people of the United States, especially during the civil war when it became necessary to get rid, if possible, of the State bank paper. But it is a principle that ought not to be extended, except for special reasons and to attain important objects.

However, I am disposed to vote for the bill in deference to the opinions of the great body of the farmers of the State of Ohio. I have received letters in favor of the bill from leading organizations of the farmers and from individual farmers whom I have known for a long time as dispassionate men. The farmers are entitled to enter the markets of our own country and of foreign countries without any disadvantage, without any combination, without any speculative bids or offers. They are entitled to receive the price fixed by the law of demand and supply, and that price ought not to be increased or diminished by outside transactions where there is no intention to deliver the property.

Now, most of the farmers believe that these gambling contracts tend at critical periods to depreciate the value of their products. That we ought to protect them against. The farmers especially, who are a conservative, law-abiding and influential class in our country, ought to be protected in their markets and in their productions against any gambling operations or against any unusual or unlawful or improper means.

The farmers have the idea strongly fixed in their minds that the sales condemned by the bill do injuriously depress the market at a critical period when they must sell. The farmers as a rule must sell their product shortly after it is produced and ready for the market. They can not wait over until the next year. Perhaps many of the fruits of their production have already been consumed by debt contracted or the like, and at a critical period to have their prices interfered with or reduced by gambling contracts is an injustice to them which we ought to prevent if possible.

Therefore, I am disposed to vote for this bill to secure the farmers of our country, to the producers of the great products which enter into the wealth of our country, from unlawful and improper contracts and combinations. I can see very well the injurious results to the farmers of the power that is now exercised in some of the chief marts of the country, especially in Chicago, by which the market price has become a mere bet, a mere speculation. Contracts to an immense amount, sometimes greater than the entire production of the whole country, are made upon speculative prices upon mere bets, which tend to influence the value of the farmers' product. Therefore I am in favor of the object of the bill.

I do not intend to enter into any argument upon the question. I would do by the farmer as I would do by any other producer of this country. I wish to secure to him the natural and normal value of his product as measured by the law of demand and supply. That, I think, ought to be done.

I am not so sure that it would be better, in order to secure that object, to prohibit such contracts; but the question is whether the United States have the power to prohibit contracts being made in a particular State without any special delivery in a foreign market. It is very doubtful whether it is within the constitutional power of Congress to regulate contracts and to make things lawful or unlawful unless they enter into interstate or foreign commerce. Many of these bets or contracts may be for execution at the place where they are made, and therefore they fall within the domain of the law of the State. The States have not protected their own citizens in many cases against these unlawful combinations and bets.

I think we ought in some way, if we can, under the power conferred by the Constitution of the United States, to secure to farmers their fair and just market, without regard to these unlawful combinations. I have no doubt that cotton has been materially influenced in its price by bets, mere unlawful bets, no better than gambling anywhere, and not half as fair as the faro table. Many of our people in Ohio have been entirely ruined by being drawn into this kind of speculation. In order to protect themselves they have been ruined. The dealers or makers of these contracts and those who enforce the contracts have all the advantage. They have the whole power in their hands. Therefore, I think the object of the bill is right and ought to be, if possible, enacted into law in some constitutional way.

As I said before, I do not like to do it in the way that is proposed in the bill. There is a great deal of force in the argument made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]; but I do not think that we ought to forego even the extraordinary power of taxing these contracts, although they are confessedly illegal, in order to prevent them. Sometimes the same kind of legislation is applied in many of the States in regard to the liquor traffic, where it is legalized but by enormous and high licenses, and as the high license tends to prevent the improper sale of liquors it is considered just and defensible. The States are coming more and more to resort to the power of taxation to prevent unduly the sale of spirituous liquors, and as the Congress of the United States has the absolute power of taxation within certain limits we can resort to that power unquestionably whenever we think the occasion is sufficient to demand this extraordinary exercise.

If there is no other way to be pointed out by Senators to bring about the object proposed by the bill, to put a stop, to make illegal, null and void, and destroy all these illegal contracts, I think we are justified in resorting to the power of taxation, which, although intended mainly for the purpose of gaining revenue for the support of the Government yet may be resorted to for other high purposes for the public good and for the public interest. Therefore unless some other mode is devised it seems to me to be reasonable to carry into execution the purposes of this proposed law, and I am willing to vote for it as it is, asserting the taxing power in order to break down these combinations.

Mr. President, I feel, I know, that I speak the voice of all Senators. None of us think it right or just or proper that the interests of our people shall be affected in the slightest degree by contracts or obligations of this kind. They are innocent parties. The people who produce these great articles are the vital population of the country. Our farming class especially are conservative, quiet, orderly. All they want is not the advantage of these bets or unlawful contracts, but they want the advantage of a fair market, so that when the price abroad is high they may receive a high price accordingly. When the crop is short they expect to receive high prices. When the crop is abundant they do not wish their property still further depressed by an attempt to throw upon the market millions upon millions of bushels of wheat that do not exist except in the air or in the fancy of these speculators.

Therefore, Mr. President, without going into any argument about this matter, and hoping by making a very brief speech upon it that I may aid in bringing the measure to a vote, I simply make these few remarks. We have now less than two months in which to discharge all the ordinary duties of Congress for this year. We have yet to pass upon many important measures. We have to review and pass upon all the appropriations necessary for the support of the Government. There are other questions even more important than this that must demand the attention of Congress. I rose more for the purpose of aiding my friend from Minnesota to get speedy action on the bill, leaving each Senator to vote as his judgment dictates. On the whole, after the most careful reflection and after listening to the debate I intend to vote for the bill, in deference to the opinions of my constituents and also in accordance with my own judgment of what under the circumstances is the only thing that can be done to stop or mitigate, if we can do nothing else, gambling in the products of the people of this country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE], to insert the word "flour" in the third section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no further amendment is proposed——

Mr. WASHBURN. I move to strike out, on page 3, line 31, the words "or traffic."

Mr. WHITE. I suggest to the Senator that he is using the old print of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3 of the print of December 12, 1892, section 2, at the end of line 36, after the word "consumption," strike out the words "or traffic," so as to read:

Nor to any contract or agreement made with any farmer or planter, nor to any contract or agreement made with any person to furnish and deliver to such person at any time, or within any designated period, any of said articles for the use, consumption of such person in his business, occupation, or manufacture, etc.

Mr. WHITE. The amendment suggested by the Senator would deprive the qualification of the general clause of the bill of all its efficacy. For instance, under the amendment, if a grocer desires to buy pork to sell in his store to his customers he will not be able to do it. In other words, the grocers of the country buying pork to sell to their customers and contracting for the future delivery of that pork, unless they intend to consume it themselves, under the amendment of the Senator they will not be able to do it. The words "or traffic" in the bill would leave it in the power of a person who is buying the actual goods, either for his own use or for a resale, to buy them for future delivery. The amendment of the Senator striking out the words "or traffic" would prevent any dealer in this country from buying for future delivery for the purposes of his business.

Mr. MITCHELL. I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that the word "or" should be inserted before "consumption," in order to harmonize the sentence.

Mr. WASHBURN. Yes; I make that modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota modifies his amendment by inserting the word "or" before the word "consumption" in line 36.

Mr. WASHBURN. I am not specially anxious with regard to the amendment. The whole provision in which these two words occur was offered by me as an amendment before we adjourned last session, with the view and for the express purpose of making it perfectly clear that there should be nothing in this proposed law that would interfere with legitimate transactions, and especially the character of transactions referred to by the Senator from Louisiana. In looking it over I have felt by putting in the words "or traffic" the door might be opened a little too widely, and under the guise of the word "traffic" there might be transactions carried on that the law would prohibit. I think that if the Senator from Louisiana will read the provision carefully, or listen to my reading of it, he will see that there is not much point to the suggestion he has made. The provisions of this proposed law dare not interfere with or apply to — any contract or agreement made with any farmer or planter, nor to any contract or agreement made with any person to furnish and deliver to such person at any time, or within any designated period, any of said articles for the use or consumption of such person in his business.

How does that interfere with a groceryman who wants to sell some bacon or ham to the Senator from Louisiana or to anybody else who desires to purchase it? If it does interfere with him, I would not for a minute assent to the word going out. If there is any question in the mind of any Senator in regard to it I shall withdraw the amendment because I do not think it is of enough importance to insist upon it.

Mr. WHITE. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that if he strikes out the words which he proposes to strike out the consequences which I suggest necessarily follow. Now, read the sentence. If those words are not inserted to allow what is necessary to be done, as I suggest, then the rest of the sentence would have no meaning. Let me read it:

Or within any designated period, any of said articles for the use, consumption, or traffic of such person in his business.

The theory of the Senator is that consumption in the business means the sale of the goods to the customer. The sale of goods is not the consumption of goods. There is a vast class of merchants in this country who buy goods for consumption to work over in their business. The goods that I buy for sale are not the goods that I buy to consume. The elementary meaning of the word "consumption" here stated by any lexicographer will exclude the contention which the Senator says is necessary to be in the bill. Yet he proposes to strike out of the bill the words which alone allow that to be done—which he himself admits is necessary to be done in order that the simplest business transactions may be carried on in this country.

There is not a barrel of pork to-day, there is not a barrel of flour, there is not a pound of bacon, there is not a single thing a merchant in this land buys from one end of it to the other that he does not watch the market reports and buy it for advance delivery when the market is favorable in order that he may supply his customers, the retail consumers, at a fair price. This provision, "or traffic," was written in for the very purpose of saving the business interests of this country the awful blow which will be struck at them if the section with the words stricken out passes Congress.

You can not say the word "consumption" is the word "sale." In no sense of the English language does it mean that. Yet, while the Senator admits that the power to sell for traffic must be left in the bill, and if it is not the hands of paralysis will fall upon every business interest in this country, he moves to strike out the word and leave in the word "consumption," which any court in this land, under the ordinary rules of legal interpretation, will hold means consumption and does not mean traffic.

Mr. WASHBURN. There may possibly be some point made by the Senator from Louisiana, although I do not see it as he does. However, lest the effect may be as indicated by him, I shall withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota withdraws the amendment. Are there further amendments to be proposed as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. WHITE. I move to strike out the proviso at the end of section 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the proviso at the end of section 2, in the following words:

Provided, however, That such contract or agreement shall not be made, settled for by delivery or settlement of differences, or by any other mode of performance or settlement in or upon any board of trade, produce, cotton, merchants', or other exchange, or other commercial association, or in any place or upon any premises where price quotations of said articles are announced, bulletined, or published, nor be subject to the rules or regulations of any such board, exchange, or other commercial association.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I will explain the purpose of this amendment. The first section of the bill defines options. The second section of the bill defines future. To that section there is a qualification which allows the dealing in actual products by farmers or other people under certain conditions and subject to certain restrictions; in substance it declares that where there is an actual dealing for actual property for one's consumption or one's traffic such dealings are perfectly lawful transactions. In other words, dealings of this character the bill itself declares are lawful because necessary to the existence of the commerce of the country.

Having by its very terms admitted the right of a farmer to sell his products by future contracts, the bill morever admits that it is equally essential that the right of the merchant to buy the actual product needed for sale in his business should also exist, and that it is also equally essential that a man should have the right to buy by future contract that which is needed for his own consumption. Now, although the bill admits all these things, it then goes on to say that the contracts which the bill thus declares are lawful and necessary for the commerce of the country shall not be lawful if made in an organized commercial board of trade; that they shall not be lawful if made anywhere where a quotation as to market prices is to be found.

In other words, the bill forbids the actual dealing in actual property for future use as to a class of people and permits it as to another class. I submit that a more flagrant and a more outrageous example of class legislation could not be afforded than that which is thus found written in this bill. If Mr. A goes to-morrow to the city of Chicago to buy a thousand barrels of flour, of actual flour for actual use in his business, and if he should walk to a place where merchants congregate who have flour for sale and where they put up quotations to show the market price, under the proviso in this section that contract for actual property made for actual resale, declared to be legal under the bill, would become an illegal contract and be stricken with nullity.

In other words, as I had occasion to say once before, the effect of this provision is to make contracts lawful where they are made in a way where advantage can be taken of the person making them, and to forbid them where the contract can be made honestly and made to the best advantage. There is not an article of any importance dealt in to-day that dealers, buyers, and sellers do not gather to interchange views and make a market for.

I say if the bill admits, as it does, that it is lawful to buy property for future delivery for your actual use; if the bill admits it to be lawful to buy property by future contract which you intend to resell, then I want to know under what principle of free government, under what elementary conception of liberty are you going to say that a contract which you recognize to be a lawful contract, which you declare can be made by anybody all over this land, is to become unlawful when made by a specified class——

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator from Louisiana allow me a suggestion?

Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is it not a fact that the proviso simply relates to the place where the contract shall be made and not to the person? The proviso, I understand, does not prohibit any particular person from making a contract of that kind; it only provides that the contract shall not be made at certain particular places. It may be all wrong, as the Senator says, but I think he has placed a wrong construction on it.

Mr. WHITE. Then the drift of the Senator's question is this, that it is place not person. My argument addressed itself to the fundamentally iniquitous attempt in American legislation to anathematize person or place.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Senator will allow me, I am not finding fault with his argument, but I was finding fault with the construction the Senator placed on the proviso. I think he misconstrued it. I admit that the proviso inhibits the making of this kind of a contract in certain places, but it does not inhibit any particular person from making that contract in every other place.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, that makes no difference, call it place.

A rose by any other name would smell as sweet.

The discrimination is, then, whether it be person or be place. The enormity of this discriminating provision as to contracts recognized as legal, finds no justification, no excuse under any theory of American legislation by changing the theater of the discrimination and leaving the discrimination as flagrant as it is found in the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think it does myself. I agree with the Senator as far as that is concerned.

Mr. WHITE. Under the theory of the bill, then, it is within the power of Congress to-morrow to declare that a contract which they say is legal shall be legal in the State of Louisiana and shall be illegal in the State of Massachusetts. Why, the very elementary canon of just legislation as laid down in one of the earliest edicts of Justinian was that legislation in order to be just must be universal. In my State in the long ago in the history of her jurisprudence, when her court of last resort was presided over by men who rendered her system of judicature illustrious, when a municipal council attempted to pass an act discriminating against particular neighborhoods, that great court, in an opinion which is luminous with the instinct of American liberty, said that the fundamental concept of all American legislation was universality and that as the legislation was discriminating it was stricken with paralysis.

Now, are we going to put ourselves in the position of bitter and relentless partisans? Are we prepared to say to-day as Senators representing the American people that we are going to hold these contracts as legal and valid in all respects in one place and then declare them invalid because made in another place? Are we going to assert that the power exists to go to your State and into my State and pick out the condemned spots and draw the line of terror around them, and say, "lo, and behold, by the edict of the American Congress, lawful indeed are these contracts in every other place but in the spot where we breathe the anathema of illegality. If you step into that condemned place the contract is dead and that which is legal everywhere else becomes thus illegal there."

Mr. President, what is the wisdom of this provision? Are we going to destroy the very fundamental conception of commercial transactions? Suppose the Senator from Minnesota be right as to all the fallacies and phantoms which he conjures up, as I think, as to the awful consequences resulting from the commercial methods of the day. Suppose those phantoms be real instead of imaginary, does it follow that the evil has come from the place where the contracts are made? If right, the evil has come from the method. If you strike down the method by your bill, if your bill does what you think it does, if it prevents the doing of that which you say is necessary to prevent, unlawful future contracts, then in the name of reason why are you going further? When you have destroyed the method which you think necessary to destroy, why destroy places? Why destroy dealings in those places which have always been a part of business from the Middle Ages down? The aggregation of merchants meeting and consulting the exchanges in London, the bourse in Paris, all are the great centers of dealing. The market over in England was the cry of necessity.

Why, the very primitive concept of the farmer shows the justice of these views. Whence comes the county fair, where buyers and sellers meet? Why, under the terms of the bill the farmer might sell a pig at his farm, but if he drove the pig to the county fair, where a better price could be had, the sale would be illegal.

I say let us bear in mind the elementary conceptions of American freedom. Let us adhere to them, and let us not follow every jack o' the lantern which leads us to give up the faith and hope of our fathers. Our principles are everlasting, for they are true. If the methods of dealing are condemned, strike them down, but do not go further and strike at persons and places by a discrimination as unjust as it is unamerican.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. President, I trust the amendment will not be adopted, because the effect of it would inevitably destroy the force of this provision. The provision, the Senators will notice by the last print, is an amendment that was offered late last session. The amendment was suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] with the view of making it absolutely clear that there should be nothing in the law that would prevent legitimate transactions.

For instance, a cotton-spinner in Providence or Woonsocket or in any other New England town who wishes to buy cotton desires the privilege of doing so without asking the party of whom he wishes to purchase in Memphis or Mobile whether he owns it or not. He wants to buy his cotton of a particular grade, to be used in his business. To meet such a case as this, or in order that a grocer who desires to sell his bacon or his ham to the proprietor of a hotel or a boarding house, or to anybody else, shall not be interfered with, is the whole purpose of that amendment.

I do not think it was at all necessary, because the bill itself is only directed to those cases where parties are not the owners of the property. That is the general provision of the bill. So I do not think, as the bill stood, there was the least necessity for that amendment coming from the Senator from Rhode Island; but to make it absolutely clear that current business, the business of everyday life, should not be interfered with, the proviso was inserted.

The bill is intended to prevent operators on the different produce exchanges from making prices, as they do to-day. It is intended to prevent operators from making artificial prices for the great products of this country, which, if we strike out that provision, they certainly could do. There is where the word "traffic" comes in and is of such great importance. If the Senate strike out that provision they will strike the lifeblood out of the bill and destroy its purposes. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana will be disagreed to.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I am heartily in favor of the objects of this bill—the prevention of contracts for the fictitious delivery of products of any kind. How that is connected with the proposition that there should be no contracts for the actual delivery of a product at a particular place called a board of trade or an exchange, I can not see.

This provision of the bill prohibits contracts being made on a board of trade or an exchange at a particular place for the actual delivery of any product that may be agreed upon. It is not the object of the bill to prohibit such acts being done at a particular place, and I think it is entirely impracticable. Men may meet anywhere and may agree that they will offer particular prices for the delivery of actual products. We can not regulate that. It is the contracts for fictitious delivery, gambling contracts, which are objectionable. I can not see that a provision that as a board of trade you shall not make that contract, you shall not assemble together if you make a price quotation, but if you leave the price quotation unmade, then the contract shall be valid, has any real or proper connection with the object of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WASHBURN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. I do not know how he would vote if he were here. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present I should vote "yea," to strike that clause out.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. KENNA] on this bill. I do not know exactly how he would vote on this particular amendment if present, and I therefore simply announce my pair.

Mr. FELTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE]. I do not know how he would vote on this question, but if he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. SANDERS]. Were he present I should vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]. As I have no idea how he would vote on this proposition I will withhold my vote. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. MILLS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am usually paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], whom I do not see in his seat, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] on this bill and on all the amendments to it, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called.) I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT], but I am informed that if he were present he would vote nay on this question, and therefore I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BUTLER. I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. GIBSON. I am paired generally with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (after having voted in the affirmative). I am informed that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] considers himself paired with me upon the bill and amendments, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—12.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WASHINGTON for ten days, on account of important business.

DEEP-WATER HARBOR, TEXAS.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9824) to amend "An act to promote the construction of a safe deep-water harbor on the coast of Texas," approved February 9, 1891.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 2 of said act be so amended as to extend the time of commencing said work five years from the 9th day of February, 1893.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. If there is a report accompanying the bill I hope it will be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the report will be read.

The report (by Mr. CRAIN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have considered the bill (H. R. 9824) to amend "An act to promote the construction of a safe deep-water harbor on the coast of Texas," approved February 9, 1891.

The bill merely proposes to extend the time for commencing the work on the harbor, and the committee recommend its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WATSON. Reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LONG] will give us some explanation of this measure.

Mr. LONG. The bill proposes merely to amend section 2 of the act formerly passed on this subject. The effect of this bill is simply to extend the time within which work shall be begun with the view of reaching deep water. The original act required that the work should be begun within two years.

A MEMBER. What work is it?

Mr. LONG. It is work on what is intended to be the Corpus Christi Harbor.

Mr. WATSON. I think we ought to know something as to the conditions which were imposed when the original work was authorized so that we may understand the effect of this extension. What advantage will the individuals concerned in this enterprise get by this bill?

Mr. LONG. Certain individuals propose to do this work themselves; they propose to extend the harbor, beginning at certain points which I do not now precisely remember, and going out a certain distance into the water. They are to perform this work without any cost whatever to the Government.

Mr. DINGLEY. With the right to collect tolls on vessels?

Mr. LONG. There are no wharves there now; nothing is established there at all yet; no collection of tolls.

Mr. WATSON. I think the original act should be read for the information of the House. The gentleman does not state where this harbor is at. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. I have here a copy of the original act.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act to promote the construction of a safe deep-water harbor on the coast of Texas.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Corpus Christi and Padre Island Harbor Company, created and existing under and by virtue of articles of incorporation drawn in accordance with and by authority of the general incorporation act of the State of Texas, and dated December 10, 1887, or its successors or assignees, be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to construct, at their exclusive cost, as in their charter provided, a sea wall, breakwaters, and viaduct off the shore of Padre Island, on the coast of Texas, within the jurisdiction of the United States, subject to the terms and conditions herein set forth.

SEC. 2. That said company shall, within two years after the passage of this act, locate and commence the construction of said harbor at a point to be selected by them off Padre Island, coast of Texas. Commencing at the water's edge and running at an angle to the shore they shall construct a viaduct of the most approved modern plan, extending seaward until a depth of, say, 27 feet of water is reached; thence continuing in the same direction they shall construct a sea wall until 30 feet or more of water is reached; thence turning southward at an angle or curve which shall throw the sea wall parallel, or nearly so, with the shore line of Padre Island, they shall construct a sea wall 3,000 feet in length, said sea wall to be placed upon a base of riprap or other suitable foundation, upon which shall be constructed a wall of concrete of such form of structure as the engineer officer of said company may hereafter adopt, 22 feet thick, more or less, and 29 feet high, reaching 11 feet above mean low water. They shall also construct breakwaters of sufficient length and so placed as to protect the shore end of the viaduct, and another of sufficient length and so placed as to protect the entrance to the embayed space, thus forming an outer harbor sufficient in extent to afford dockage for, and accommodation at its wharves for, thirty of the largest ocean steamers afloat and two hundred or more smaller vessels or coasters at one time, and shall complete said work within four years from the commencement of the same. When completed, the embayed space or harbor shall be, and is hereby, declared to be a harbor of refuge for the vessels of all nations and such vessels as may touch for orders, free of charge, except such vessels as may land at the wharves.

SEC. 3. That in consideration of the free use of the embayed space or harbor as a harbor of refuge for the vessels of all nations, except vessels which land at and use the wharves, and in further consideration of the vast benefit to the general commerce of the whole country and in lieu of any money appropriations for the improvement of the said coast the said company shall be allowed to charge and collect such reasonable port charges and wharfage as may be prescribed by regulations that may be made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, in conformity with the laws of the United States.

SEC. 4. That no wharfage or port charges shall be charged until after the said improvement shall have been inspected by a board of three engineers of the United States Army, appointed by the Secretary of War for the purpose, and found to have been fully completed in accordance with the terms of this act and until such report shall have been approved by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 5. That the United States Government specially reserves the right at its option to take said works upon payment to the owners thereof the actual value of the same at the time of taking, which value shall be determined by a board of engineers of the United States Army, to be appointed by the Secretary of War for the purpose.

SEC. 6. The rights herein granted to the "Corpus Christi and Padre Island Harbor Company" are upon the condition that there shall be no discrimination made in favor of or against any individual or corporation in regard to the use of said harbor or its approaches by land or water.

SEC. 7. That the said Corpus Christi and Padre Island Harbor Company be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered to construct bridges across Laguna Madre from the mainland to Padre Island, in accordance with such plans and specifications as the Secretary of War may approve.

Mr. DINGLEY. As I understand, the effect of this proposition is to extend the time for beginning the construction of this work two years longer—until 1895.

Mr. LONG. Five years, I believe it is.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. I ask that the bill be again read.

The Clerk again read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. DINGLEY. I object for the present until I can have opportunity to examine the matter.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States, was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 167) relating to the discharge of certain official duties in the office of Register of the Treasury;

A bill (H. R. 8868) granting increase of pension to Mary North, a widow of a soldier of 1812, and who is one hundred years old;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 170) to pay the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1892, on the 21st day of said month;

A bill (H. R. 8760) to provide for the sale of navy-yard lands in the city of Brooklyn; and

A bill (H. R. 6024) for the relief of William H. Taylor.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 9487) to amend an act approved April 22, 1890, authorizing the Natchitoches Cane River Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across Cane River, in Louisiana;

A bill (H. R. 9488) to amend an act approved March 2, 1891, authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River, Louisiana, by the Rapides Bridge Company, limited;

It also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 9826) granting certain rights and privileges to the commissioners of water works in the city of Erie, Pa.; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

It also announced that the Senate had passed the bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 54) to amend chapter 6 of Title XXXII of the Revised Statutes, relating to mineral lands and mining resources;

A bill (S. 2576) for the relief of C. L. Coder;

A bill (S. 2730) granting an honorable discharge to William B. Barnes;

A bill (S. 3221) to provide for the adjustment and payment of the claim of Thomas Rhys Smith for work done and materials furnished for the breakwater at Bar Harbor, Me.;

Joint resolution (S. R. 127) authorizing the Smithsonian Institution to lend to the North Dakota World's Fair Commission the Red River cart now in the National Museum; and Joint resolution (S. R. 128) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant permits for the use of reservations and public spaces in the city of Washington, and for other purposes.

It also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 112) to print and bind 1,000 extra copies each of the Drill Regulations for Infantry, Cavalry, and Artillery.

MRS. JENNIE GRAY.

Mr. MILLER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1786) granting a pension to Mrs. Jennie Gray.

The bill was read, as follows;

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jennie Gray, as widow of S. D. Smith, late surgeon of the Forty-first Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. PEARSON. Has the bill been considered by a committee of this House?

Mr. MILLER. It has been, and there is a unanimous report.

Mr. PEARSON. I would like to hear the report.

The report (by Mr. HARRIES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (S. 1786) granting a pension to Mrs. Jennie Gray, and submit the following report:

The petitioner was formerly the widow of Samuel D. Smith, who served as surgeon and assistant surgeon First Kansas Infantry from June 7, 1861, to April 16, 1862, and as surgeon Forty-first Wisconsin Infantry from May 26, 1864, to September 24, 1864. The soldier died December 27, 1870, of dropsy, resulting from disease of liver, and his death has been accepted by the Pension Bureau as a result of his service; pension was accordingly allowed the widow at $17 per month from date of death to October 30, 1873, when she was married to one John G. Gray; pension was paid to Bessie, a child of the soldier, for the period from the mother's remarriage to October 9, 1883, when the child became 16 years of age; these allowances were made in April and December, 1891, respectively, and aggregated about $2,600, about $575 of which belonged to this petitioner.

On November 20, 1884, by the common pleas court of Erie County, Pa., the petitioner was divorced from her second husband, Gray, on her own complaint, on the ground, as she testifies, of failure to support and cruel and inhuman treatment. She has not married since said divorce; she is about 52 years of age, and has for ten or more years been dependent upon her own labor as a seamstress and the assistance of others, and that she has been provided a home in the family of a married sister. These facts are duly shown by evidence on file in the Pension Bureau and with this committee.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS COLUMBIA RIVER, WASHINGTON.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3029) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River, in the State of Washington.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. This is a bridge bill in the usual form. It has already been passed by the Senate, and has been reported favorably by the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It is recommended by the Chief Engineer of the War Department. I ask that the reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. TRACEY. I object.

The bill was read.

Mr. BLAND. Is this bridge to be built by private enterprise?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAND. Is it to be a toll bridge?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. No, sir. The purpose is to construct a railroad bridge across the Columbia River at a point in Kittitas and Douglas Counties, on the line of the Manitoba Railroad, otherwise known as the Great Northern Road. The road has been built on both sides of the river; and these parties have all the material there now to proceed with the construction of this bridge. I received a telegram this morning asking that this bill be passed at as early a date as possible in order that the work may be commenced.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEATH OF HON. EDWARD F. M'DONALD.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent at this time to offer, for present consideration, a resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, the 11th of February, 1893, beginning at 3 p. m., be set apart for the purpose of paying tribute to the memory of the Hon. Edward F. McDonald, lately a Representative from the Seventh district of New Jersey.

The resolution was considered and adopted.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Fifty-first Congress made appropriations for the establishment and erection of seventy-five public buildings, including the extension and improvement of those already erected; and

Whereas from the records of the Department having the construction of public buildings and letting the contracts for the same it appears that forty-seven of these buildings, for which appropriations were made more than two years ago, have not been contracted and no steps taken to let the same; and

Whereas it further appears that complete contracts for only fifteen of said buildings have been let and that partial and incomplete contracts have been let for ten others: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the House of Representatives why so large a number of these public works are not begun and why more than eight millions of appropriations have remained unexpended during the past two years while the public service suffers in various parts of the country for better facilities and accommodations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. DINGLEY. That had better go to a committee, I think, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the resolution will be appropriately referred.

BLUE MOUNTAIN IRRIGATION COMPANY, OREGON.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3048) granting to the Blue Mountain Irrigation and Improvement Company a right of way for reservoir and canals through the Umatilla Indian Reservation, in the State of Oregon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Blue Mountain Irrigation and Improvement Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Oregon, may purchase so much of sections 1 and 2, in township 1 south, of range 33 east, Willamette meridian, in the Umatilla Indian Reservation, in the State of Oregon, as may be required by said company for the purpose of a reservoir, dam, and grounds accompanying, out of lands allotted to, or which may have been selected for allotment by, any Indians, if said company shall be able to agree with the Indian owners or allottees thereof upon the terms of such sale, and the Secretary of the Interior shall approve and ratify the same; but the said company shall have no right to compel the sale by any Indian owner or allottee of any lands for the purposes of reservoir or dam or accompanying grounds. And said company may also take of the lands in said sections 1 and 2 in said reservation, which have not yet been allotted, so much additional land as shall be required for the purposes of a reservoir and dam, and necessary grounds appurtenant thereto, upon making payment as hereafter provided in respect to the right of way. And upon and after acquiring by purchase as aforesaid, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the necessary grounds for reservoir and dam, the right of way is hereby granted to said Blue Mountain Irrigation and Improvement Company for a main ditch or canal to commence at a point on McKay Creek north, 6° west of corner to sections 1, 2, 11, and 12, township 1 south, range 33 east, Willamette meridian, thence running across said Indian reservation to the city of Pendleton and to the Umatilla River, with the right to divert the waters of McKay Creek and its tributaries, and for such other purposes, to construct and maintain reservoirs, dams, flumes, ditches, and such other structures and devices as may be necessary for storing, conveying, and distributing water at such points as said company may desire to use the same. But all the rights herein granted are upon the express condition that during their continuance the grantees, or their assigns, shall furnish to occupants of said land on said reservation, so situated as to be capable of irrigation or supply from any ditch constructed by them hereunder, water sufficient for purposes of agriculture and domestic uses and irrigation, under such rules and regulations and on such terms as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe, and shall not divert or diminish the volume of water in said streams or exhaust either of them so far as to impair vested rights or to hinder or prevent the occupants of land on said reservation from the full enjoyment of said streams, either for power, irrigation, or domestic purposes.

For the purpose of determining the fairness of any agreement of sale negotiated with any of said Indian owners or allottees, and the wisdom of their making such sale to said company, the Secretary of the Interior shall appoint such commissioners, not exceeding three in number, as he shall think fit, to personally inquire into and report to him the facts in respect to said matter, and he shall approve and ratify or disapprove any such agreements he shall think the best interests of the Indians may require; and all expenses attending such inquiry shall be paid by the said Blue Mountain Irrigation and Improvement Company, security for the payment of which may be required in advance by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 2. That the right of way to said company shall be 50 feet in width on each side of the center line of said ditch or canal, together with the ground adjacent to the said right of way for distributing ditches not exceeding 10 acres in the aggregate for every 10 miles of said ditch or canal. The company shall also have the right to enter upon lands adjacent to said canal or reservoir to take therefrom material, stone, earth, or timber necessary for the construction of said dam, ditch, or canal. But no land belonging to any Indian owner in severalty, or which shall have been selected for allotment by any Indian, shall be taken by the said company, nor shall the company have the right to take therefrom any material, stone, earth, or timber, except by agreement with the said Indian owner, approved by the Secretary of the Interior, or by first making compensation for the same, and any injury thereby caused to other lands of such Indian owner or allottee, to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior, after appraisal in the manner provided in section 1 of this act.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior may appoint three commissioners to fix the amount of compensation to be paid to the Indian owners or allottees for right of way for the said main ditch or canal of the said company, which shall include the value of the land taken therefor and all damages to other lands of such owner or allottee caused by such taking, and also to fix the amount of compensation to be paid for any lands of the tribe not allotted or selected for allotment by individuals which may be required by the said company for reservoir and dam, and adjacent grounds, or for right of way, or for distributing ditches, which shall be fixed upon the same principle; and such compensation and damages shall be ascertained and adjusted and all surveys made pursuant to such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe, and shall be in all cases subject to his approval. In case of inability or refusal of any commissioner to act or continue in service after appointment, the Secretary of the Interior shall by appointment supply such vacancy or vacancies so caused. The Secretary of the Interior shall fix the compensation of such commissioners, not exceeding that allowed to the commissioners appointed under the provisions of an act of Congress, entitled "An act providing for the allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians residing upon the Umatilla Indian Reservation, in the State of Oregon, and granting patents therefor, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1885, and the same shall be paid by the said Blue Mountain Irrigation and Improvement Company, and the Secretary of the Interior may require security for the payment thereof in advance of their appointment. The consent of the Indians upon said reservation to the granting of this right of way and the diversion of the water necessary to the accomplishment of the purposes of said company shall be obtained by the said company in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe before any right of way under this act shall accrue to this company. In all cases all lands which have been selected by any individual Indian upon said reservation for allotment shall be treated and regarded for the purposes of this act as belonging to such Indian allottee; but the Secretary of the Interior may hold any moneys agreed to be paid or awarded to him in compensation for lands sold or taken, or injuries resulting, until the approval by him of the allotment and the issuance of patent therefor; but the same shall then be paid over to or invested for such Indian owner as the Secretary of the Interior in his discretion may see fit. Payment for land in said reservation held by the Indians of said tribe in common, and of all damages awarded to them by reason of the construction of the dam and reservoir, ditch, or canal, are to be made to the confederated tribe in common occupying the reservation under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 4. That said company shall not assign, transfer, or mortgage its rights of way for any purpose whatever until the said canal shall be completed, except, however, that the company may mortgage said franchise for the purpose of raising money to construct said reservoir and canals: Provided, That the right herein granted shall be lost and forfeited by said company unless the canal is constructed across the reservation within three years from the passage of this act.

SEC. 5. That the right of immediate entry upon the lands of said reservation for the purpose of making surveys of the line of the ditch or canal of said company is hereby granted, but no right of any kind in or to any part of the right of way or other grounds above mentioned shall vest in said company until plats thereof, made upon actual survey for the definite location of said ditch or canal, including the points for dams, reservoirs, and distributing ditches, with the amount of ground requisite for such purposes, shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior, and until the compensation for said lands and for the services of said commissioners has been fixed and paid.

SEC. 6. That any failure in the performance of the conditions prescribed in this act shall be taken and deemed to work a forfeiture of the rights herein granted, without any act of Congress or judgment of court declaring the same.

SEC. 7. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby reserved.

Mr. BRETZ. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill, and I hope we will have some explanation of the matter. I would like to have the report read.

The report was read at length.

Mr. BRETZ. I do not think the information given in that brief report is sufficiently explanatory, and I shall object to the consideration of the bill unless there is some better statement as to the necessity for its passage than is there given.

Mr. HERMANN. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to withhold his objection for a few moments, so that I may be able to give an explanation of this matter.

Mr. BRETZ. Very well.

Mr. HERMANN. I am personally acquainted with the land which is designed to be improved by permitting this irrigation company to have a right of way over this Umatilla Reservation for the purpose of carrying the waters from the mountain streams and distributing them over that vast area of arid region. The lands, I will state to the gentleman, are largely of an arid character, and it has been discovered that it is utterly impossible to cultivate them or improve them in any way, unless they are artificially improved by bringing water to them in the manner here suggested.

Now, the ditch for this purpose has been constructed beyond the reservation and below it, and the difficulty has been to obtain a right of way to construct it across the reservation, which could only be done by a grant or through the permission of Congress. This bill is designed for the purpose of granting that permission. It has been submitted to the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, meets their approval, and it passed the Senate after a careful consideration by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, it having been reported by the Hon. Senator VILAS, formerly the Secretary of the Interior, who is well known for his carefulness and fidelity in all matters pertaining to the interests of the Indians. The bill was particularly amended by him to meet what he believed to be the requirements of the case, and comes here with his indorsement.

Mr. BRETZ. The question I wish to ask the gentleman is as to how this company is to make compensation for the right of way; and what protection is given to the Indians for their interests which are involved?

Mr. HERMANN. I will state, in response to the inquiry of the gentleman, that the very greatest care is taken with regard to the compensation to be made to the Indians. No right shall vest in this company, and no interest be taken from the Indians, except with their own express consent.

The value of the lands, as well as any damages which may accrue, shall be assessed by a commission. The report of that commission must be carefully examined and approved by the Secretary of the Interior. Then the money shall be paid; and it shall be distributed to the Indians as provided in the bill. The Indians are to be regarded as allottees of the land; and the allotment is about completed at the present time. No right, as I before said, is to be taken from the Indians, nor are they to be divested of any interest they now have without first obtaining their consent. This is one of the most carefully guarded bills that ever passed this House.

Mr. OTIS. Mr. Speaker, I think that bill ought to be considered very carefully in committee.

Mr. HERMANN. I would suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that I am perfectly cognizant of the necessities for having this irrigation ditch through that reservation. There is no objection to it on the part of the Indians; in fact their future livelihood depends upon their having water provided. Every interest of the Indians is carefully guarded, and they are to be paid the fullest market value of the land.

Mr. OTIS. I think that the bill had better be considered in committee.

Mr. HERMANN. I will say to the gentleman from Kansas that this bill has been very thoroughly considered, and the interests of the Indians have been very carefully guarded. There are only a few miles remaining through the reservation. The Indians are all taking their allotments in severalty. There is absolutely no objection to the bill. I assure the gentleman that the bill was most carefully considered by the former Secretary of the Interior (Senator VILAS) who added a great many amendments to the bill and had stricken out the provisions which he thought were obnoxious. Now, the bill comes before this House with the most careful provisions for the interests of the Indians, and I hope it may become a law.

Mr. OTIS. Let it go over until to-morrow. (Cries of "Vote!")

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HERMANN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DEEP-WATER HARBOR ON THE COAST OF TEXAS.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago, when the bill was called up by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LONG], I asked that it might lie over for a few moments until I could have an opportunity to examine it. I have examined the bill and now withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9824) to amend "An act to promote the construction of a safe deep-water harbor on the coast of Texas."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Has that bill been read?

The SPEAKER. This is the bill which was offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LONG] this morning, when the gentleman from Maine asked leave to look into it for a moment, and he now withdraws his objection. Is there further objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LONG, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WRECKAGE OF THE SHIPS TRENTON AND VANDALIA.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 1831) to admit free of duty the wreckage of the ships Trenton and Vandalia, presented by the United States to the King of Samoa.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to admit free of duty the wreckage from the ships Trenton and Vandalia, presented by the United States Government to the King of Samoa for the benefit of the Samoan people, and to refund the sum of $7,128, being the amount of duties paid to the collector of San Francisco, to the proper parties in interest.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to have the report of the committee read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the report of the committee will be read.

The report (by Mr. BUNN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1831) to admit free of duty the wreckage of the ships Trenton and Vandalia, presented by the United States to the King of Samoa, having considered the same, report as follows:

In May, 1890, the United States Government relinquished all claim to the wrecks of the ships Trenton and Vandalia in favor of the King of Samoa, with the recommendation that a trustee be appointed to dispose of them for the benefit of the Samoan people. The gift was accepted with the approval of the King. Mr. W. Blacklock, vice-consul-general at Apia, was appointed trustee to execute the purposes of the gift.

Subsequently an agreement was made between Mr. Blacklock, as trustee, and John Wightman, of San Francisco, representing a company formed for the purpose of wrecking said vessels. According to this agreement the enterprise was to be worked on shares, the Samoans contributing the wrecks, and in consideration therefor Mr. Blacklock, as their trustee, was assigned an interest in the net proceeds.

Upon the entry of the wreckage into San Francisco it was assessed as merchandise at the several rates of duty levied on it under the provisions of the tariff act of 1890. The duties were paid under protest. The protest was not sustained, and the judicial remedy was lost by failure to lodge an appeal in due time.

The amount paid for duties represents thus far nearly the entire profits of the enterprise. The remission of these duties is asked because in no other way can this gift of the Government, which with others was made to the Samoans in partial recognition of their heroic sacrifices in saving the lives of our officers and men during the great hurricane, be made available.

The following letter from the Secretary of the Treasury shows the amount of duties paid upon the wreckage:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., March 8, 1892.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 4th instant, received at this Department on the 7th instant, I have to inform you that the payments of duty were made on the wreckage of the steamers Vandalia and Trenton by Wightman Brothers, as follows, viz:

December 23, 1890	$2,089.11
July 27, 1891	1,885.97
August 24, 1891	1,672.30
December 12, 1891	235.20
December 30, 1891	1,240.41
Total	7,122.99

Respectfully, yours,

O. L. SPAULDING,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. SHERMAN HOAR,
House of Representatives.

The Secretary of the Treasury, to whom the bill was referred, replied as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 10, 1892.

SIR: Your letter of the 30th ultimo, with inclosure of Senate bill No. 1831, is received.

You ask that the proper officer of this Department be instructed to report upon the bill, and also as to whether the legislation proposed should be enacted into law.

In reply I will state that the refund being dictated by considerations of national amity, the Department approves the bill as drawn.

Respectfully, yours,

O. L. SPAULDING,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
Chairman Committee on Finance, United States Senate.

In view of the foregoing statement of facts, your committee recommend the passage of the bill, and that H. R. 4775 lie upon the table, it being the same subject-matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I understand this is simply a a remission of the duty on the wreckage that was presented by our Government to the King of Samoa.

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is all right.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill (H. R. 4775) on the same subject will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the regular order, which is the consideration of bills on the unfinished calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana calls up the regular order, which is the consideration of sundry pension bills which had been reported from the Committee of the Whole to the House, some with and some without amendments. An agreement was made that there might be fifteen minutes' debate on either side, the previous question having been ordered on the bills to their final passage. The Clerk will report the first of these bills remaining unacted upon. The House had disposed of a large number of them, but the Chair is informed there are others undisposed of.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 111) for the relief of Orin R. McDaniel.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered on this bill, and under the terms of the agreement fifteen minutes on each side is allowed for debate, if desired. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the report read as an explanation of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Has the bill been reported by the committee?

Mr. LANE. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk is unable to find the report.

Mr. LANE. I understand it has been reported.

Mr. BLAND. If the report is not there, I suppose the bill can be explained. I should like to have some explanation of it.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I will say that this claimant lives in my district and I know the man very well. He is now on the pension roll by virtue of a special act, and this bill will carry no additional burden on the Government. The trouble about the discharge was that he went home and became blind from the effect of his service in the Army. The testimony shows that he was unable to return to his regiment and became perfectly blind, or in a manner so, as I am informed he was entirely blind in one eye.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to know if the bill carries any right for arrears of pension?

Mr. LANE. The purpose of the bill is simply to remove the charge of desertion that is now standing against him. The facts are that he went home from the service because of the condition of his eyes, and as he became nearly blind he was unable to return for a year and a half or more, and was therefore marked a deserter. Since then he has been put on the pension roll by special act of Congress because the testimony showed that the injury was incurred in the service.

Mr. BLAND. Then he is already drawing a pension?

Mr. LANE. Yes, by virtue of a special act.

Mr. BLAND. Then what is the necessity for this bill?

Mr. LANE. This man wants to have his record cleared up. He does not want to have a charge of desertion against him, and wants his record corrected in that regard.

Mr. BLAND. A suggestion is made that there was an adverse report in this case.

Mr. LANE. As I understand, the adverse report was made by Mr. LOCKWOOD through mistake, but the committee reconsidered the matter; about this I may be mistaken.

Mr. BLAND. Has there been a favorable report since?

Mr. LANE. That I am unable to say. I will ask my colleague [Mr. NEWBERRY] whether he knows.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I do not know.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is a case that the House ought to investigate somewhat. My understanding is that there has been an adverse report on this bill. I know nothing whatever about the merits of the case, but it does seem to me that a question of this kind ought to be considered rather critically by the House, inasmuch as I am informed, and it is acknowledged, that this bill has been adversely reported by a committee of the House.

Mr. LANE. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will say that I learn from my colleague [Mr. BUSEY], who has immediate charge of this bill, that it was adversely reported, but that the committee afterwards got leave to reconsider the matter, and made a favorable report, in consequence of which the bill was placed upon the Calendar, but about this I do not speak with certainty.

Mr. BLAND. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we ought to have that favorable report read before we act upon the bill, unless we intend to vote it down, as probably we ought to do.

The SPEAKER. The clerks have been unable to find the report, and the Chair would suggest that the bill be laid aside informally until the report can be found.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

D. M. LANG.

The next bill considered was a bill (H. R. 2395) granting a pension to D. M. Lang.

The bill was read and passed.

STERLING KINGSLEY.

The next bill was a bill (H. R. 2396) granting a pension to Sterling Kingsley.

The bill was read.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, are these bills being considered in their regular order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair directed that they should be so called.

Mr. KILGORE. Are they being considered in the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman's question. This is one of a number of Senate and House bills that were favorably reported from the Committee of the Whole and the previous question ordered upon them, with permission for fifteen minutes' debate on each side. There are some twenty or more of those bills that have not been disposed of.

Mr. KILGORE. There has been no Friday night session during this session of Congress.

The SPEAKER. No. This is one of a number of bills that had been reported from the Committee of the Whole during the previous session and not disposed of. The question is, Shall this bill pass?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, is debate permitted?

The SPEAKER. Yes; fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. BLAND. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. WILSON of Missouri) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2396) granting a pension to Sterling Kingsley, have considered the same and report:

The records of the Second Auditor's Office, Treasury Department, show that the claimant served from March 29, 1839, to June 20, 1839, in Capt. I. H. Byrd's company, Seventh Regiment, First Brigade, Florida Mounted Volunteers, Florida Indian war; also that he served from July 20, 1839, to November 21, 1839, in Capt. James B. Johnson's company, Florida Mounted Militia, in the same war.

On February 25, 1888, he filed an application at the Pension Bureau declaring that while serving as above he incurred rupture of right side and blind piles from hard riding; also that about the same time he incurred impaired sight and hearing caused by exposure and hardships incident to the service.

Some testimony was submitted in support of this claim, but not sufficient to meet the requirements of the Pension Bureau, and the applicant now swears he can furnish no more. He further swears that owing to old age and infirmity he is not able to labor sufficiently to support himself and his afflicted wife who has been unable to walk for nineteen years; also that he has no means of support except a small farm and hired help. He is now about 77 years old.

A petition, signed by 13 citizens of Brooks County, Ga., recites that the claimant is old, feeble, and unable to make a living for himself and helpless wife; also that he has not the means to support himself without his labor, a small farm and hired labor being his only source of support.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended so as to spell the claimant's name "Sterling Kingsley," and to change the date of the war in which he served to "1839," and that the bill do pass as so amended.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that with such pension laws as we have, covering almost every kind and character of disability, and under which, it seems, almost anyone can get upon the pension roll through the Pension Office, it is time for Congress to call a halt in this matter of passing special pension bills. I do not know why the application in this case failed at the Pension Office, but the fact that proof could not be adduced there sufficient to justify the granting of a pension under the general law ought to be a sufficient monition to Congress to refuse to pass this special bill. I do not think that we ought to engage further in this special pension legislation, and it does seem to me that it is the duty of Congress to go to work to so amend the pension laws as not only to make an improvement in the administration of the Pension Bureau, but also in the action of Congress itself.

Mr. TURNER. If the gentleman will yield to me a moment, I desire to say to him that Sterling Kingsley, who is named as the beneficiary in this bill, is provided for by the Mexican pension bill which passed the House subsequent to the introduction of this measure, and that I, being the introducer of the bill, have no desire that it shall occupy further time; and now, if the House will permit me, I will withdraw it.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the observations I have already made, I was going on to say that I supposed the bill that we had passed the other day for the benefit of pensioners of the Mexican war would probably cover this case.

I think, sir, this Congress could do no better than follow the precedent laid down in the Mexican pension bill, which provided that pensioners should show absolute destitution; and, sir, if the disability pension bill with reference to the late war were put on the same basis, so that in those cases also pensioners should show absolute destitution, it seems to me it would only be a proper policy.

Mr. TURNER. I misled the gentleman inadvertently. I meant to refer to the Indian pension bill, not the Mexican pension bill.

Mr. BLAND. I think it is about time we should be putting all these cases upon an equal footing. It is the duty of the Pension Committee to report, and of Congress to pass, an act amending the disability pension bill so as to prevent the granting of pensions hereafter, except for the purpose of relieving parties who are entirely destitute; and there should be a further requirement that in the case of pensions heretofore granted no more money shall be drawn until a similar state of facts is shown.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] who introduced this bill requests, as the Chair understands, that it be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. TURNER. I asked not that it be indefinitely postponed, but that I be permitted to withdraw the bill. I would not like to have the record show adverse action by the House.

The SPEAKER. There is a doubt in the mind of the Chair as to the power of a member to withdraw a bill after it has been acted upon by a committee of the House and by the House itself.

Mr. TURNER. Then I move that the bill be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

SAMUEL M. CAMPBELL.

The next business in order was the bill (S. 2593) granting an increase of pension to Samuel M. Campbell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel M. Campbell, of Marion County, Ind., late a private in Company C, Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall this bill pass?

Mr. OATES. I would like to hear the report read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] will be recognized as entitled to fifteen minutes, and the report will be read in his time.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to say to the gentleman——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. OATES. Yes, sir.

Mr. MARTIN. I beg leave to call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama and other members, to the fact that these bills have all been considered in Committee of the Whole where the reports have been read and favorable action taken. In view of this state of facts, I desire to ask whether the gentleman from Alabama desires to insist on the reading of the report?

Mr. OATES. I do not know anything about the consideration of this bill in the Committee of the Whole, as I was not present at the time. The reading of the bill showed it to be a proposition to increase the pension of some one to $30 a month; and as I think one of the great evils of our present pension system consists in paying too large amounts, I wanted to hear some good reason why this increase should be granted. That was my only reason for asking for the reading of the report, and I still desire to hear it.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2593) granting an increase of pension to Samuel M. Campbell, have had the same under consideration and now submit the following report:

This act passed the Senate April 22, 1892. All the facts in the case are set out in the Senate report, which is as follows, to wit:

"The soldier enlisted as a private in the Seventh Indiana Regiment on the 4th day of September, 1861. He served until December 31, 1862, when he was discharged for disability incurred in the service, as shown by his discharge. He reënlisted as a private in the Second Battery Indiana Light Artillery, and served until July 3, 1865, when he was again honorably discharged. He is now a pensioner at the rate of $17 per month, and his claim for increase has been rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that he is now receiving the highest rate that can be technically allowed him for his disability.

"The soldier is 47 years old, and it appears from the evidence that his wife is an invalid unable to work; that neither has any property; there are no children; the two are dependent upon the husband's pension for subsistence. The soldier is unable to do any kind of manual labor.

"It appears from the testimony of his comrades on file, and also from that of physicians, that he is now suffering from varicocele of the left side; also, that he has fistula of the rectum, one opening high up, from which there is a constant discharge. He has a rapid heart, which beats ninety to the minute; is partially blind in the left eye. He has a bronchial affection, an emaciated and haggard appearance. He is described as a physical wreck, and as suffering from total disability.

"Under the circumstances the committee think there ought to be an increase of the pension in this case to the rate of $30 per month, and therefore report a bill for his relief and recommend its passage."

On further examination the Committee on Invalid Pensions find that an examination by the medical board at Indianapolis, October 22, 1890, was made showing his height to be 6 feet and his weight 150 pounds. The board rated him at four-eighteenths for varicocele of left side, two-eighteenths for varicocele of right side, six-eighteenths for disease of cords, seventeen-eighteenths for disease of rectum and piles.

An examination made by the board at Noblesville, Ind., September 9, 1891, shows his weight to be 138 pounds. His physical condition is stated to be as follows:

"Nutrition, very poor; tongue, red, fissured, and pointed; throat highly congested; chest at rest, 34½ inches; suspension, 35½; expulsion, 33½; left chest wall, 18 inches; apex beat of heart, 2 inches to right and 2 below left nipple; action, very irregular and intermitting, and weak, nervous, with mitral deficiency; dry crepitation in apex both lungs, with slight cavernous sounds in apex lung, and bronchial rale in center of chest; there are four external piles inflamed: can not use speculum on account canal fissure; no varicocele at present in either cord or testicle, but there is atrophy of both testicles with thickening cords; stomach very much disturbed and very tender upon pressure. Claimant is in such condition that he has no assurance of living six months, and we believe him to be wholly unable to perform manual labor, and recommend that he be placed on second grade, or $30 per month."

The committee, believing this to be a meritorious case, submit a favorable report and recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, from the reading of this report it would appear that the amount of pension recommended by the committee to be granted in this case is not too much, if the Government is going to undertake to provide for the family of the pensioner. If we are to extend the pension system so as to provide for all the helpless members of a pensioner's family, then in view of the physical condition of this pensioner the amount proposed is little enough. But the main reason offered in the report for the increase seems to be the fact of the poverty of the members of the pensioner's family and their inability to earn a living. I think the principle of paying increased pensions upon any such ground is one that ought not to be adopted, though this case seems to be a pretty hard one.

Mr. MARTIN. The report itself shows that this man, on account of his own physical infirmities, was rated by one board at $29 per month and by the next at $31 per month. That rating had no reference at all to the members of his family.

Mr. OATES. But the Pension Bureau decided that he was not entitled to more than $17 a month.

Mr. MARTIN. It did.

Mr. OATES. And that Bureau is the proper expositor of the law in these cases.

Mr. MARTIN. The fact that, upon all the proof in the case, including the reports by these different medical boards, the Pension Bureau allowed this man only $17 a month is the reason why this bill is here. This is not an extravagant bill. A pension of $30 a month for a man suffering as the report shows this man to be suffering seems to me moderate. The fact that he has a wife to support is one which it seems to me this House ought to know. That fact is not put in the report as a reason why the pension should be increased; but the reports made by the medical examining boards show the amount to which he is really entitled on account of his physical condition.

The fact that the man has a wife to support is only mentioned as an incidental consideration. This man is poor, without any means of support. He is unable to do any manual labor. He has a wife dependent on him. I think I am justified by the circumstances of the case in asking the House to sustain the action of the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee of the Whole in reporting this bill favorably.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, how much time is left in opposition to the bill?

The SPEAKER. Seven minutes, controlled by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. OATES. I yield the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, as I stated a few moments ago, I voted to put upon the pension list soldiers of the Mexican war who are entirely destitute; and I stated further that in my view the disability pension act now in operation ought to be amended so as to conform to the same principle, not only as to pensions hereafter to be granted; with regard to pensions already granted, I believe the same condition should be shown to entitle the pensioner to a continuance of the pension.

Now, here is a case which has been rejected by the Pension Department. Inasmuch as we have to-day a demand for the appropriation of $150,000,000, probably $160,000,000 or $170,000,000—I know not how much—for pensions for the coming fiscal year, and the list is constantly growing under the general law, it does seem to me that a due respect to the impoverished taxpayer demands that Congress should halt with regard to these special bills. Certainly the general statutes are liberal enough with regard to pensions. The medical boards usually prove to be equally liberal. Yet when, under these circumstances, applicants fail to get the amount they ask for, Congress is still besieged with these private bills proposing increase of pensions.

I am inclined to think that this House ought not to pass a single private pension bill unless the case be a very extraordinary one. Are we ever going to come to a halt in reference to these bills? Is there never to be an end of this pension business until the Government is bankrupt and the taxpayers rise in revolution? We are now in such a financial condition that we can not appropriate sufficient money for the public service. Already it is shown that the Treasury Department has withheld $8,000,000 appropriated for what were supposed to be necessary expenditures in connection with public buildings; and we know the reason that this amount has been withheld is a deficit in the public Treasury.

River and harbor improvements all over the country have ceased to go into execution; contracts have not been made, because we have not the money. Persons employed upon such improvements are not paid because we have not the money. We have no money because of the extraordinary squandering by Congress on pensions. Yet we are met here from day to day with private pension cases without limit—cases which have been rejected in the Department, where it is known more liberality is exercised than ought to be.

Mr. Speaker, instead of passing bills of this kind we ought to call a halt and take a few steps backward. We ought to insist on the Pension Committee of the House reporting a bill amending the disability pension law, so as to harmonize with the act passed the other day with regard to pensions to soldiers of the Mexican war. We should require these parties to show not only disability but absolute destitution, before the pension can be granted. I do hope that in view of the condition of the public Treasury, and of the many frauds which are committed under the existing laws with regard to pensions, we shall call a halt upon these measures so that there may be an end to these appeals to Congress for the passage of special bills. Why should this soldier be placed above other soldiers? Why should a certain number of pensioners be required to submit to the general laws, while others are made a special class, and because, perhaps, they have friends in Congress, are not only treated as more deserving, but their pensions increased more than double the amount received by others. This is wrong in principle and wrong in practice.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], who has just taken his seat, have been directed, it seems to me, to the subject of our general pension legislation, and not to the merits of this bill. Should we call a halt upon this particular measure, presenting the merits that it does, simply on account of considerations that might be urged against the passage of general pension legislation? Or shall we do such justice to this man as the report of the committee shows that he deserves?

I trust I may be allowed another suggestion. The amounts paid by the Government in pensions have not been very largely increased on account of private pension bills. Even when the greatest number of these bills have been passed by previous Congresses, the amount of increase from this source was not very large. The increase on account of private pension bills reported in this Congress by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, has been very moderate. Although, of course, members of our committee are liable to error, these bills have been examined with very great care. We made the resolve to report to this House no bill as to which the members of the committee, each and all, could not, under the responsibility of their official oaths, ask the House to pass it.

The question here is not in regard to general pension legislation, but in regard to the merits of this bill. Here is a man who has exhausted every means of relief afforded by the general law. The Pension Office upon a mere technicality has refused to allow him what the medical boards who have examined his physical condition reported that he should be allowed. He now comes to Congress to ask, not for more than the medical boards have awarded him, but simply what those boards recommend should be allowed, and what the Pension Office (as we think without sufficient reason) has refused to him.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for debate on this bill is exhausted.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLAND) there were—ayes 46, noes 28.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. BLAND and Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I believe I will demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 79, nays 64, not voting 186; as follows:

By Mr. OUTHWAITE: A resolution directing the investigation into the use and control of certain historical documents in the State Department—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. SCOTT: A resolution requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish certain information regarding certain public buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. BAKER: A bill (H. R. 10021) for the relief of Sylvester S. Van Sickel, a captain of the Twelfth Missouri Cavalry Volunteers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BOWMAN: A bill (H. R. 10022) granting a pension to William Holden—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BROOKSHIRE: A bill (H. R. 10023) to pension Abraham Lane—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10024) to remove the charge of desertion against George B. Thompson—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10025) to make and correct the military record of Sylvester Weaver—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10026) to correct the military record of George Brown—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CHIPMAN: A bill (H. R. 10027) for the relief of William E. Tew—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10028) to grant an honorable discharge to Franklin Benham—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DE FOREST: A bill (H. R. 10029) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Charles A. Whitlock—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FUNSTON: A bill (H. R. 10030) for the relief of Tazwell C. Merrill—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10031) to place the name of James Sinkey on the pension roll—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HITT: A bill (H. R. 10032) granting a pension to Mrs. Ellen F. Miller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JOSEPH: A bill (H. R. 10033) granting a pension to Sebastian Maxsam—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MILLIKEN: A bill (H. R. 10034) for the relief of Elmer Stickle—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10035) for the relief of Adam Ball—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PERKINS: A bill (H. R. 10036) granting an increase of pension to Chauncey Welton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BAKER: Petition and resolutions of the Methodist Episcopal and Presbyterian churches of Cawker City, Kans., in favor of Sabbath closing of the World's Fair—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

By Mr. BELDEN: Memorial of Gardner H. Wheeler and others, of Syracuse, N. Y., representing the Grand Lodge of Independent Order of Good Templars, stating that the sale of intoxicants at the World's Columbian Exposition would be a public peril and national disgrace and against the laws of the State of Illinois—to the Select Committee on the Columbia Exposition.

By Mr. BELTZHOOVER: Six petitions of citizens of Pennsylvania, as follows: Of 1,800 citizens of Cumberland and York Counties, of members of West Street Methodist Episcopal Church of York, of 475 members of Zion Lutheran Church of York, of the members of Ridge Avenue Episcopal Church of York, of the First Presbyterian Church of York, and of citizens of Shiremanstown, all against opening the Columbian Exposition on Sunday—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 5, 1893.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 12, 1892, a letter from the Chief of Engineers submitting a report, with two maps, from Capt. O. M. Carter, Corps of Engineers, relative to the condition of the present ship channel between Cumberland Island, Georgia, and Fernandina, Fla.; which was read.

Mr. CALL. I ask that that communication be referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Commerce, and printed.

Mr. FRYE. The communication is accompanied by two maps. Is there any necessity to print the maps?

Mr. CALL. I should hardly think so.

Mr. FRYE. It would cause considerable delay to require the maps to be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication from the Secretary of War, together with the accompanying papers, will be printed except the maps, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CALL. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of June 1, 1892, a copy of a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, relative to the employment of attorneys or agents by Indians for obtaining recognition of claims against the United States; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of December 20, 1892, a list of Indian depredation claims already filed in the Court of Claims, the number of cases entitled to priority of consideration, and the amounts of judgments rendered, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Select Committee on Indian Depredations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a report of the operations of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the year 1892, in compliance with the requirements of section 11 of the act approved May 29, 1884, for the establishment of that Bureau; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3568) providing for the establishment and enforcement of rules and regulations for the use and navigation of United States canals and similar works of navigation, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. COKE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9824) to amend "An act to promote the construction of a safe deep-water harbor on the coast of Texas," approved February 9, 1891, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9930) for the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River, reported it with an amendment.

RAFT-TOWING ON THE GREAT LAKES.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report back favorably, without amendment, the joint resolution (S. R. 124) directing the Secretary of War to investigate the subject of raft-towing on the Great Lakes and their connecting waters. I was requested by the committee to ask immediate consideration, as the commission should be appointed before the spring opens.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the joint resolution be read for information, then, subject to objection.

Mr. FRYE. It is very simple.

After reading, the Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the joint resolution as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to appoint a board, to consist of three officers of the Engineer Corps of the Army, to investigate the subject of raft-towing on the Great Lakes and their connecting waters, and to report to Congress as to what restrictions, if any, should be placed upon the size and manner of constructing and towing rafts upon the Great Lakes and their connecting waters.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. IRBY introduced a bill (S. 3671) for the relief of Louisa G. Heyward and others; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

CLAIM OF W. L. HARDY AND OTHERS.

Mr. GEORGE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to communicate to the Senate the present status of the claim of W. L. Hardy, John L. Carter, and William T. Holland against the Government of Spain for damages occasioned by their illegal arrest on board the brig Georgiana off the coast of Yucutan by a Spanish war ship in May, 1850, and their subsequent imprisonment; what obstacles exist to the enforcement of said claim and what action, if any, is needed to be taken by Congress in reference to the settlement of the same.

PROPOSED SUSPENSION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. HILL. I submit a resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the Senate be directed to transmit to the honorable the Secretary of State a copy of Senate bill No. 3513, now pending in this body, entitled "A bill for the suspension of immigration for one year," and that the Secretary of State be, and is hereby, respectfully requested to inform the Senate at his earliest convenience whether the provisions of the said bill absolutely suspending immigration for the period of one year are in conflict with any treaties now existing between the United States and any foreign countries; and, if so, with what countries, and any further information which he may deem necessary for the information of the Senate in relation to the propriety of the enactment of the said bill in its present form.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the resolution may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over and be printed, objection being made.

GERMAN LABOR STATISTICS.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to transmit to the Senate the report of Mr. W. H. Edwards, consul-general at Berlin, on the labor statistics of the German trades union for the year 1891.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 570) to provide for the removal of the remains of the late Ensign D. F. Terrill, United States Navy, from Sitka, Alaska, to his home in the State of Mississippi; and

An act (S. 3059) for the relief of the Old Dominion Steamship Company.

COINAGE OF SILVER.

Mr. McPHERSON. I give notice that on Monday morning, immediately after the routine morning business, I desire to make some observations upon the joint resolution which I had the honor to introduce, being the joint resolution (S. R. 126) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend all purchases of silver bullion as provided in the act of July 14, 1890, if I can have the indulgence of the Senate at that time without interfering with the pending business before the body.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House has passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 2187) granting a pension to Margaret M. Rice; and

A bill (S. 2593) granting an increase of pension to Samuel M. Campbell.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

A bill (H. R. 9487) to amend an act approved April 22, 1890, authorizing Natchitoches Cane River Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across Cane River, in Louisiana.

A bill (H. R. 9488) to amend an act approved March 2, 1891, authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River, Louisiana, by the Rapides Bridge Company, limited; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 112) to print and bind 2,000 extra copies each of the drill regulations for infantry, cavalry, and artillery.

CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIAN PAYMENTS.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to call up the joint resolution (S. R. 119) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to retain and cover into the Treasury certain moneys, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is a House joint resolution, No. 166, in exactly the same terms as the joint resolution reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs and on the Calendar. I ask unanimous consent to substitute the House joint resolution for the pending joint resolution reported from the Senate committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. Res. 166) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to cover back into the Treasury $48,800 of the appropriation to Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to retain and cover back into the Treasury $48,800 of the appropriation made by Congress to pay the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians for their interest in lands of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Reservation, dated March 3, 1891; which amount has been ascertained, by a recount of the allottees of the Cheyennes and Arapahoes, to be by that amount more than is due the Choctaws and Chickasaws upon the purchase and settlement for their interest.

Mr. PLATT. I propose an amendment to the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the joint resolution the following proviso:

Provided, however, That neither the passage of the original act of appropriation to pay the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians for their interest in the lands of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Reservation, dated March 3, 1891, nor of this joint resolution shall be held in any way to commit the Government to the payment of any further sum to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians for any alleged interest in the remainder of the lands situated in what is commonly known and called the leased district.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Connecticut will not insist on that amendment. I take it that this Congress can not undertake to limit the power of any future Congress to determine whether the Government owes the Choctaws and Chickasaws for any other land in the Indian Territory. If any future Congress believes there is anything due those Indians for any future claim that Congress will settle the question for itself, and this Congress ought not to undertake to limit that power.

But my material objection to the amendment is that, while I regard it as amounting practically to nothing, if the joint resolution is amended now it must go back to the House of Representatives, and the embarrassed condition of public business in that body and the short time that is now before us would render it next to impossible to get up the measure for consideration there.

For that reason, as the amendment can have no bearing whatever upon the joint resolution now pending, I hope the Senator from Connecticut will not insist on the amendment, but will allow the joint resolution to pass without being encumbered and having to go back to the other House.

Mr. PLATT. I entertained the hope that the Senator who called up the joint resolution would not object to this amendment. I do not think there is anything to the point he makes that it would probably embarrass the passage of the joint resolution when it went back to the other House. I do not know how much I may be out of order in making the suggestion I am now making, but I think the other House ought to adopt the amendment, and that it probably would do so.

I have no desire by discussion to delay action upon the joint resolution, but I should like to make a little statement as to what the amendment means. Senators will probably remember that we had a pretty full and extensive discussion of the question as to whether the President should pay to the Choctaws and Chickasaws an appropriation which was inserted by an amendment in an appropriation act, and that at the last session the Senate took the view that no further legislation was needed. The attention of Congress had been called to that appropriation by a message from the President, who detailed certain objections that lay in his mind against the payment of the money; but the Senate, after discussion, thought no further legislation necessary. Therefore I suppose it is entirely profitless to bring up that matter again.

I will say, however, that the action of the Senate did not change my mind at all as to the propriety of the payment of that appropriation, and if that stood by itself, helped out as it would be to some extent by this joint resolution, I should say nothing further on the subject. It will be remembered that when this matter was before Congress at the last session I contended that there was $50,000 more carried by the appropriation than upon any theory or basis adopted by the advocates of the measure it could possibly be made to amount to. But that made no difference to the Senate. It voted practically to pay the whole sum, notwithstanding it was $50,000 more than anybody claimed it ought to be. At this session the President calls attention once more to the matter in his message, and speaks of the fact that there was $50,000 too much in the appropriation. He says:

> My special message was intended to call the intention of Congress to the subject, and in view of the fact that it is conceded that the appropriation proceeded upon a false basis as to the amount of lands to be paid for, and is by $50,000 in excess of the amount they are entitled to (even if their claim to the land is given full recognition at the rate agreed upon), I have not felt willing to approve the deed, and shall not do so, at least until both Houses of Congress have acted upon the subject.

He then goes on to say in his message:

> I desire further to call the attention of Congress to the fact that the recent agreement concluded with the Kiowas and Comanches relates to lands which were a part of the "leased district," and to which the claim of the Choctaws and Chickasaws is precisely that recognized by Congress in the legislation I have referred to. The surplus lands to which this claim would attach in the Kiowa and Comanche Reservation is 2,500,000 acres, and at the same rate the Government will be called upon to pay to the Choctaws and Chickasaws for these lands $3,125,000. This sum will be further augmented, especially if the title of the Indians to the tract now Grier County, Tex., is established.

When this matter was in discussion before the Senate at the last session one of the objections I made to reaffirming, as it were, the appropriation was that it would be held to be a precedent upon which the Choctaws and Chickasaws would claim the same amount of payment for all the balance of the lands which were similarly situated. Several Senators who discussed the matter, especially the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], said that they would not regard it as such, and I think the Senator from Arkansas said he would not regard it as a precedent. Yet I am satisfied that it will be regarded as a precedent, and that unless something in the nature of this amendment is adopted at this time we shall have the claim of the Choctaws and Chickasaws presented for payment as to all the other lands just the same as the claims were presented to the lands from which the Cheyennes and Arapahoes were removed by the agreement.

Agreements have been made by which the Wichitas are to be removed and by which the Kiowas, Comanches, and Apaches are to be removed, and the matter will come up at once whether the same amount shall not be paid to the Choctaws and Chickasaws for the remainder of the lands similarly situated as was paid in the case of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Reservations. Whatever Senators may say here, it will be presented to Congress as being a matter which Congress has passed upon, and it will be claimed that thereby Congress has recognized the right of these Indians to have the same amount of payment for the other lands.

All that I desire is the affirmance of the statements of Senators when this matter was under discussion, that the appropriation for payment to the Choctaws and Chickasaws for the Cheyenne and Arapahoe lands shall not be regarded as a precedent and that there may be some legislative declaration to that effect. That is all I mean by the amendment. It does not foreclose the question whether they are to be paid hereafter; it simply says that nothing we have done or shall do to-day will commit the Government. I do not think the Senator from Arkansas ought to object to it. I do not see how he can. That is all I ask.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have no disposition to prolong this discussion. The simple facts in the case are these: When about two years ago Congress appropriated money to pay the Chickasaws and Choctaws for their claims for certain lands occupied by the Cheyennes and Arapahoes there was a deduction made from the rate of $1.25 an acre for the entire tract, for homesteads to be given to each of the Cheyennes and Arapahoes who lived in the territory, of 160 acres of land each. The Indian agent at the time estimated that the number of those Indians was about 600. The estimate for the deduction was upon that basis. When the President declined to pay the money for certain reasons, which he brought to the attention of Congress subsequently in a special message, the statement was made by the Senator from Connecticut at that time that the number of those Indians had proved to be 850 and not 600, and that therefore there ought to be a greater deduction than that which had been previously made, by the amount of $50,000.

As I understood at that time, it was not accurately known what number of Indians were among those. It subsequently turned out that there were 840, not 850, and not 600. These 840 Chickasaws and Choctaws, as I believe it is claimed, did not all live south of the Canadian, and were not entitled to homesteads in that case; but waiving that point, to get rid of an objection which had been made by the opponents of the appropriation, and to be perfectly fair, the proposition of the pending joint resolution is that there shall be rebated in favor of the Government the amount of money necessary to cover the additional homesteads of the 240 other Indians. There certainly can be no objection to it on the part of the Government. If anybody has a right to object to it the Indians have. I understand they believe now that the original computation made was the correct one, and that the 240 Indians in excess of the 600 were really not entitled to homesteads in this tract of country; but for the purpose of buying their peace, for the purpose of settling this controversy they are willing to yield the point, whether it is right or not, and to abate this much of their claim. This is all there is of it.

I regret to see the joint resolution encumbered with any sort of an amendment, because I would prefer to have the matter disposed of and not have to take the chances of sending it back to the House of Representatives. But as the Senator from Connecticut insists on it, I shall not object further to his amendment, and will agree that it shall be made to the joint resolution, if it meets the approval of the rest of the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has alluded to some remarks I made when the original joint resolution was pending. I was about to seek the floor to suggest to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] what he has said in the conclusion of his speech, that he should not object to this amendment of the resolution. I think it would be perfectly fair to those Indians to say to them what the amendment proposes in future negotiations. When I advocated the joint resolution originally adopted I expressly stated, as the Senator from Connecticut has repeated to-day, that I considered this as an equitable and not a legal claim, and that I regretted the phraseology in the original joint resolution, which intimated that it was a good claim in law. That it was an equitable claim I thought I made clear—I certainly did to myself—and being an equitable claim, it was just what those who dealt with it as honorable men should deem as fair. The men who determined that $1.25 an acre should be paid were the very men who were asked to reconsider and repeal that law, and upon precisely the same evidence, which I thought did not justify an annulment of the law itself. But I said—and that is the ground of my appeal to the Senator from Arkansas, which he has taken out of my mouth—whenever this matter comes up again, if those who deal with it anew shall believe that $1.25 an acre was too much for that equitable claim, they will have it in their power to adjust it in all future negotiations.

I thought then—I do not know whether I said it in my remarks—that it was too much for simply that part of the claim, but not too much for the whole equity. It came in at $1.25 an acre, following the precedent of the Creeks and Seminoles, which seemed to me not to be precisely like this. One of those tribes had a claim in law, for there was a recital in the deed that they ceded the land for the exclusive use of the Indians; in the other case it was not recited in the deed, but recited in the preamble. But these Indians decided absolutely in equity without any recital anywhere. It was, however, perfectly evident to my mind that it was part of one original transaction, that these Indians were induced, precisely like the others, to part with their land for a nominal sum, under the belief that it was to be appropriated to the use of Indians whom they were willing to have come among them. But the necessity of the subsequent treatment of the Indians on the part of the Government was such that the land was applied to another purpose, and in honor we were bound to make the Choctaws and Chickasaws whole.

That is the ground upon which I put it, and I think it to be absolutely free from any inference on the part of the Indians in subsequent negotiations that the United States promised them a dollar and a quarter an acre. We simply say to them, "Hereafter we will treat this subject with you thoroughly and openly as if it were a new subject, applicable simply to the remainder of this reservation."

I think it is wise that this amendment should be attached to the joint resolution, and I am very glad that the Senator from Arkansas has consented to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senate joint resolution 119, on the same subject, will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the joint resolution and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. PLATT were appointed.

WHEELOCK SIMMONS AND WIFE.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 3382. It is a mere private bill and will take but a moment. It was reported unanimously by the Committee on Public Lands, and is merely correcting a mistake in the description of lands in a patent by the Interior Department.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3382) to authorize a corrected patent to be issued for the donation land claim of Wheelock Simmons and wife.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, in line 5, after the word "patent," to insert "to show upon its face that it is issued in lieu of the patent heretofore issued to them;" in line 16, after the word "south," to strike out "thirty-nine" and insert "fifty-nine;" and in line 24, after the words "thirty-nine and," to strike out "ninety-eight" and insert "ninety-three," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be issued to said Wheelock Simmons and wife a corrected patent, to show upon its face that it is issued in lieu of the patent heretofore issued to them, for the lands described in a special plat of a survey of their donation land claim approved November 8, 1862, and certified by the surveyor-general of Oregon to the local land office August 8, 1867, described as follows, to wit: Beginning at a point 5.5 chains west and 15.65 chains north from the northeast corner of section 1, township 1 south, range 3 west; thence west 40 chains; thence south 59°, west 24 chains; thence south 25°, west 20.13 chains; thence south 30° 30', east 48.25 chains; thence east 26.50 chains; thence south 1.75 chains; thence east 58.85 chains; thence north 57.75 chains; thence west 39.93 chains; thence north 15.65 chains to the place of beginning; to be divided between husband and wife, as in the original patent, and that said patent shall have the same force and effect as to the title of all purchasers and grantees of any portion of said land claim from said patentees, or either of them, as if the same had been executed and delivered at the date of the execution of said patent, dated April 20, 1866.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

M. P. DEADY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order, and the first bill will be stated.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the Calendar is taken up, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate for the present consideration of Order of Business 1162, being Senate bill 3537, a small bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3537) for the relief of M. P. Deady.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, in line 3, before the name "M. P. Deady," to strike out "the said;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That M. P. Deady, United States judge for the district of Oregon, may, at his option, resign as such district judge on or after the 4th of March next, and thereupon shall receive the same salary during the period of his natural life as he is now receiving, in the same manner as if he had reached the age of seventy years at the time of his resignation, as provided by section 714 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read, which is very short.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope the report will be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. MITCHELL December 20, 1892:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3537) entitled "A bill for the relief of M. P. Deady," having had the same under consideration, beg to submit the following report:

The following facts have been made to appear to your committee by the records of the Senate, and other evidence:

M. P. Deady was, on the 15th day of March, A. D. 1853, appointed by President Pierce an associate justice of the Territory of Oregon, under which appointment and by a subsequent appointment of February 1, 1854, and confirmation by the Senate on the 4th day of February, 1854, he served as such associate justice until the admission of Oregon as a State, February 14, 1859. On the 7th day of March, A. D. 1859, he was appointed by President Buchanan, and on the 9th day of the same month confirmed by the Senate, United States district judge for the district of Oregon, and under such appointment he has served in such capacity to the present time, a period of nearly thirty-four years, making a continuous service as a United States judge of nearly forty years.

It has further been made plain to your committee that, by reason of bodily ailments which are permanent, Judge Deady has been rendered physically unable to longer perform the duties of such office. It is further shown that he will not reach the age of 70 years until the year 1894.

Therefore your committee, while recognizing the distinguished judicial services rendered by Judge Deady during his long service and his eminence as a jurist, in view of the foregoing facts, report back the bill (S. 3537) with the following amendments and so amended recommend its passage:

First amendment. Strike out the preamble.

Second amendment. Strike out the following words in line 3 of the bill: "the said."

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was rejected.

DELIVERY AND SALE OF ICE ON SUNDAY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The bill (H.R. 8367) regulating the delivery and sale of ice within the District of Columbia on the Sabbath day, commonly known as Sunday, was announced as first in order.

Mr. MORGAN. Let that bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF JOHN ROACH.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yesterday, when Order of Business 790, Senate bill 457, was reached, I happened to be out of the Chamber, and at the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] the bill went over without prejudice. I ask that it be taken up now.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is on the present Calendar.

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 457) for the relief of the assignees or legal representatives of John Roach, deceased, to pay balance due on the United States steamer Dolphin.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, in line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$45,447.32" and insert "$28,160.25;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be paid to George W. Quintard and George E. Weed, assignees of John Roach, deceased, or the legal representatives of said Roach, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $28,160.25 for labor and material furnished for the United States gunboat Dolphin, by said Roach, which sum is in full settlement and payment of all claims and demands on said gunboat Dolphin by said George W. Quintard and George E. Weed, assignees of John Roach, deceased, or the legal representatives of said Roach, for labor and material furnished to said gunboat Dolphin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. Is there a report accompanying that bill?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, there is a report; but the report is very lengthy, including the report made by the committee of the Senate, which occupies but a few pages, but it refers to the House report and makes it a part of the report of the Senate committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the Senate report be read. That will give us an explanation of the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. The two pages of the Senate report will, I think, state the case.

Mr. VEST. I should like to know how it happens that this claim comes up now if there was a contract between these parties and the Government?

Mr. MITCHELL. This is merely to pay the balance due under the contract.

Mr. VEST. I do not know that this is necessary. If there was a contract I suppose Congress appropriated the amount to pay the contract price.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that the first two pages of the report be read, which include what the Senate committee say on the subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read from the report submitted by Mr. MITCHELL May 25, 1892, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 457) "for the relief of the assignees or legal representatives of John Roach, deceased, to pay balance due on the United States steamer Dolphin," having had the same under consideration, beg to submit the following report:

This bill proposes to pay to George W. Quintard and George E. Weed, assignees of John Roach, deceased, or the legal representatives of said Roach, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $45,447.32, balance alleged to be due on the construction of the gunboat Dolphin.

On November 10, 1885, the Dolphin was received and accepted by the proper officers of the United States, and went into the use of the Government as of that date. There was then due the contractor, John Roach, the sum of $73,160.75. Of this amount $25,000 was a portion of the appropriation of March 3, 1885, for the care of the Government vessel Puritan. (See 23 Stats., 459.) Of this total amount the sum of $45,000 was paid the assignees of said Roach September 10, 1886, leaving the balance of $28,160.75. This amount was deducted by the Government on the ground, believed to be true at the time by the Secretary of the Navy, that the Dolphin had not been properly constructed, and that she was structurally weak, and although the Government had accepted the vessel, it was insisted that unless this deduction was made by the assignees, no amount whatever would be paid, and claimant would be compelled to go into the Court of Claims for the purpose of establishing his right to the $73,160.75 claimed. Under this state of the case it was agreed to accept the said $45,000, and a receipt in full was given.

Subsequent history clearly demonstrated beyond the possibility of controversy that the claim that the Dolphin was not properly constructed or was structurally weak was not well founded. This clearly appears from the annual report of the honorable Secretary of the Navy, dated November 30, 1889, which contains the following paragraph in regard to the Dolphin:

"The record of the Dolphin, which vessel began with a speed of 15.11 knots on her contract trial, and which has recently returned from a cruise around the world, is not less satisfactory. The results of the inspection of the vessel, after she has been three years and nine months in commission, are reported by the board of inspection, under date of October 2, 1889, as follows:

"The material used in the construction of this vessel and the workmanship speak well for the designers and the builders. Aside from the slight repairs to her bearings she is ready for another cruise. By the most liberal estimates the work in the construction department can be done inside of a month. This, the first of the new Navy, makes a splendid showing for structural strength, fine material, and good care.

"Her captain reports that she can average 14 knots an hour for any length of time, and under favorable circumstances she can run 16 at sea.

"In the course of her cruise the Dolphin has run 58,000 miles in twenty months and has been under steam 9,000 hours. In this prolonged run she has been stopped for repairs but once, and then for only two hours. This performance is probably without a parallel in the history of naval vessels and bears conclusive testimony to the high skill of American artisans and the excellence of their work. Nor is it the less remarkable in view of the confident predictions with which, at the outset of her career, the official condemnation of the vessel was somewhat prematurely pronounced by expert and by inexpert judges.

"It is therefore proved by the test of actual cruising that the first modern experiments of the Department have come close to the highest standard of speed which had been reached at the date of their design, and that in structural strength, endurance, and workmanship they are not inferior to anything now afloat."

The record of the Dolphin since November 30, 1889, when the above was written, has been equally good.

It will thus be seen no vessel belonging to the Government has ever been put to a greater test than has the Dolphin, and it has thus been demonstrated, as stated, that she was properly constructed, and that, therefore, the Government in withholding payment and deducting the $28,169.75 did an act of injustice to claimant, and in the opinion of your committee the Government should now pay this $28,169.75.

The claimant claims interest on the same and also on the $20,000 detained from March 3, 1885, being moneys due on account of the Puritan, as hereinbefore stated, and this has been allowed by the House committee of two separate Congresses. Your committee, however, are not inclined to allow any interest.

The facts in connection with this case are substantially set out in a report heretofore made by the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives, being No. 2166, first session Fifty-first Congress, and which is hereto attached and adopted in so far as it does not conflict with the conclusions at which your committee have arrived.

Mr. McPHERSON. My attention has just been called to this bill, and I think it ought to go over. It seems the bill has been reported from the Committee on Claims, a most competent committee, it is true, who, I have no doubt, have investigated this case with great care and have come to the conclusion stated in the report which has been read. Cases of this character heretofore have been referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs for investigation, and this is purely a matter which pertains to that committee. It is practically a question of fact, and involves no legal question at all.

If I remember aright a bill of this character was once presented to the Committee on Naval Affairs, who, I think, did not decide to report it favorably.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. McPHERSON. I will allow the Senator to interrupt me for a correction if I am wrong.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does not the Senator remember that the Committee on Naval Affairs took no action whatever upon the bill, but suggested its reference to the Committee on Claims as being a subject appropriate for the consideration of that committee?

Mr. McPHERSON. I thank the Senator for his statement, because it simply confirms what I have already stated, that the Committee on Naval Affairs took no action on this bill. I remember distinctly that such a bill was before the Committee on Naval Affairs. I do not think that I was present at the meeting of the committee which shirked the responsibility of an investigation of this question; but it is well known to every Senator that before the change of administration from a Democratic administration in 1889 there was a great deal of criticism visited upon the Secretary of the Navy, who, upon the report of a competent board of naval officers, declared that the Dolphin was structurally weak. Is it now true that another board of naval officers has been able to ascertain that the ship is a remarkably strong one? Here is an antagonism as between these two boards of naval officers with respect to this ship.

With respect to all these cases regarding naval affairs, even the old resurrected cases of ships built during the late civil war, coming here day after day for increased sums of money for expenditures said to have been incurred by reason of some default on the part of the Government, and we are paying out thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars upon cases which have absolutely been settled and receipted for two or three times over. To make myself more clearly understood, I can call to mind now two or three cases in which settlements had been made with the contractors, and they had receipted in full to the Government for all demands. They came in and asked for a second board of naval officers, and another settlement was made and another receipt in full given. We then supposed that we had settled all the equities of the cases, but we find now more tribunals call upon us for a third installment of money out of the public Treasury.

I have not examined this bill to the extent that I should like to do, and I do not care to interfere with the wish of the Committee on Claims. I shall, therefore, content myself, if the Senate is disposed to consider the bill this morning, by voting against it, but I think the bill ought to go over, and I think that certain members of the Committee on Naval Affairs, who have given this matter a great deal of study, ought to take it up and give the Senate the benefit of such information as they may have.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to say a word?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I find the record confirms my suggestion to the Senator from New Jersey. The bill was introduced on the 10th of December, 1891, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. On the 21st of January, 1892, the Committee on Naval Affairs was discharged from its consideration, and the bill was referred to the Committee on Claims. So there was no consideration whatever given to the bill by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

I was afraid the Senator from New Jersey would give the impression that there had been an investigation in that committee and an adverse opinion on the bill, which was not the case, because it was distinctly understood that the bill would not be considered by the Naval Committee, but would be referred to the Committee on Claims, from which this report was made.

Mr. McPHERSON. I think I have some faint recollection of what transpired in the Committee on Naval Affairs, and if I am not reporting the secrets of the committee, I would say that, if I remember correctly, it was the impression of the Committee on Naval Affairs that no appropriation of money should be made for such a purpose under the circumstances.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON], or the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], or the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], whosoever may know the facts, if the justice of this claim depends to any extent upon the perfection of the construction of the vessel out of which the claim grows?

Mr. McPHERSON. Most assuredly that is the sole question; and let me say further to the Senator that some of these vessels, and I think probably the Dolphin, were built upon plans and specifications furnished by Mr. Roach himself. So Mr. Roach practically, for a certain specified sum of money, gave the Government just such a ship as he pleased. Mr. Whitney, while Secretary of the Navy, upon the recommendation, after full investigation, by a board of naval officers that the ship was structurally weak and did not answer the requirements of the contract, refused to settle for the ship. Subsequently a bill was introduced here to appropriate a sufficient sum of money to pay the full demand of Mr. Roach or his assignees or legal representatives, and this bill, as I understand, is to close up the whole transaction and pay for this ship just the same as though she had been in all respects acceptable to the Navy Department, whose duty it was to accept her from the hands of the builders or reject her.

Mr. HARRIS. It seems to me that if the justice of this claim and the question of whether it should be allowed or not depends upon the perfection of the structure of the vessel turned out, it ought of necessity to go to the Committee on Naval Affairs. If it be a simple claim, and if there is no such technical question as that involved in it, then I think it is eminently proper that the bill should have gone to the Committee on Claims, but if the question suggested by the Senator from New Jersey is involved in it, and the allowance or disallowance of the claim shall depend upon that question, it ought to go to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and that committee ought to investigate it thoroughly before any action by the Senate upon it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, that is a question which would have been more properly raised in the Senate when this bill was introduced. Perhaps, however, it can be raised at this time. The bill came to the Committee on Claims; it has been investigated by that committee, and in the view of the committee it is a very simple, plain case, notwithstanding all that has been said heretofore in regard to the Dolphin.

As stated by the Senator from New Jersey, there were diverse reports of boards designated by the Secretary of the Navy to examine this ship. One of those reports was to the effect that she was "structurally weak"—that was the language of the report, "structurally weak." The report of the committee does not criticise the late Secretary of the Navy, but upon the contrary it states that it was believed at the time by the Secretary of the Navy that this boat was structurally weak. Therefore he withheld the sum of $28,169.75, which it was admitted would have been due, and was due under the contract, provided the vessel had been completed according to the contract.

The Government took possession of the vessel—that is a matter of public history—and put her into service. It is a matter of public history known to the Senator from New Jersey and to every other Senator, I presume, that no vessel ever built in this country has ever made any better record than has the Dolphin, a service which has not been confined to a few months or to a trip or two here or there, but, according to the report of the present

Secretary of the Navy incorporated into and made a part of the report of the Senate committee, prior to November 30, 1889.

In the course of her cruise the Dolphin has run 58,000 miles in twenty months, and has been under steam nine thousand hours. In this prolonged run she has been stopped for repairs but once, and then for only two hours. This performance is probably without a parallel in the history of naval vessels, and bears conclusive testimony to the high skill of American artisans and the high excellence of their work. Nor is it the less remarkable in view of the confident predictions with which, at the outset of her career, the official condemnation of the vessel was somewhat prematurely pronounced by expert and by inexpert judges.

It is therefore proved by the test of actual cruising that the first modern experiments of the Department have come close to the highest standard of speed which had been reached at the date of their design, and that in structural strength, endurance, and workmanship they are not inferior to anything now afloat.

The committee adds this comment, which is borne out as a matter of public history:

It will thus be seen no vessel belonging to the Government has ever been put to a greater test than has the Dolphin, and it has thus been demonstrated, as stated, that she was properly constructed and that, therefore, the Government in withholding payment and deducting the $28,169.75 did an act of injustice to claimant, and in the opinion of your committee the Government should pay this $28,169.75.

I will state in this connection that $20,000 of the amount found to be due at the time the Dolphin was accepted by the Government, was an appropriation made on the 4th of March previous, to pay John Roach for certain services in connection with the steamer Puritan. So when this vessel was accepted by the Government there was found to be a total amount of $73,160.75, $20,000 of that sum having been the amount stated by me a moment ago, which was appropriated on the 4th of March. Out of that amount $45,000 was paid, a balance of $28,169.75 being retained.

If it be true, as suggested by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], that this claim involves the question as to whether the Dolphin was or was not structually weak, it does seem to me that, in view of this public history as to the service rendered by this vessel, there ought to be any contention or question by the Senate or any officer of the Government in regard to the payment of this money.

The whole question turns upon the single point that one board had reported that the Dolphin was structurally weak. No vessel which is structurally weak could have ever performed the service which the public records of the country show this vessel has performed. Therefore, if she was not structurally weak—and in the face of this history we must certainly conclude she was not—is it not but an act of simple justice, tardily administered, that this money should be paid?

The House report proposed to allow interest, making the whole sum forty-odd thousand dollars. The Senate committee allows no interest, but simply allows the balance due. The theory that the vessel was structually weak, which was believed to be true, I have no doubt, by the Secretary of the Navy at the time, has been demonstrated beyond question to have been ill-founded. That is all there is in this case.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, I do not wish the Senator from Oregon to get the impression that I am in any manner criticising the present Secretary of the Navy, because of the fact that he has favorably reported this case upon the strength of a report made to him by a board of naval officers. The present Secretary of the Navy is an able officer; his administration has been a distinguished one. Among all the administrations, starting with that of our distinguished friend from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], down to the present time, the present administration of the Navy is perhaps not less to be commended than any which has ever preceded it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I did not understand the Senator from New Jersey at all as criticising the present Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. MCPHERSON. That was precisely what I did think the Senator's remarks meant. But the Senator avoids the point at issue. He knows that there was some criticism visited upon a former administration of this Government by reason of the fact that reports were made by boards of naval officers to the Secretary of the Navy that the Dolphin was structurally weak. It was called political persecution. It proves nothing that the Dolphin may have traveled so many thousand miles. The question is, Can the Dolphin, under a certain amount of power applied to her engines, and under certain conditions of sea way, perform all the conditions that that ship was intended to perform? She might float around the world for twenty years and never be tested to her speed; she might be in that way prevented from coming in contact with heavy seas; and in this way perhaps perform some service; but when you come to test her for the actual necessities of some case which may confront her at some future time, you may find your ship unequal to the emergency.

I claim that nothing has been settled. One board of naval officers, equally competent with the one upon which the Senator from Oregon bases his report, declares the vessel is structurally weak. For that reason the then Secretary of the Navy withheld the appropriation. A second board of naval officers, supported as they are, by the fact that the ship has made a long cruise—and that cruise proves nothing as to the structural strength of the ship—have reported that the money which Mr. Roach would have been entitled to receive had the ship been acceptable to the Navy Department should be paid. I have nothing further to say about the matter.

Mr. MITCHELL. Only one word. It does seem to me that there can be no better way——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The Chair reminds Senators that the Senate is proceeding under the five-minute rule. If there be no objection, however, the Senator from Oregon will be recognized. The Chair hears none.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to make a single remark; and that is, that there is no better way in which the question whether a vessel is or is not structurally weak can be settled than by the service to which the vessel is put.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I should say nothing about this case, but for the fact that it seems to me it proposes to establish a precedent which may do infinite harm in future legislation. I have never been able to appreciate why the Congress of the United States should set aside well established doctrines of equity and law in order to meet the demands of certain claimants.

No principle is better established, and no lawyer would dare to controvert it, than that it is to the interest of the Republic that there should be an end to litigation. If solemn compromises made deliberately without fraud and with full understanding of all the facts upon the proposition of the parties themselves are to be set aside by Congress upon the finding of naval boards or military commissions or anybody else, then there can be no safety, there can be no adjustment finally of questions between the Government of the United States and its citizens. If this Congress takes up this matter in the absence of Mr. Whitney, and without reference to what adjustment was made between the Government when he was Secretary of the Navy and these parties, look in what an attitude the first Administration of Cleveland and of the Navy Department will be placed. It is a criticism upon Mr. Whitney. He, after examination, and after the report of a naval board, said that this vessel was structurally weak; the parties were advised of this objection, and they deliberately made this proposition quoted in the report made by the Senator from Oregon.

APPENDIX C.

Received from the United States the sum of $45,000 in full payment and satisfaction of all claims and demands whatsoever growing out of or in any manner connected, directly or indirectly, with the contract of the undersigned John Roach for the construction of the United States dispatch boat Dolphin, dated July 23, 1883, save and except an unsettled demand of $4,396.24 for "changing shafts," which is reserved for the further consideration and action of the Secretary of the Navy, this settlement not affecting the rights of either party so far as such unsettled demand is concerned. The said payment of $45,000 is in full satisfaction of all claims and demands for or on account of the sum of $25,000 reserved, under and by virtue of the agreement dated November 3, 1885, relating to the completion of the Dolphin, from moneys due the said John Roach on "other transactions," being the balance of appropriation for use of shipyard and care and storage of the monitor Puritan as per act of March 3, 1885 (23 Stat. at L., 459) this settlement being made in pursuance of a proposition from the assignees of John Roach, dated April 30, 1886, and accepted by the Secretary of the Navy, June 25, 1886.

Witness our hands and seals this 10th day of September, A. D. 1886.

JOHN ROACH, [SEAL.]
GEO. W. QUINTARD, [SEAL.]
GEO. E. WEED, [SEAL.]
Assignees of John Roach.

In presence of—
JAMES MOONEY.

Here is a proposition made by the claimant. There is no allegation of fraud, no allegation of deceit, no allegation of concealment of facts; not one single iota of any of the grounds upon which a court would set aside a solemn settlement like this; and the report of the committee, made by the Senator from Oregon, puts it upon the ground not of fraud, not of any equitable jurisdiction, but says that the ruinous delay in the Court of Claims and in the action of Congress induced Mr. Roach to make this settlement.

The language of the committee is:

The judgments of the Court of Claims, affirmed by the Supreme Court after March 3, 1889, and those rendered by the Court of Claims after that day and unappealed from, will not be appropriated for until the end of the present session of Congress, and should a deficiency bill not be passed will go over until the next session of Congress. The crowded dockets of the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court, together with the tardiness of Congress in paying final judgments, combined to make the "law's delay" a practical denial of justice to a man who had assigned for the benefit of his creditors and was anxious to resume business for himself.

Who ever heard before that a court would go in and usurp the judgment once exercised by a claimant, set aside the legitimate action which he had suggested himself, and do it upon the ground that he, having considered all the facts, had done a thing which he ought not to have done?

Why, Mr. President, if we are to adopt this principle there will be no end to litigation. Claimants can come here after they have deliberately proposed in writing to accept a payment and have received the money and used it in their business, and years afterwards say it was a hardship, it turned out that the facts do not seem to have justified the conclusion which we arrived at, and therefore the tax money of the people ought to be paid.

It is not necessary to reiterate what was said by the Senator from New Jersey. One cruise of this vessel does not prove that the allegations of Mr. Whitney were incorrect; but whether incorrect or not, I stand upon the higher plane that after the parties, without fraud, without deceit, without concealment of facts, have made a proposition of settlement with the Government, and the money has been paid and the matter closed, it is an absolute injustice to the Government and to every taxpayer under it to reopen the case.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question, as I can not reply?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. There was $73,160.75, admitted on all hands to be due by the Government, if I am not mistaken, provided the vessel proved to be sound as provided in the contract. The only point is that it was structurally weak, as supposed by the Secretary of the Navy at the time, on the information then before him. If the Senator will examine the report carefully, he will see it shows that on the conclusion reached by the then Secretary of the Navy he absolutely refused to pay a dollar of the $73,000, $20,000 of which had been appropriated a few months before, on another account entirely; and he called upon Messrs. Quintard, or the parties representing Mr. Roach, to submit a proposition as to how much they would take rather than be compelled to go to the Court of Claims for the whole amount, including the $20,000 which had been appropriated for another matter. Then, in pursuance of that, the Senator will find that this proposition was submitted.

Now, the question I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri is this: Suppose it turns out now as a matter of fact, suppose it is demonstrated beyond question, as I think it is, that all parties were laboring under a mistake at that time; that Secretary Whitney was mistaken, and this proposition was submitted, the money accepted and receipt given under that mistake, and in view of that mistake, and because of that mistake, now when it is demonstrated there was a mistake is there any reason why the money should not be paid notwithstanding the receipt in full?

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, no rule of law or equity is better established than that where there is a plain mistake of fact mutually between the parties——

Mr. MITCHELL. That is this case.

Mr. VEST. A court of equity will interfere. But there never was a case before any intelligent chancellor when a judgment of a court or a compromise was set aside because there was a mistake as to conclusions after the facts were known to the parties.

Mr. MITCHELL. The mistake here was as to the fact.

Mr. VEST. But the mistake, I submit, is in the Senator from Oregon when he assumes as conclusive the fact that a mistake did exist because this vessel subsequently made a long cruise and did not sink. That is the mistake. All the facts that existed at the time were known to the parties. These men were not for a single instant imposed upon as to any material fact. They made a claim and asserted it. The Secretary of the Navy refused to pay it. Finally, as a compromise, as an adjustment of the whole affair without fraud, concealment, or the suppression of any fact, they made their own proposition in writing, and said, "We will take $45,000 and close the whole matter rather than have delay." The money was paid to them, and I submit if this claim can be reopened and $28,000 of the tax money of the people paid to these persons it is impossible that there ever can be, under seal or in any other way, a final adjustment made of any claim against the people of the United States.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, this case as it now presents itself, is an appeal to the sense of equity and justice of the Senators on this floor and to the similar sense of justice of the members of the House of Representatives. It is not an attempt to reopen a case decided at law or in equity. If it were it would meet with the fate the Senator from Missouri has suggested. It is appropriately presented at this time as an appeal to the United States to correct a mistake. It is an appeal to the Senator from New Jersey and to the Senator from Missouri and to all other Senators upon this floor to restore to the estate of this dead man $25,000, which was withheld from him by reason of a mistake of fact which is now well established.

It is not necessary and I certainly wish to avoid going into a long discussion of the history of the Dolphin or of Mr. Roach's dealings with the Government, but it is clear upon the facts as they now appear to the world and to the Senate that when Secretary Whitney insisted upon the deduction of $28,000 from the amount which was due the assignees of Mr. Roach, and refused to pay a sum amounting to about $75,000, the facts which made him so insist were mistaken by him. If the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Whitney, were here upon the floor at this time I should confidently appeal to him—the Senator from Oregon would confidently appeal to him—to make the admission that as facts have subsequently appeared this deduction, which was an arbitrary deduction from the amount due the Roach estate, was mistakenly made.

That is the whole case, Mr. President. There is not any doubt about the fact that the Dolphin was not structurally weak, and I believe that Mr. Whitney would make that admission if he were here. I believe that he would make that admission if he were asked the question by either the Senator from Missouri or the Senator from New Jersey.

Now, Mr. President, we have this case: These assignees were endeavoring to save Mr. Roach's estate. They were administering a difficult trust. The estate was heavily involved, and money was necessary in order to enable them to close up the estate. They deemed it impossible for them to get along without the money due them from the Navy Department, and which Mr. Whitney declined to pay unless they would consent to this deduction.

Under these circumstances they consented, and, at his suggestion, made the offer the Senator from Missouri has alluded to, and signed the receipt which the Senator has read. Undoubtedly they are barred at law from recovering in the Court of Claims, or anywhere else, except in the forum of conscience, to which it is now brought for a hearing, and on an appeal to the sense of equity and justice of Senators. Those assignees went on. They succeeded in restoring Mr. Roach's estate to a solvent condition, and there has been saved for his wife and children considerable property. Now we ask under these circumstances that the Congress of the United States will not keep this $28,000, but will give it to the wife and children of Mr. Roach.

I submit the case, Mr. President, with the utmost confidence that the Senator from New Jersey, who does know all these facts, although he seems to have forgotten some of them, will not be willing to keep in the Treasury of the United States the $28,000, but will prefer to do this act of justice towards a dead man and towards the wife and children he has left, and to whom belong what has been saved by the assignees from the wreck of Mr. Roach's estate. I confidently appeal to the Senators to withdraw their opposition and to consent to give to Mr. Roach's heirs the $28,000, which I believe Mr. Whitney knows to-day as well as I know should not have been, under the circumstances, exacted from him.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, permit me to say a single word more in regard to this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey can only proceed by unanimous consent. If there be no objection he will proceed. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, I wish to say as one Senator on this floor that I do not think I can afford to be charitable with the money which belongs to the taxpayers of the United States. I have a great deal of sympathy for Mr. Roach and his wife and children, for whom the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] makes so earnest an appeal, but still I can not afford to vote this money out of the public Treasury without some further assurance that the defect which was pronounced a defect under the administration of Mr. Whitney has been remedied, or that the defect never existed.

The whole question is in a nutshell. It can be easily understood by stating a single fact that when advertisement is made by the Navy Department for the construction of ships they are to have a certain amount of horse-power and a certain amount of speed. When the ship is constructed it is put through a severe test. It is tested up to the requirement of the contract for both power and speed. Mr. Whitney, in accordance with his duty, appointed a board of competent naval officers to go aboard that ship to make the test. They reported, among the defects found in the ship, that she was structurally weak.

It is unnecessary here in this presence to tell any Senator that that is a most serious defect of a ship of war built for war purposes; that if she is structurally weak she is practically condemned and almost absolutely worthless. It is needless to say to the Senate that in a ship structurally weak the machinery can not be kept in working order, and that the lifetime of the ship has been dimished by at least 50 per cent.

That was the state of the case when the present Administration came into power. In justice I think I should say, as regards the report of the present Secretary of the Navy, that nowhere does it appear, I understand, that the present Secretary put the ship Dolphin to the same severe test that Mr. Whitney had put her, but that she had floated around the world, had covered something like 50,000 miles at half speed, as everybody knows; for when a ship is cruising she is cruising under a very low pressure of steam, and generally with auxiliary sail power, and I believe this ship is supplied with sail power. It is really no test at all. The Dolphin is almost a new ship. Even if structurally weak, with great care on the part of the officers, being on board the ship and considering their own safety as well, they would use every precaution in a heavy seaway.

But let me say to the Senator from Oregon a ship is built for the United States Navy at a great cost of money, and it requires also a great cost annually to keep the ship in repair. Until this ship is again subjected to that severe test which the contract required to make her a fit ship for war, I shall object to paying one dollar of this money to the heirs of Mr. Roach.

I have great confidence in the present Secretary of the Navy that if he will appoint a board of officers and put that ship to the severe test the terms of the contract required, and then report to Congress that he considers the ship in all respects up to the terms of the contract, I will willingly vote, if it becomes a matter of equity, to give Mr. Roach's heirs the money.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, just a word. I ask for a vote.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I hope this bill will pass. I do not care to go into an argument sustaining it, for the report of the committee sets out the facts very clearly and the remarks of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] add to the force of the committee's report, if that be possible.

It seemed to me at the time when the proceedings concerning the Dolphin and Mr. Roach's connection with it were had that a great outrage was being practiced upon Mr. Roach. I watched the proceedings very carefully and I think without any prejudice, but it seemed to me then, and it seems to me now, that the treatment which Mr. Roach received as the builder of the Dolphin was by reason of a supposed party exigency; that a victim was required upon the inauguration of a new administration and that Mr. Roach was the most favorably situated for such a sacrifice.

I repeat, Mr. President (my remarks may perhaps be subject to criticism outside of the Chamber at least), that the treatment upon the part of the Government of Mr. Roach was unprecedented in American history, and that it was without any reasonable excuse, except, as I said, that the exigency of the situation seemed to render it necessary that a victim must be slaughtered, and Mr. Roach was the victim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. 7845) defining "options" and "futures," imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and requiring such dealers and persons engaged in selling certian products to obtain license, and for other purposes.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of proceeding with the bill which has been under consideration.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I will say to the Senator from Oregon that I should like very much to have the bill go over until I can make some further investigation into the matter.

Mr. MITCHELL. Very well; if the Senator from New Jersey desires to have the bill go over until to-morrow let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is withdrawn.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE TESTIMONY.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1933) to amend section 860 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. WASHBURN. Will it lead to any discussion?

Mr. WILSON. I think it will not lead to discussion. If so, I shall not press it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. DOLPH. Let it be read for information.

The bill was read; and, there being no objection, the Senate as in the Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That no person shall be excused from testifying in any criminal case or proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended March 2, 1889, and February 10, 1891, on the ground or for the reason that his testimony might tend to criminate himself or to subject him to penalty or forfeiture. But such person shall not be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify in any such case or proceeding: Provided, That no person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill concerning testimony in criminal cases or proceedings based upon or growing out of alleged violations of an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as amended March 2, 1889, and February 10, 1891."

DEALING IN OPTIONS AND FUTURES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7845) defining "options" and "futures," imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and requiring such dealers and persons engaged in selling certain products to obtain license, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. WHITE to strike out the proviso at the end of section 2, in the following words:

Provided, however, That such contract or agreement shall not be made, settled for by delivery or settlement of differences, or by any other mode of performance or settlement in or upon any board of trade, produce, cotton, merchants', or other exchange, or other commercial association, or in any place or upon any premises where price quotations of said articles are announced, bulletined, or published, nor be subjected to the rules or regulations of any such board, exchange, or other commercial association.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I presume this will be as convenient a time as any for the Senate to listen to some observations which I wish to make in regard to the pending bill, and which may properly be made in part with reference to the pending amendment.

The influences which have promoted this bill, and more particularly the expressions which appeared to come up from certain interests of the country at the last session, have been of a nature calculated to carry much political weight. They have been well marshaled, and for a time their combined energy was applied to Congress with activity. It is not to be denied that the indication was presented of such a feeling among a large class as might well excite an apprehension that to oppose their wishes would incur their resentment. The measure which the House sent to us seemed to have been driven through it by a fierce blast of sentiment, before which all opposition was doubled down like the feeble stalks of the fields before a summer gale.

It is well known that all these influences were skillfully plied upon this body. Argument and appeal were not submitted to the committee alone which had the bill under consideration. Probably every Senator felt something of the flood which for a time poured hitherward in the form of petitions, resolutions, newspaper articles and various demands, menaces, even, by mail and by telegraph. Unquestionably there was sufficient evidence that large numbers of our people believed that benefits would follow its enactment far greater than the injury which would be done. And they were people whose wishes and interests ought to command most respectful and painstaking consideration. Every circumstance, indeed, attending its introduction and promotion demanded a deferential and fair examination of all that could be urged in its favor, not less than of the reasons which oppose it.

The measure has certainly received from this body the examination that its asserted importance, both in possible usefulness and possible injury, reasonably requires so far as it can be done by the means at hand. Not alone in the protracted and faithful inquiry by the committee, nor in the long debate in this Chamber, but to a far more than common extent it has commanded the personal study of individual Senators for themselves. In common with others I have felt this obligation, and attempted to meet it, and have not reached the determination to vote against the bill without reviewing the argument and testimony fairly, and with the purpose only of discharging the duty incumbent on me. Nor have I an interest, direct or indirect, not a wish nor a tie, to lead me to oppose it, other than my interests as a citizen and my duty as an occupant of a seat here.

We can not but know, sir, that oftentimes the appearance of public favor is well simulated by skillful manufacture of the various forms of appeal addressed to Congress, nor fail to see some evidence of these methods in much of what has been urged upon us to favor this bill, in the midst of all which is the genuine exhibit of opinions, honestly entertained, whatever their value. Nor, I think, can we fail to recognize that there has been a considerable subsidence of the sentiment which at one time appeared so strong. There is nothing extraordinary in this. Although liable to the temporary gusts which sway popular feeling and expression, the public opinion of the country rarely fails to settle upon the right side.

And, in all the circumstances, I see nothing to cause any reasonable doubt that after the laborious consideration this measure has received and will yet receive in this Chamber, the final disposition of it by the Senate will be accepted with the respect justly due the effort to obtain a wise solution. However that may be, the consequences can affect the action of no one here.

But from respect to those who have special responsibility for my action, not less than to discharge my duty here, I crave indulgent leave to set forth somewhat at large the reasoning which governs my conclusion, even at some cost of time in repetition of ideas already, perhaps, sufficiently advanced. I desire to present with some completeness the line of thought I have pursued; but I trust nowhere to unreasonably dwell on a part or a detail.

I oppose this bill because it is unconstitutional; and to that objection I shall mainly address my remarks. It is not merely that the act is unauthorized by the Constitution, transcending the proper limits of Congressional power. Far more. It will directly invade the sovereignty and peculiar governmental functions of the States in a manner of the highest consequence and most dangerous significance. It is a step, a flagrant advance, to centralization. It involves, in my opinion, the characteristics of most odious paternalism.

I. What are the objects of this measure, and what the effects it is aimed to produce?

In undertaking to answer that question, first I desire particularly to invite the attention of the distinguished Senator from Minnesota (Mr. WASHBURN), who is promoting this bill, because I wish to ask him whether I state the objects truly.

The arguments for it resolve themselves into two branches: The first, that "option" and "future" contracts, including in the latter those now universally employed in the chambers of commerce, boards of trade, and produce exchanges of the country in relation to all leading staples of husbandry, are essentially gambling contracts, immoral, illegitimate, and vicious in their nature, deserving of suppression by law; and, secondly, that dealing in them operates to depreciate, and especially in the hands of our husbandmen, the prices of their produce below what otherwise they naturally would command. For these reasons, and more particularly the latter, it is the object of the bill to interdict and suppress all "option" or "future" contracts for the sale of any of those chief products of our farmers enumerated in the bill which these commercial boards have been established to trade in.

To accomplish this object the bill proposes to tax—

1. All dealers in such "options" or "futures," which now comprises all the members of every chamber of commerce, board of trade, or produce exchange in every city of the country, and many besides, by an oppressive license fee.

2. The seller in every "option" or "future" contract by a surely deterrent tax abundantly sufficient to render its making ruinous.

The bill is designed to raise no revenue; it does not seek to gather money for the Treasury. The so-called taxes or licenses are not to be exacted as reasonable contributions by the citizen to the support and promotion of governmental services, but as pecuniary penalties or mulcts inflicted for doing what the measure seeks to interdict and prevent. And the entire administrative machinery which the bill would create, with all the methods and rules of business it prescribes and the penal inflictions it denounces; in short, the entire scope and utility of the measure, are addressed to the one leading and principal purpose of it, the absolute suppression not only of "options" but also of "future" contracts as now practiced in all our marts of commerce.

I think I may abridge the argument, perhaps otherwise necessary, by an appeal at this point directly to the well-known candor of the distinguished Senator from Minnesota who is in charge of the bill in this Chamber. I beg to ask him, therefore, whether I have not correctly stated in this summary way the object, method, and scope, substantially, of the remedial measure he proposes for enactment?

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Wisconsin has in the main stated the object and the aim of the bill, except to leave somewhat uncertain the character of future sales. There is nothing in the bill which prevents anyone owning property as named in section 3 of the bill from selling it for future delivery, and the party buying selling to another party, and so over and over again until the time for future delivery arrives. The bill is not aimed at that kind of commerce or trade, but it is aimed at the transactions which now overshadow all the produce exchanges of this country; in a word, the making of contracts for property that does not exist, which there is never any thought of delivering or of receiving, but simply a wager on the price the property will have at some future time.

I have been trying to find in some remarks I made last July the exact figures. For instance, on the produce exchange in New York, where these transactions are carried on in a small degree as compared with Chicago, there were one day sold 6,000 bushels of wheat for actual delivery. The same day there were 44,000,000 bushels sold for future delivery or in transactions as wagers. In the month of November last, on the produce exchange in the city of New York, there were actually sold 22,600 bales of cotton. In the same period there were 8,100,000 bales sold of these future contracts or whatever you may call them. The price of the cotton actually sold was not one-third of the amount paid in commissions for these fictitious sales.

I speak of these transactions to show what the bill is aimed to do. It is aimed to break down the making of artificial prices on the boards of trade and produce exchanges by the sale of what does not exist. Having watched this matter for many years, having seen it grow up from its infancy until its monstrous proportions of to-day, it is my belief that the great products of this country have been depressed in price from year to year by throwing these fictitious amounts upon the market.

If I have reached the point of the Senator's question, I will not take up any more time.

Mr. VILAS. The statement of the distinguished Senator from Minnesota amply and completely reaches the point. The only thing which he has found it necessary to be specific about is drawing the line of distinction about the contracts which the bill seeks to suppress the making of. The object, the nature of the bill, the distinguished Senator, as I expected, has fairly admitted to be as I stated.

I wish to ask the Senator just an additional word or two in reference to it. Does he entertain any idea that after the bill shall become a law it will be practically possible for any dealer in the staples enumerated in the bill to pay the required sums imposed on sales by future contracts and carry on business in that manner?

Mr. WASHBURN. No, sir; that is not the intention. The object of the bill is to destroy this species of transactions.

Mr. VILAS. Also, whether he believes that any revenue will be raised to the Treasury from the proposed taxes on sales by options or futures, or by the avocation tax on dealers in options or futures? I understand that is not proposed.

Mr. WASHBURN. No, it is not.

Mr. VILAS. Now, the distinguished Senator has unquestionably stated with openness and fairness, for which I thank him, the true purposes and objects of the bill he is seeking to promote the passage of. Its obvious aim is easily demonstrable; and I should like to add one word to show how well advised the admission is. The gist of it lies in the fourth section, which imposes—

1. A tax or license fee of $1,000 annually upon every dealer in options or futures as in the act previously defined. I shall not contest any definition of what is proposed to be suppressed. Upon that point I accept as correct, from his intimate understanding of it, the definition by the distinguished Senator.

2. It imposes a tax of 5 cents per pound, to be paid by the seller, for every pound of cotton, hops, pork, lard, or bacon, and 20 cents for every bushel of wheat, corn, oats, rye, or barley that may be bargained for sale by any such contract.

The market value of these staples, speaking with approximate accuracy only, but quite sufficient for the occasion, is at this time as follows: In the first list, of cotton, 9 to 10 cents per pound; of hops, 20 to 25 cents; of pork, lard, and bacon, 6 to 10 cents; and of the enumerated cereals in the great Chicago market, of wheat, for the principal grade, 70 to 72 cents per bushel; of corn, 40 to 43 cents; of rye, 48 to 50 cents; of barley, from 40 to 70 cents for the highest valued. Traders in those articles, whose sale in this manner is taxed at 5 cents per pound, are accustomed to look upon a profit of even less than one-quarter of a cent per pound as amply enticing and satisfactory, and in those taxed by the bushel rate of 20 cents to be allured by a profit of no more than 1 cent per bushel.

Necessarily it reproaches his intelligence to impute to any person the belief that the proposed tax will not, therefore, absolutely inhibit such contracts, or that such a pecuniary imposition can be anything but a prohibitory penalty for making them; and, of consequence, that a heavy license fee for the privilege of conducting a business every transaction of which is so subject to a ruinous fine is to be taken as only an additional cave canem at the door, the tender caution of the law to one who might inconsiderately contemplate entering upon such an avocation.

The elaborate and able speech of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] delivered at the last session is pregnant with this admission. The burden of his argument was to establish the immorality of these sales of futures as gambling contracts, their injury to the trade which he esteems to be alone legitimate, their baneful effect in subjecting prices to the will of the board of trade gamblers. And so with the skillful constitutional argument of the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. Its scope and theory went to maintain the right to use the taxing power to suppress this system of gambling for the general welfare of the nation. None of those who have supported the measure advocate it as a revenue bill.

It may be summed up absolutely as beyond question, therefore, that the object and purpose of this measure are not to raise revenue, but to apply the Federal power, as with hydraulic pressure, to the extinction of the now universal method of making sales of the enumerated articles by the "future" contract, which, not less than "options," the bill condemns.

I beg to add a moment's further attention to some results of the bill with more particularity.

And, first, to the character of the contract which it is proposed to suppress. I speak here only of the legitimate "futures," not of the mere avowed gambling transactions, which are illegal by State law, denounced and forbidden by all reputable boards of trade and commerce. The suppression by Federal power of such alone is neither called for nor would promote the real objects sought by this legislation.

But the legitimate and usual "future" is a contract simply for the sale and delivery of a lawful object of trade; a contract in every case, or at least in most cases, between citizens of the State in which it is made, and to be performed entirely within the State; and it is a contract which the laws of every State in the Union authorize and support, and which the courts of every State will enforce upon the parties. So far as this bill reaches to any others they may be disregarded for present purposes, because unquestionably in the main the "futures" which will be extinguished by its enactment are purely of the nature mentioned, and their destruction being necessarily involved, as well as essential to the ends of the proposed legislation, its character is fairly to be judged by its effect upon these, and it only withdraws attention from the true point presented to this Chamber to discuss mere gambling transactions. I deal with the bill as it has relation to legitimate transactions based upon and supported by the laws of every State in the Union.

It hardly needs a word of authority to support the proposition that these contracts are lawful and valid. The law was summarily but surely stated by the learned Cooley, of acknowledged high repute among our jurists, in Gregory vs. Wendell, 29 Mich., 337, in the words, "A dealer has a clear right to sell and agree to deliver at some future time that which he then has not, but expects to go into the market and buy." The Supreme Court of the United States, in Roundtree vs. Smith, 108 U. S., 269, recognized as of course that these are lawful and enforceable engagements, not "bets upon the future price of the article." I have the authority on my table.

Mr. MITCHELL. It must appear that he expects to go on the market.

Mr. VILAS. No, in order to invalidate it, it must be shown that both parties expected he would not. You are not obliged to support by proof of honest intention a contract honest upon its face. If a contract which relates to a lawful subject of trade is in its terms lawful and proper within the State law, that contract will be enforced by the courts unless proof be furnished to the courts that its apparent purpose is in truth a fraudulent one and that it is designed to cover an iniquitous and forbidden intention.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. WASHBURN. Does the Senator consider that one of the contracts referred to would come under the view of Judge Cooley in the decision quoted; that is to say, where a man assumes to sell property he does not own, does not expect to own, does not expect to deliver, and the party assuming to purchase it does not expect to receive it—would a transaction of that kind come under Judge Cooley's decision?

Mr. VILAS. The answer to the Senator is simple. There is the legitimate and enforcible contract, and there is the illegitimate and illegal contract. If the contract upon its face and by its terms is such as the law will recognize and support and the courts will lend their aid to enforce, then it will be carried into effect unless proof be furnished that this fair seeming is only a cover designed by both parties to enable the carrying forward of a transaction which the law condemns, because it is, as the Supreme Court said, a bet upon the future price of the article alone.

Mr. WASHBURN. Let me ask the Senator if he thinks that one of the contracts I have described would be enforced by any court in this country.

Mr. VILAS. Clearly not.

Mr. WASHBURN. When the fact was absolutely proven that neither party expected the delivery of the article?

Mr. VILAS. Clearly not; and nothing that I have to say in this debate will have the least reference to any such contract as that, except to entirely distinguish and set it apart from those with which the bill is chiefly concerned.

Mr. WASHBURN. Then 95 per cent of the transactions which the bill is aimed at would not be enforced by court, because 95 per cent of the transactions on the produce exchanges and cotton exchanges are of precisely this character, and are so recognized the world over.

Mr. VILAS. If the distinguished Senator wishes to limit his bill to gambling transactions, and the Senate will agree with him, it will be very easy to draw an amendment which will leave no doubt about its effect and purpose. I shall have no difficulty whatever in agreeing at least to the desirability of the suppression of gambling contracts whenever they are defined and distinguished. Of course the constitutional power is another thing, and the method of dealing with such transactions is another thing.

Mr. WASHBURN. I hope before we get through the Senator will offer an amendment to that effect, because that is what I am aiming at.

Mr. VILAS. It may be that I shall advantage myself of that invitation; and I should now like to ask the distinguished Senator from Minnesota if I may expect his acceptance of an amendment when it is proposed carefully distinguishing and limiting legitimate from illegitimate contracts?

Mr. WASHBURN. If I believed, after consideration of any amendment or any bill, that the object which I am seeking to attain could be reached, I do not care whether it is an amendment or a bill, I should vote for it. However, I should want to feel very sure that it would not be absolutely futile, but would do what the bill has attempted and what I believe it will do—put a stop to this character of dealing.

Mr. VILAS. As the Senator has been kind enough to give me attention on that point, I should like to ask him whether he would accept an amendment which should limit the effect of the bill to such contracts as both parties intended should not be followed by a delivery of the article?

Mr. WASHBURN. I do not think I would, because I do not think it would be effective. I think it would be evaded. I think it would be like a rope of sand. I do not think it would amount to anything. Any general bill of that kind I do not think would be effective. Perhaps someone more ingenious and skillful than anyone who has been connected with this bill might draw up such a measure, but I have never seen it.

Mr. VILAS. If that can not be done, then the distinguished Senator must admit, with reference to the subjects which this bill seeks to cover, that there is a line of division, upon one side of which are gambling contracts and upon the other side of which are legitimate future contracts, which the courts of the States will enforce and maintain. The Senator nods his head in admission of the proposition.

Once again I say that with the gambling contracts on the black side of the line I have no further dealing, except that the constitutional power of Congress is just as little to be invoked for that end as for any other. But I address particularly the argument to the lawful contracts upon the other side of this line of division; and after what has passed, I think I may now safely declare that the proposition is consequently beyond fair dispute, that by this legislation Congress must enter the domain of the State to prohibit to its citizens the privilege of making contracts expressed and designed to be entirely performed within the State and sanctioned by the laws of the State. So far forth the Federal Legislature assumes to do no less than nullify the legislation of the several States and forbid to its citizens the enjoyment thereof.

Another effect also concerns State legislation as well as special classes of persons. In all the leading commercial cities of the country there are numerous citizens who are engaged in the avocation of dealing in these staples of husbandry or in some of them. They constitute a large portion of the active, enterprising, wealthy, and useful promoters of our trade and commerce.

At a later stage I may have something more to say with reference to them, but at this point I do not care to pause to dwell upon them. In recognition of their importance and to facilitate and augment their commercial transactions the States have established them as corporate bodies with various designations, as chambers of commerce, boards of trade, or produce exchanges, and have endowed them with special powers for the regulation and enforcement of contracts among themselves.

In all of them these legitimate future contracts, sanctioned by the laws of the respective States, constitute an important and special feature of their affairs and in a very large degree are recognized as of vast consequence in their corporate operations. Certainly it may be affirmed that the States have recognized and approved by their charters their right to conduct this species of trading, and declared, impliedly and expressly, the public value of such corporate agencies for the promotion of this trade. And while it may not follow upon the enactment of this bill that these corporate institutions will be entirely crushed, as so many declare, it can not but be evident that their operations and business will be so largely impaired and circumscribed as to greatly abridge their functions and seriously diminish their value to commerce. It is equally certain that large numbers of persons who have long pursued this avocation will be driven from it.

Mr. WASHBURN. It was the same in the case of the Louisiana lottery people. They were driven from their avocation in the same way, were they not?

Mr. VILAS. I am speaking of legitimate business. But I should like to say that what drove the Louisiana lottery from existence, as I understand the facts, was one of the bravest, one of the most conscientious, one of the most honorable exhibitions of the power of the people of a State to redress the evils within their own borders that has ever been exhibited to approve and commend our system of government. I sum up, then, this second effect——

Mr. WASHBURN. Let me inquire, before the distinguished Senator proceeds, whether it was the Legislature of Louisiana or the act of Congress that really crushed that monster.

Mr. VILAS. It is my understanding that what crushed the monster was the people of Louisiana, and I desire to attribute to them a great measure of honor for the achievement. Perhaps at another point I may make a remark upon the act to which the distinguished Senator alludes. It is not at this point apposite to the argument. I am not now, indeed, making the argument that I design to make so much as stating the premises upon which I am desirous of building the argument.

I call attention, then, to the second consequence from the facts I have just stated, that it must be, therefore, an undeniable proposition that Congress will by this means invade a domain hitherto entirely under State law, to expel from their business and livelihood many who have long pursued it with the sanction of their States, and to attack and gravely injure corporate agencies which the States have chosen to establish for the promotion of commerce within their respective borders.

Having said this much in answer to the first question, as to what were the objects and purposes of the bill, I desire to address a moment's attention to the next point in natural order.

II. By what means is it proposed in this measure to accomplish the ends set to it?

Although already shortly stated, I desire to add a few explanatory words. Under the name of taxes the bill seeks to impose pecuniary penalties upon all who shall engage in the business it condemns, and special and particular fines for each and every transaction of the inhibited kind; and these penalties and fines are sufficiently severe and grievous to operate as complete deterrence, as if the law were professedly written in the form of a criminal statute. It does not alter the nature of these provisions to speak of them as measures of taxation instead of penal denunciations. They are not intended to tax, but, like statutes defining and punishing mala prohibita, to bring certain things, heretofore permissible, henceforth under the ban of the law and denounce consequences of its violation sufficient to deter it.

There is no real difference—unless we choose to cheat ourselves with names and words—between the original bill and the substitute proposed by the distinguished Senator from Mississippi, except that the substitute adds the possibility of imprisonment for a violation, while the original bill only provides a pecuniary mulct. The substitute possesses indeed the merit of direct and open assertion, in the use of terms more appropriate to the legislation; and if the thing is to be done at all, this ought to commend the substitute as the proper form in which to enact the decree.

The limit of its declared fine also is perhaps less than that which may result to the offender under the original bill.

III. Having thus seen, Mr. President, the object and effects proposed by this bill and the means by which they are to be attained, the question follows: By what power delegated to Congress in the Constitution can it rightfully adopt this measure?

I need enter upon no general inquiry as to possibilities. The friends of this legislation have unquestionably made exhaustive search and research, and what they propose must include every delegation worthy of thought. And they suggest but two clauses of the Constitution as furnishing warrant for the bill.

The proponents of the original bill rest solely upon the power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and the general welfare of the United States."

The proponents of the substitute, denying authority in the taxing power, profess to find warrant in the power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States."

The two claims are entirely independent and the supporters of each deny the sufficiency of the other. They must properly be considered independently therefore, each as if it were the sole basis upon which the proposed legislation must rest. And the taxing power, with the original bill, invites first disposition.

Here I desire at the outset to fix one admission, which appears to be as expressly avowed and it is necessarily implied, by Senators who find in the right of Federal taxation authority to enact this bill, which is, that otherwise there is no warrant in the Constitution for it. From the standpoint they assume, entirely discarding here the commerce clause, the proposition stands confessed and established that, except by virtue of the right to tax, there has been conferred upon Congress no authority to destroy this particular class of traders or suppress the species of trading conducted by "future" contracts within the several States respectively.

Unquestionably this admission is well advised. The proposition that legislative authority over contracts of this class is reserved to the States exclusively by the Constitution can be open to no question. If there be any subject clearly committed to State governments in the partition of sovereignty between the States and the Union, control over domestic contracts for sales of personal property, made and to be performed within the State by her own citizens, assuredly is so left with the State. Sovereign power over land not belonging to the United States, over the domestic relations of her citizens, over the education of her youth, for the preservation of peace and the prevention of crime within her borders, is not more absolutely guaranteed by the Federal Constitution to the several States as a reservation of their original and undelegated sovereignty than is such power over such domestic contracts. It is for the Legislatures of States to prescribe, it is solely and exclusively their prerogative to declare, what contracts are lawful within their respective States in respect to subject, to form, to enforceability. The Federal Government possesses no more authority to define what shall be a valid contract between two citizens of a State relating to the sale of a subject within it than to legislate concerning the contract of marriage.

To this principle it is idle and needless to collect judicial decisions or the writings of statesmen. Whoever will dispute it or disregard it is beyond reach of authority or reason. He must have neither respect for constitutions nor veneration for the wisdom of men.

In the creation of this great dual government the idea which more than any other first found acceptance as the basis of its establishment was that there should be a line of division between the powers of sovereignty, and some should belong to the nation, the rest to the States or the people. The line was drawn in the Constitution, and whatever may be its indefiniteness or obscurity in some points, there is no vapor of uncertainty over this subject of contracts. The Federal Government can no more write a statute of frauds—as this bill undertakes to do—for the States of the Union than can the Parliament of England. The sovereignty of the State as abundantly guarantees to its citizens the privileges of its laws respecting domestic contracts as the sovereignty of the United States guarantees the freedom of citizenship; and the one is rightfully as equal in dignity, in strength, in exemption from invasion or impairment, as the other.

The question which confronts us now is, as the exigency of this argument presents it, can this clear, long-recognized partition of powers consist with the power of Federal taxation, as bestowed on Congress by the Constitution, or does the taxing power override and destroy it? It is a question of interpretation, and the ruling canon of interpretation is, what was the meaning originally intended? Is it to be said now, after a hundred years of universal acceptance of that principle of divided sovereignty, which has been our distinction and boast as the peculiar invention and chiefly blessed feature of our composite nation, that the power of taxation was designed to overthrow it whenever and however Congress might choose? That this cardinal doctrine of our Government is not constitutionally guaranteed, but, as in England, stands subject only to the pleasure of our parliament?

To my understanding, sir, such a conclusion is destructive, revolutionary, revolting. It finds support neither in the language of the Constitution, in any judicial determination, the writings of our statesmen, nor the facts of our history; nor in all the learned arguments which have engaged our attention since this bill has been before the Senate.

Giving due weight to all these aids to interpretation, striving only to "think straight and see clear," is not all the seeming conflict of opinions, theories, and facts of history capable of resolution upon a basis which reconciles them with the Constitution and without impairment of its essential features? I venture to think so; and if I could not, then my choice would lie upon the side which limits and restrains the assumption of authority to overstep the ancient boundary of Federal jurisdiction.

I have no purpose to reënter at length the familiar field of discussion whether taxation may in any case be nominal and prohibitory, not money-getting. Yet I do not myself hesitate in my reading of the disputed clause. When we place ourselves where the makers of the Constitution and the people who adopted it stood at the date of that great creation, its meaning appears natural and simple. Out of the several sovereignties of the independent States they carved a grant of so much as appertained purely to the common nationality; they confided to the Federal Government the powers only which were appropriate to that object, and so drew the line between the inherent powers of a State's natural sovereignty as to distinguish what should govern the domestic affairs of each State from what each then possessed, to govern intercourse with the others and all the world beside, with apparent clearness and satisfaction. Having thus defined and created the bounds of a federal government, it was a mere necessity to provide it with money means requisite to the performance of its defined functions. And so they said, in the clear language which interest and ingenuity have long striven to distort, that Congress should have the power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises," in order therewith "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States."

To my mind, these words I introduce, "in order therewith," add nothing to the unmistakable purport of the clause as it was written. That is not a tax which does not tax, however it be so unauthorizedly denominated. A tax is an exaction of money, or goods in kind, from the citizen for a public purpose; not a penalty denounced to sanction the prohibition of an act, which, if he observe the purpose of the law in the prohibition, will not be imposed. Taxes were to be laid and collected, laid in order to be collected, and not with a wild and unbridled license; but, if Congress shall observe the limitation its members are sworn to defend, the power is exercisable only for the objects prescribed, and the money raised is to be rightly employed only in the discharge of the duties and the performance of the functions which the Constitution otherwise confides to the National Government of the Federal Union.

But, Mr. President, I recognize certain facts in our experience, and a certain line of argument in the writings of judges and eminent personages of our past and present, which give color of support to a wider interpretation. It is true that duties and imposts, if not taxes and excises, have many times been laid—and once, at least, a tax—with the purpose of prohibition; and it is further true that the judicial tribunals have not been called upon, or have found themselves unable, to decide, in respect to these instances, that Congress had, in such levies, so far transcended the discretionary powers conferred upon it that they could be declared void for unconstitutionality.

These facts have served with some writers of even great reputation to furnish a basis for a generalization which appears to me unwarranted. They have very nearly treated them as an extension of the power given to Congress to tax sufficient, seemingly, to carry that power beyond the limits which the words of its grant justly import. Some of these opinions have been given to the Senate at the last session in support of his able argument by the learned Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. Still, I desire to remark they are all qualified and all come short of the necessities of this bill.

I shall attempt, sir, to discuss rather facts and adjudged cases than mere opinions. But, sir, with a respectful deference, I hope, for the opinions of others, it has seemed to me that all these exercises of power by Congress in the past—which are justly supportable at all—and perhaps not all are or have been so held—are sustainable, and have rested upon other foundations than the right to tax, so unwarrantably overextended by construction.

There are two general bases upon which the courts and eminent lawyers have found it impossible to denounce such acts as void, upon one of which such acts are constitutionally sustained, by the other of which the veil is drawn between Congress and the courts; and I hope I do not unreasonably trespass upon the indulgence of the Senate in discussing them.

The first of these is that the power to do a thing which Congress may have in substance done by the agency of a prohibitory tax or duty is otherwhere in the Constitution conferred upon the Federal Legislature. In such case, though the name of tax or duty be employed, though the power be exerted in a bill for raising revenue, the thing done is not the levying or exaction of a tax, but the imposition of a deterrent penalty to prevent what Congress desires to inhibit; the power exerted is not the right of taxation, for no tax is levied, but it is the power to take whatever measures entirely to prevent the doing of the thing in exercise whereof Congress may esteem the particular imposition of a pecuniary mulct suitable and sufficient. Names are nothing here but lulls to the superficial thinker, the glossy veneer which sometimes serves an effective purpose with the people.

To particularize and illustrate. Under its exclusive right "to regulate commerce with foreign nations" Congress is perhaps empowered to absolutely forbid imports, at least in particular cases; and to the extent that such power exists it is within it to resort to whatever means may be regarded most feasible, among them a fine for violating the prohibition, or a license fee for the privilege of entering our ports.

And especially was this the foundation of authority in the only instance in which the resort of Congress to an internal tax for the purpose of suppression has received judicial discussion, the tax on the circulation of State bank bills. To that instance I desire to ask most particular attention. The power directly and in terms to prohibit such circulation exists in Congress. The Supreme Court so explicitly resolved in the case of which so much has been already said in this discussion—Veazie Bank vs. Fenno, 8 Wall., 548—and thus drew the conclusion for which I am contending. I read from their words:

> Having thus, in the exercise of undisputed constitutional powers, undertaken to provide a currency for the whole country, it can not be questioned that Congress may constitutionally secure the benefit of it to the people by appropriate legislation. To this end Congress has denied the quality of legal tender to foreign coins, and has provided by law against the imposition of counterfeit and base coin on the community. To the same end, Congress may restrain, by suitable enactments, the circulation as money of any notes not issued under its own authority.

I do not forget that the court, or the learned Chief Justice who wrote the opinion, also said in that case that because "the power to tax may be exercised oppressively upon persons," or "if a particular tax bears heavily upon a corporation, or a class of corporations, it can not for that reason only be pronounced contrary to the Constitution," and perhaps in another connection shall recall attention to it.

Mr. MITCHELL. What the Senator has read was stated in the first instance, and then the court proceeded to give another reason why the act should be held to be constitutional.

Mr. VILAS. I shall endeavor to remove that hallucination, and if I do not do it by my own argument, I am happy to state that since I prepared this argument I have been able to find that the Supreme Court has done it by its own authority. But first I ask the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to this point in reference to that remark of the Chief Justice. That if Congress possessed the absolute power to "restrain, by suitable enactments, the circulation as money of any notes not issued under its own authority," and the imposition of this penalty for doing it was a suitable enactment—and so the court held—then any discussion of the use of the taxing power as an independent authority was in fact obiter dictum in whatever order it may be found in the opinion; for if the power existed under another clause of the Constitution undeniably, what significance was there in the judge who wrote the opinion discussing his theory about the possibility of its existence under the power to tax? That then became only what all lawyers recognize familiarly as the side-bar opinion of the judge, not essential to the determination of the case, and not authority except as it may be the opinion of a good, able, and learned man.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, what the Supreme Court may have said since in regard to that opinion I am not discussing now; but the Senator is discussing what was decided in that particular case. That is the question before the Senate, as I understand.

Mr. VILAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. It seems to me that there is no room for doubt that the Supreme Court of the United States sustained the validity of the act, first, upon the ground that the claim that the tax was prohibitory did not violate in the Constitution, and then, after having sustained the act upon that ground, the court proceeded to give another reason why the act was constitutional. "But there is another reason," in the language of the court, and then the court proceed to state the proposition which has been very correctly stated by the Senator, to the effect that Congress had power to legislate on that subject.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, before I shall finish I hope to show how erroneous is the idea of that case of the distinguished Senator from Oregon as he has just stated it. The court, not only in the majority opinion but in the view of the members of it who wrote a dissenting opinion, sedulously refrained from touching the question of the purpose of the act. What the Chief Justice said as to the first reason when he passed it by was only this, and I assent to it, and everybody must assent to it, that because "the power to tax may be exercised oppressively upon persons," or "if a particular tax bears heavily upon a corporation, or a class of corporations, it can not for that reason only be pronounced contrary to the Constitution." That was all. I assent to that.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator will allow me. The claim as stated by the court was precisely this:

> It is insisted, however, that the tax in the case before us is excessive, and so excessive as to indicate a purpose on the part of Congress to destroy the franchise of the bank, and is, therefore, beyond the constitutional power of Congress.

And it was in response to that claim that the Chief Justice then said what has just been repeated by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, that is correct; but, again, what the Chief Justice said there was his own opinion in respect to a claim of authority or a claim of invalidity of the act, which it was outside the necessities of the case to discuss, because the unquestioned power to pass the enactment was decreed by the whole court upon another foundation.

I find myself able, most fortunately, to supplement and enforce the entire argument I have submitted on this point, by a most acceptable authority, whose weight all will acknowledge, the opinion of that learned and powerful judge, the late, the lamented Justice Miller, declaring the unanimous judgment of the Supreme Court in the Head-money cases, 112 U. S. Reports, 580, decided in 1884. It was in those cases contended at the bar that the so-called duty of 50 cents for each passenger, imposed by the act of 1882 upon the owners of immigrant-carrying vessels entering our ports was void for noncompliance with the limitations of the taxing clause in the Constitution; and from the comments of the learned judge I extract what is here directly apposite. Said he (on page 594, et seq., of the report):

But counsel for plaintiffs, assuming that Congress, in the enactment of this law, is exercising the taxing power conferred by the first clause of section 8 of Article I of the Constitution, and can derive no aid in support of its action from any other grant of power in that instrument, argues that all the restraints and qualifications found there in regard to any form of taxation are limitations upon the exercise of the power in the case.

And after quoting the clause and briefly discussing the objections he proceeds:

But the true answer to all these objections is that the power exercised in this instance is not the taxing power. The burden imposed on the shipowner by this statute is the mere incident of the regulation of commerce, of that branch of foreign commerce which is involved in immigration.

* * * * * * *

It is true not much is said about protecting the shipowner. But he is the man who reaps the profit from the transaction, who has the means to protect himself, and knows well how to do it, and whose obligations in the premises need the aid of the statute for their enforcement. The sum demanded of him is not, therefore, strictly speaking, a tax or duty within the meaning of the Constitution. The money thus raised, though paid into the Treasury, is appropriated in advance to the uses of the statute, and does not go to the general support of the Government.

What would he have said of a bill that did not profess to raise money?

It constitutes a fund raised from those who are engaged in the transportation of these passengers, and who make profit out of it, for the temporary care of the passengers whom they bring among us and for the protection of the citizens among whom they are landed.

If this is an expedient regulation of commerce by Congress and the end to be attained is one falling within that power, the act is not void, because, within a loose and more extended sense than was used in the Constitution, it is called a tax. In the case of Veazie Bank vs. Fenno, 8 Wall., 533, 549, the enormous tax of 8 per cent per annum on the circulation of State banks [was it not 10?], which was designed, and did have the effect, to drive all such circulation out of existence, was upheld because it was a means properly adopted by Congress to protect the currency which it had created, namely, the legal-tender notes and the notes of the national banks. It was not subject, therefore, to the rules which would invalidate an ordinary tax pure and simple.

Mr. MITCHELL. The case was decided on both grounds.

Mr. VILAS. The Supreme Court says this was the ground upon which it was decided, and—

It was not subject, therefore, to the rules which would invalidate an ordinary tax pure and simple.

So also in the case of The Packet Company vs. Keokuk, 95 U. S., 80, the city of Keokuk having by ordinance imposed a wharfage fee or tax for the use of a wharf owned by the city, the amount of which was regulated by the tonnage of the vessel, this was held not to be a tonnage tax within the meaning of the constitutional provision that "no State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty of tonnage." The reason of this is that, though it was a burden or tax in some sense, and measured by the tonnage of the vessel, it was but a charge for services rendered or for conveniences furnished by the city, and was not a tonnage tax within the meaning of the Constitution. This principle was reaffirmed in the case of Packet Company vs. St. Louis, 100 U. S., 423.

We are clearly of opinion that, in the exercise of its power to regulate immigration, and in the very act of exercising that power, it was competent for Congress to impose this contribution on the shipowner engaged in that business.

I am sure I do not overstrain the just expectation I have when I ask my distinguished friend from Oregon if he does not recognize that that case makes beyond all question the special words in the opinion of the learned Chief Justice in the former case obiter dicta?

Mr. MITCHELL. I answer that by asking the Senator a question. Is it not a fact that the only question decided in the two cases to which reference has just been made by the Senator was the question that the tax, whatever it was, which was imposed in the two cases was not an exercise of the taxing power; that it did not purport in either case to be an exercise of the taxing power—that was the question before the court—but that it was the exercise of another constitutional power? If that be so—and I take it the Senator must answer in the affirmative—then, in view of what the Senator stated a little while ago, everything else stated in the opinion was obiter dicta.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I have only referred to these cases, and to this case particularly, with care and at length because it has been urged by the proponents of this bill to furnish a foundation upon which they could do this unconstitutional thing, that it was furnishing an excuse for us to overstep the legitimate boundaries of our power. I am not striving to make a foundation for anything that I depend upon, but I have removed utterly, I submit to every candid mind, the possibility of its furnishing any support to the pretext that we can invade the rights of the States by the power of taxation.

Another act of the Congress of the United States which has not received judicial interpretation has been more or less mentioned as indicative of precedent to us for this step we are asked to take, the oleomargarine law.

But before discussing that I wish to recur a moment to the case I have been discussing, in order to draw the attention of the Senate to another case this moment handed to me by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] and the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE], in which Chief Justice Waite states again the ground of the decision in the case of The Veazie Bank vs. Fenno. I read from the case of The National Bank vs. The United States, in 101 United States Reports, page 1. The case involved the reëxamination of the question in Veazie Bank vs. Fenno, and the headnote is:

Section 3413 of the Revised Statutes, which enacts that "every national banking association, State bank or banker, or association, shall pay a tax of 10 per cent on the amount of notes of any town, city, or municipal corporation paid out by them," is not unconstitutional.

Chief Justice Waite, in delivering the opinion of the court, began by stating:

The only question presented is as to the constitutionality of section 3413 of the Revised Statutes, the objection being that the tax is virtually laid upon an instrumentality of the State of Arkansas.

We think this case comes directly within the principles settled in Veazie Bank vs. Fenno (8 Wall., 533), where it was distinctly held that the tax imposed by that section on national and State banks for paying out the notes of individuals or State banks used for circulation was not unconstitutional. The reason is thus stated by Mr. Chief Justice Chase.

Then he reads the exact words which I had the honor to read to the Senate from my notes as the reason of the decision, and he adds:

The tax thus laid is not on the obligation, but on its use in a particular way, etc.

I desire now to turn to the subject I mentioned, the oleomargarine law. It has been said that that furnishes an instance by Congress of the use of the taxing power for the purpose of suppression or prohibition. I presume every Senator is familiar with that law, but I desire to call attention to the bill as it was originally introduced in the House of Representatives on the report of the Committee on Agriculture, for the purpose of showing that section 8 of the bill then read:

That upon oleomargarine which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or use, there shall be assessed and collected a tax of 10 cents per pound, to be paid by the manufacturer thereof.

Section 10 provides that if imported from foreign countries the tax shall be 15 cents per pound.

That bill in its origin was unquestionably inspired by the same motive which has been so frankly admitted to underlie this one, to suppress, as in competition with husbandmen in this country, the trade in oleomargarine and prevent its manufacture. It became the subject of great discussion, and there were strong intimations afloat in the newspapers and in the speech of persons about this Capitol that it would encounter Executive dissent if the tax were imposed for that purpose.

As the bill passed the House of Representatives the tax was reduced to 5 cents per pound, to be paid by the manufacturer. When the bill came into the Senate its unconstitutionality, for the reason I am now contending for, was so obvious and confessed, that the Senate changed the original purpose and reduced the tax to 2 cents a pound, made it a revenue bill, and the only question remaining for the Senate to consider was whether it was desirable to have that revenue.

Let us see now upon what ground it was approved by the President of the United States. I have heard it intimated by some persons who did not carefully examine what he declared on that subject that his act might not perhaps be entirely consistent with the principles he is known to maintain. Let me read from the message which he sent to Congress, together with his approval of the bill:

This upon its face and in its main features is a revenue bill, and was first introduced in the House of Representatives, wherein the Constitution declares that all bills for raising revenue shall originate.

The Constitution has invested Congress with a very wide legislative discretion both as to the necessity of taxation and the selection of the objects of its burdens. And though, if the question was presented to me as an original proposition, I might doubt—the present need of increased taxation, I deem it my duty in this instance to defer to the legislative branch of the Government, which has been so emphatically announced in both Houses of Congress upon the passage of this bill.

What?

Moreover—

And I hope this may commend itself—

those who desire to see removed the weight of taxation now pressing upon the people from other directions may well be justified in the hope and expectation that the selection of an additional subject of internal taxation, so well able to bear it, will in consistency be followed by legislation relieving our citizens from other revenue burdens rendered by the passage of this bill even more than heretofore unnecessary and needlessly oppressive.

It has been urged as an objection to this measure that while purporting to be legislation for revenue, its real purpose is to destroy, by the use of the taxing power, one industry of our people for the protection and benefit of another.

If entitled to indulge in such a suspicion as a basis of official action in this case, and if entirely satisfied that the consequences indicated would ensue, I should doubtless feel constrained to interpose Executive dissent.

But I do not feel called upon to interpret the motives of Congress otherwise than by the apparent character of the bill which has been presented to me, and I am convinced that the taxes which it creates can not possibly destroy the open and legitimate manufacture and sale of the thing upon which it is levied. If this article has the merit which its friends claim for it, and if the people of the land, with full knowledge of its real character, desire to purchase and use it, the taxes exacted by this bill will permit a fair profit to both manufacturer and dealer.

Now, Mr. President, how has that declaration been sustained by the facts? The Treasury has ever since the enactment of that bill received its million dollars a year substantially from the oleomargarine tax. The law has never operated in the least to interfere with the manufacture and sale of the article. I have been told by those who have more experience on that subject than I that the oleomargarine trade has even flourished to a greater degree than before, and the indirect purpose originally contemplated has failed entirely. But the truth is—a truth which must be acknowledged upon the facts which I have called attention to from the record—that the purpose which originally inspired that measure, of passing a deterrent and prohibitory tax, was changed, and the bill as it was amended performs the only service that its fathers and promotors desired it to perform, by having oleomargarine branded as such, with the internal-revenue stamp and the notice put upon it provided by the seventh section of the law, which reads as follows:

That every manufacturer of oleomargarine shall securely affix, by pasting on each package containing oleomargarine manufactured by him, a label on which shall be printed, besides the number of the manufactory and the district and State in which it is situated, these words: "NOTICE—The manufacturer of the oleomargarine herein contained has complied with all the requirements of law. Every person is cautioned not to use either this package again or the stamp thereon again, nor to remove the contents of this package without destroying said stamp, under the penalty provided by law in such cases."

Is it not obvious, then, that you can not base one particle of right to pass this bill upon the precedent of the oleomargarine law?

What shall we say about the constitutionality of the bill to suppress lotteries? Was that a bill to exert the taxing power? No; the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] says it was not. It was a bill passed in the exercise of the power to establish post-offices and post-roads. Why, then, need we spend a moment's time in the discussion of that?

Mr. President, I know of no other cases; I have heard of none brought forward in this whole argument upon which there can be the pretext of authority raised to frame this legislation except these which I have discussed.

Not to protract the argument, I shall venture to close this point with the remark that I think no instance will be found of the exercise by Congress of the ostensible power of taxation, not to raise money, but to prohibit or suppress the doing of something in which the true source of the power of such inhibition is not referable to some other grant of the Constitution. Whatever may be the abstract theories of any however eminent, and whatever the purposes which may sometimes have guided legislation, never has the open usurpation, the flagrant disregard of the limits and uses of the taxing power as a means to an unconstitutional end, which is now proposed to us, receive the final sanction of Congress. If this is to be law, it will be upon us to bear the reproach, not of evil precedent following, but evil precedent making.

The other ground which, although it furnishes no base for legislation, has often sufficed to restrain judicial tribunals from declaring a statute unconstitutional, is the just and decent respect due from the judiciary to the coördinate legislative branch of government. This restrains, probably forbids, the imputation of an intention in the enactment of a statute to misapply a power. It must indeed be a base perversion to an evil purpose of a power granted for a very different end which can ever authorize such a decision. Perhaps it may be said—such assuredly ought to be the justice and moderation of the National Legislature in all cases that it ought to be safely said—the courts never may rightfully denounce the constitutional invalidity by any inquiry into legislative intention. The repugnancy between an act and the Constitution must be certain and clear to give warrant to the judiciary to overthrow what the legislature has undertaken to decree for the public good.

Thus said Marshall in Fletcher vs. Peck, 6 Cranch, 128:

But it is not on slight implication and vague conjecture that the Legislature is to be pronounced to have transcended its powers, and its acts to be considered as void. The opposition between the Constitution and law should be such that the judge feels a strong and clear conviction of their incompatibility with each other.

And again, in the Dartmouth College case, 4 Wheat., 625, he repeated:

On more than one occasion this court has expressed the cautious circumspection with which it approaches the consideration of such questions, and has declared that, in no doubtful case, would it pronounce a legislative act to be contrary to the Constitution.

This principle must obviously operate to sustain in the courts many conceivable exertions of the taxing power which would none the less be unconstitutional as abusive of the spirit of that instrument. It is in that sense that some of the laws imposing custom duties have been asserted to be unconstitutional as abuses of the spirit in which the power was given to Congress.

Upon this ground appears to rest the remarks of Chief Justice Chase, in Veazie Bank vs. Fenno, which the learned Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] quoted, and to which I made reference not long since. Even the two dissenting justices in that case refrained from basing their opinion in any degree upon the obvious purpose which governed the 10 per cent tax law, concluding their opinion with that remark: "We say nothing as to the purpose of this heavy tax * * * upon the banks," etc.

And this leads me to another observation which seems pertinent to this discussion: That for the reason just given the opinions of judicial tribunals can not furnish to Congress the same aid when the constitutionality of a proposed act is to be determined from the real purposes and uses intended by it, which may be derived when the question is one merely of construing the words of a grant. The rightful inquiry in the former case is very different in the courts from what beforehand it must be in this body.

Without meaning, therefore, sir, to intimate any criticism, much less disparagement, of the views of others, and especially since this is peculiarly for individual judgment, I must say for myself that the theory sometimes urged to induce withdrawal of opposition to this measure, that the members of this body may pass the point of its constitutionality, resolving doubts in its favor, and leave it to the Supreme Court to decide that question, can not find acceptance in my judgment.

I do not say this from distrust of the result which might follow upon this particular subject, for, so strong is my conviction, I can not apprehend the consequence of judicial examination.

But, sir, the Constitution was not ordained to be observed and enforced by the Supreme Court alone. Not differently and not less devotedly than judges do the members of this exalted body enter on their functions with the solemn promise before God and our countrymen to support and defend it. Upon each and every constituent of the Federal Legislature rests as high, as exigent an obligation to interpret it here with the same painstaking intelligence and integrity demanded of all who occupy the seats of justice, and to maintain not only the word, but the spirit of the word, found in the great charter of American free government.

Of course I know this rule of duty will find no dissentient in this Chamber, but a universal acknowledgment, and I utterly disclaim the presumption of invoking it didactically. I recall it only to invite attention—in answer to the persuasive suggestion that doubts shall be resolved against the Constitution—to what seems to be its inevitable corrollary. With deference, I beg to submit that legislative maintenance of the Constitution is more exacting of a submissive, faithful, anxious tenderness of caution that no violence be done the true spirit and design of that instrument than even the judicial obligation.

The element of finality imparts to the juridical view a vast importance, indeed. But that review can go no step beyond the power of the word of trust.

In these Halls, sir, far more profound must be the inquiry of faithful interpretation and the temper of obedience. Our minds must penetrate to the spirit of the power, and with the fine lines of limitation discerned by the impartial and instructed wisdom of statesmanship must compare the proposed enactment as it stands disclosed in its true aims and purposes, not in the seeming of its words, by which alone the court may judge it.

Wisely, and with the confidence in human excellence which must underlie all free government, the Constitution confided to Congress by general terms the great powers of Federal sovereignty yielded by the States. But, sir, the great trust was given accompanied by a still greater charge, which, though at first it was surely enough implied, yet the wise jealousy of liberty would have there in express phrase the charge that "All powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

Of all the adjustments of that marvelous piece of statesmanship, so truly declared by the great minister of England and leader of her liberal progress the most wonderful single achievement of the human brain, this reservation transcends in importance and deserves the most reverent obedience; for it enunciates the peculiar conception, the special gift of liberty, copied from no experience of men, by which is distinguished and upon which is raised the structure of our Government, novel, distinctive, and magnificent; and there especially rest our hope and our guaranty of its perpetual beneficence to our countrymen, its continuing example to mankind.

And shall the perilous doctrine find prevalence here that Congress, the special confidant of this charge as administrator of the trust, may, whenever interest or desire press for increase of power—instead of soliciting further grant from the people by constitutional amendment—simply raise or declare doubts and resolve them against the States and the people, and by such excursions at pleasure over the sacred boundary obscure, obliterate, and finally destroy it? Are we not rather bound by the familiar rule which undeniably governs all lesser trusts, that doubts are the protection of the donor, certainties only the rights of the trustee? And still more when it is considered that these attempted snatches of authority are but incursions upon the privileges and liberties of the people, which they may, by their local self-government, exercise already to the full measure their interests demand?

Doubly exigent appears to me the obligation of this principle when it becomes applicable to cases where the illegality lies in the purpose with which a necessary power is perverted and misapplied. For there the legislature is left alone, beyond judicial correction, to justify the constitutional trust in the honor and fidelity of man.

I can not but think it to be always a reproach, that it ought always to inflict a pang, when the Supreme Bench declares to them, who have as Senators and Representatives in Congress assembled, their breach of the great charter they solemnly engaged to support and defend, albeit the consequence merely of mistake or neglect. How much sharper the sting of conscious perversion—can never be known to any Senator now in this Chamber, or anyone worthy to occupy a seat within it!

Mr. President, I am rejoiced that appeal for maintenance of this partition line between the States and the Federal Government now addresses itself to the favor of Senators on both sides of this Chamber with equal force. It no longer involves partisan principle or partisan feeling. The time has been, it is true, when the mere cry of "States' rights" was enough to array the ranks of hostile parties, and men fell into line upon opposing sides to this old shibboleth of party battle. That time has passed away. The course of events has carried the nation far beyond it. The great civil war itself, in which the victors oft urged their cause as in enmity to "States' rights," has operated consequences that wake again the sound and conservative arguments which maintain that doctrine when rightly defined, understood, and applied.

There is a law of gravitation for bodies political as well as bodies terrestrial, and in the united mass of forty-four great Commonwealths, with our history behind us, the centripetal force is too surely preponderant to leave open the thought of peril from disintegration by individual State action. If sectional discord be ever again to affright us, which Heaven forbid, the sources and elements of it will not be found in the jealous independence of individual States. Thoughtful men in every political association of our time are discerning the possibility of the opposite menace to republican liberty to be worth again, as it was with the studiously instructed fathers of the Constitution, their watchful anxiety. The growing weight of the central power, the historic source of republican decay and final ruin, is the obvious fact of national tendency in this generation. Increasing wealth and its concentration in threatening masses array powerful social forces on that side.

The people have come to look too much to the Federal Government, to forget too much the value of the State. Throughout the country are found schemes and schemers, gathering classes and combinations of special interests, with their plans of social progress and their fantastic remedies, their champions and their charlatans, all crusading on the Federal Government for the measures of benefit or relief they demand. This Congress has been deluged with petitions marking this increasing popular misbelief of the nature of our National Government. Mainly, too, they resort to this same taxing clause for the source and means of Congressional interference. That familiar of the morning hour in the last session, the cigarette petition, invoking our correction of a disagreeable and pernicious habit of young America capitally touches the point.

There are contributory causes for this in dangerous and pernicious legislation, for which Congress must be chargeable, the discussion of which would be foreign to the present subject. But is it not plain, sir, that we must make a stand where our oaths emphasize and point our special duty, and support and defend the Constitution? Shall we contribute more to the tendencies so hostile to it, to the popular error and unrest, by this further employment of the taxing power in a gross and dangerous way, not to say with fraudulent misuse, writing words of one import on the statute book to work another vastly different meaning in their operation?

This bill provides for the levy of a tax. Who believes it means to lay a dollar of revenue?

It provides a license fee for dealing in a recognized trade. Who believes it means the trade shall continue?

With many words, in apparent care of money-getting, it provides for applications for license, for books to be kept by collectors of the internal revenue, for books to be kept by dealers, for reports by dealers to collectors, for monthly returns by collectors to the Commissioner, and all the machinery of immense and constant affairs in all the Union. Who does not know that every book need have but one leaf, that reports will be silent, and returns but nihil?

Here, with multiplied phrase, are new duties set to the Commissioner and collectors of the internal revenue, the officials of a service which yields above a hundred and twenty-five millions a year, as if a vast addition were to be made to this income. Yet what in good truth is this new employment set to these officials? Simply their transformation into detectives to ferret the violation of this new-crime-creating law and discover its offenders!

Is it thus that an American Congress is to write the laws of a government of liberty to a plain and honest people? Kinglake, the historian of the Crimean war, said with bitter irony of the craft of the Third Napoleon:

> Long before the moment had come for bringing his crooked science into use he had learnt how to frame a constitution which should seem to enact one thing and really enact another. He knew how to put the word "jury" in laws which robbed men of their freedom; he could set the snare which he called "universal suffrage;" he knew how to strangle a nation in the night-time with a thing he called a Plebiscite.

A similar characterization would hardly be out of place applied to this thing before us called a bill for raising revenue, and which, in touching deference to the Constitution, was caused by its promoters to "originate in the House of Representatives."

For this fraudulent pretense and false seeming are by far its least odious characteristics. I have shown you already, sir, that it relates in the truth of its purposes and all its possible effect to a subject which belongs entirely to the Legislatures of the several States respectively to govern. I have shown that by at least implied acknowledgment of the proponents of this bill there is no other power in the Constitution given to warrant the invasion of those rights. I have shown there is no precedent for such a use of this power, all other such apparent acts being based on other grants of undeniable sufficiency for the end proposed.

And now, sir, is it not easy to see that if Congress may do this thing under the taxing clause there is no limit which can be placed to the possibilities of its use for invasion of the rights of the States and the people except that which bounds the utmost audacity of ingenuity and invention? If a legal infrastate contract for the sale of pork, lard, or bacon may be made penal under Federal law by fines denounced in the name of taxation, why may not the same rule be carried to contracts for the sale of swine, for the sale of sheep, horses, goods, or any form of personalty?

Why may we not have laws to regulate marriages, denouncing excessive taxation on all who otherwise engage in that sweet and holy communion? Why not choose by a taxing law, from among the particular denominations of religion, the clergy most agreeable to the party in power—as we do now to pray for us—by imposing a dealer's license fee on others, easily to be fixed, alas! beyond the slender incomes of those zealous servitors of our consciencies?

Nay! Why stop with contracts. Good men have been speculating and pushing long for uniformity in the laws of divorce. Behold your remedy, social philosophers! Lay a dealer's license fee of ten thousand a year on lawyers who engage in divorce-making for any but the specified causes, and superadd a tax of thousands on the plaintiff in every judgment or decree not so conformable.

Why not go further in these reformations and purge the medical profession of the quacks and mountebanks who sell their nostrums to a deluded people, to the depreciation of the employment and the incomes of the gentlemen of the regular faculty? A dealer's license fee to be paid by all not entered after such examination as Congress shall prescribe, large enough, say, perhaps of forty thousand a year would suffice.

Yea, let the good work go on. Reformations are sought on every hand. Why not carry this paternalistic care for mistaken people to their spiritual needs and bring religion to its true standard, with uniform fidelity to the great truth given from on high, as Congress must surely know it? The great remedial agency of Federal taxation is adequate to all these needs, spiritual not less than temporal.

Is it to be answered that this overrides the preserving boundaries of constitutional guaranty? It can not be. For have we not been told by the Supreme Court in the case quoted by the distinguished Senator from Oregon that—

> The power of Congress to tax is a very extensive power. It is given in the Constitution with only one exception and two qualifications. Congress can not tax exports, and it must impose direct taxes by the rule of apportionment and indirect taxes by the rule of uniformity. Thus limited, and thus only, it reaches every subject and may be exercised at discretion.

And also from the same tribunal—

That the power to tax involves the power to destroy!

Mr. President, I do not need to add that every one of those observations has just as much force to support every illustration I have made as it has to support this bill. Perhaps it will be said, however, that these supposititious cases are wildly extravagant. Is it so? They fairly illustrate the possibilities, and it can not be safely denied that when once you misemploy the great power of taxation confided to Congress for limited public uses by transcending the just and plain boundary of Federal legislation there is no stop where the rights of the States and the liberties of the people are constitutionally safe.

Extravagant, indeed! Who could have said a few years since that it would be gravely debated for months in the American Senate whether the taxing power should be employed to destroy a system of internal domestic business protected by the laws of the States, involving annually hundreds of millions of dollars, under the control of corporate agencies established by the States, conducted by men of the first consideration in the markets of the world; and not alone to destroy their avocation, but to brand them with legal odium from the central throne of national power? Nothing can be safe because it may be extravagant beyond the reach of good sense, if nothing is safe behind the shield of constitutional defense.

I will not, sir, longer protract this discussion by multiplied argument against a heresy which must be so clear to the intelligent penetration and wisdom of the Senate.

From the moment the pending bill was proposed there has been no hour when I could bring myself to believe that in the final judgment of this great body the power confided to its keeping for beneficent ends could possibly be abused in a manner so perilous, so menacing, to the lines and courses of the foundation walls upon which our great Government stands.

I submit it, sir, with confidence that such a violation of the Constitution is simply impossible at the hands of this body. In any case, these are, to me, arguments of compelling force, which leave me no choice but to deny the claim of right to enact this law by virtue of the authority given to raise money by taxation.

Sir, I have already occupied more time than I expected to have done. At a later day in the course of the debate I shall ask the indulgence of the Chair and the Senate to submit some observations in regard to the other source of power upon which the substitute is proposed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a communication of the 23d of December, 1892, from the Secretary of the Interior, accompanied by an agreement concluded by and between the Cherokee Commission and the Pawnee tribe of Indians, in the Territory of Oklahoma, for the cession of certain lands, and for other purposes.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 4, 1893.

EXPENSES INTERNATIONAL NAVAL RENDEZVOUS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriations submitted by the Secretary of the Navy to pay the expenses of the international naval rendezvous and review; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EMPLOYÉS OF THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, as required by section 194 of the Revised Statutes, lists of the names of the clerks and other persons employed in that Department from December 1, 1891, to November 30, 1892; which was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

BUILDINGS FOR GARRISONS, ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation submitted by the Secretary of War for buildings for garrisons at Atlantic and Gulf coasts; which was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF SUNDRY RIVERS, ETC.

The SPEAKER laid before the House letters from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with letters of the Chief of Engineers, reports of preliminary examination of the following rivers: The Ohio River, between the cities of Ludlow and Covington, Ky., and Cincinnati, Ohio; the Neches River, Texas, from the mouth to Shooks Bluff; Bayous Black and Terrebonne, Louisiana; which were ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following Senate bills; which were read a first and second time, and referred to the committees named below:

A bill (S. 54) to amend chapter 6 of Title XXXII of the Revised Statutes, relating to mineral lands and mining resources—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 2576) for the relief of C. L. Coder—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2730) granting an honorable discharge to William B. Barnes—to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (S. 3221) to provide for the adjustment and payment of the claim of Thomas Rhys Smith for work done and materials furnished for the breakwater at Bar Harbor, Me.—to the Committee on Claims.

Joint resolution (S. R. 127) authorizing the Smithsonian Institution to lend to the North Dakota World's Fair Commission the Red River cart now in the National Museum—to the Committee on the Library.

Joint resolution (S. R. 128) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant permits for the use of reservations and public spaces in the city of Washington, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

HOUSE BILL WITH SENATE AMENDMENT REFERRED.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 9826) granting certain rights and privileges to the commissioners of waterworks of the city of Erie, Pa., with Senate amendments thereto; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WHITING, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. WHEELER of Alabama, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. MORSE, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. ALDERSON, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. HOPKINS of Pennsylvania, for the remainder of this week, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. STEPHENSON, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. FELLOWS, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. DIXON, until January 20, on account of important business.

HENRY W. LEE.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2398) for the relief of Henry W. Lee, and that it be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read; after which the Chair will ask if there be objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNCH] asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of this bill, which has been read, and for its present consideration in the House. Is there objection?

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Speaker, I think we had better have the regular order. We will reach the Private Calendar to-morrow, under the rule.

SAMUEL M. CAMPBELL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BELTZHOOVER] demands the regular order, which is equivalent, of course, to an objection. The regular order is the consideration of the bill which was before the House at the hour of adjournment yesterday, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2393) granting an increase of pension to Samuel M. Campbell.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Upon this question the yeas and nays were ordered yesterday upon the final passage of the bill, and the call of the roll disclosed the absence of a quorum, whereupon the House adjourned. The question now is, Shall the bill pass?

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 97, nays 73, not voting 159; as follows:

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. POST]. If he were present I would vote "nay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report the bill (H. R. 10038) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes. I ask that it be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10038) making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill will be printed and referred to the Union Calendar.

Mr. BLAND. I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. All points of order will be reserved.

NORFOLK AND WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

At the request of Mr. OUTHWAITE, by unanimous consent, an order was made to reprint the bill (H. R. 3591) to authorize the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company of Virginia to extend its line of road into and within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and the report of the committee thereon.

PHILIP G. DUNN.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4023) granting a pension to Philip G. Dunn.

The bill was read.

Mr. BLAND. Let us have the report read. We ought to know something about these bills.

The report (by Mr. Wilson of Missouri) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4023) granting a pension to Philip G. Dunn, have considered the same and report:

The claimant was a private in Company C, Third Louisiana Volunteers, and served from May 10 to August 17, 1846, in the war with Mexico. He filed an application on May 10, 1887, under the Mexican war service pension act of January 29, 1887, and the same was allowed August 5, 1887, at $8 per month.

Subsequently (on July 6, 1889) he filed an application at the Pension Office alleging that at Fort Brown, opposite Matamoros, Tex., he incurred injury of abdomen, right shoulder, hip, head, and breast by being run over by a runaway team while on duty. The records of the War Department fail to show the alleged injury, and the claimant has declared that by reason of his inability to find his officers and comrades he is unable to furnish the evidence necessary to prove his invalid claim.

The claimant was examined by the Plattsmouth (Nebr.) board of examining surgeons April 23, 1890, and they certified that he was 71 years old and a sufferer from an injury of left hand, nervous tremor, impaired vision, and general debility. His disabilities are attributed by the board mainly to his advanced age.

The gentleman who introduced the bill in the House certifies that Mr. Dunn is wholly incapacitated by mental and bodily infirmities from doing work of any kind by which to support himself; also, that he has no property aside from a small home.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended so that its title will read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Philip G. Dunn;" also by striking out in lines 7 and 8 the words "from January 29, 1887," and insert in lieu thereof the words "said amount to be in lieu of the pension now drawn by him."

And your committee further recommend that the bill do pass as so amended.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee about this case. Does it not fall completely within the provisions of the Senate bill which this House passed a day or so before the recess?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that this bill has been reported by the Committee on Pensions, and not by the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. OATES. It occurs to me that it falls completely within the provisions of that bill. It provided that the soldiers of the Mexican war who were completely disabled, so as not to be able to provide for themselves, should have an increase of their pension to $12 a month.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama that this bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions and not from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. OATES. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that my colleague [Mr. PARRETT], who introduced that bill, can answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. PARRETT. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman from Alabama——

Mr. BLAND. I want to reserve my time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. OATES. To make an inquiry and to call the attention of the House to the fact that the object of this bill is covered by the one passed before the recess, so far as an increase to $12 a month is concerned.

Mr. BLAND. I did not wish to take the gentleman off the floor, but thought he had concluded and yielded to the gentleman from Indiana.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PARRETT] to control the time in favor of the bill.

Mr. PARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I am under the impression that this bill comes within the purview of the bill passed by the Senate and the House a few days ago, but it was recommended for passage before that time. I therefore ask that it now be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman who introduced the bill asks that it be laid on the table. Without objection that order will be made.

There was no objection.

GEORGE E. BOWEN.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6276) to authorize the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion as to George E. Bowen, late of Company E, Sixteenth Massachusetts Volunteers.

The bill was read.

Mr. BLAND. Let us have the report in this case.

The report (by Mr. CROSBY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 6276) to authorize the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion as to George E. Bowen, late of Company E, Sixteenth Massachusetts Volunteers, having examined the same, recommend that the bill pass.

The records in the War Department show that this soldier enlisted on the 15th day of October, 1861, and was mustered into the service on the said 15th day of October for three years. The records in the Adjutant-General's Office for the State of Massachusetts show him to have been killed at the second battle of Bull Run on the 29th day of August, 1862.

As a matter of fact, instead of being killed, he was taken prisoner at this battle and afterwards paroled and went to Columbus, Ohio, where he remained until the close of the war. He did not reënter the service, as he was told by the Government officers that he need not return until he was exchanged. He appears to have acted in good faith and without any desire to abandon the service.

Upon the evidence presented the committee recommend that the bill do pass, with the following amendment. Add at the end of the bill the following words:

"Provided, however, That no pay or emoluments shall become due by reason of the passage of this act."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, the words added to the bill, although seemingly intended to prevent any claim for pension or any other matters in consequence of removing the charge of desertion, can not have that effect. Of course the bill itself does not pretend to give any emoluments; but the mere fact that the charge of desertion is removed will in itself give the party a right to apply for a pension under the general law. The departments that have investigated this matter have evidently found that the soldier is not entitled to an honorable discharge. The law is very liberal upon that question, and where proper proof is made the department itself may grant the relief demanded. No matter how many general enactments we have, or however much we may liberalize the general pension law, or the power of the departments to relieve from charges of desertion, we are appealed to here constantly by bills for special relief.

It seems impossible to prevent special legislation on this question of pensions. I hope, sir, that this bill will be voted down, and that all bills intended to reverse the action of the Department will be voted down. We ought to encourage the Departments of this Government in acting in strict harmony with the interests of the taxpayers of the country. This side of the House especially has been in the habit of charging the Pension Bureau and all the Departments with extreme liberality in the matter of claims against the Government. Are we going to extend that liberality ourselves, notwithstanding our pretensions to economy? Are we going to overrule the Pension Bureau when it rejects these claims and then turn around and denounce the administration of that Bureau for its liberality? Are we going to set ourselves up here to criticise the Pension Bureau and the other bureaus of the Government in this respect and yet, when they reject claims and those claims are presented here, act more liberally ourselves than they have ever done?

If so, we must confess to ourselves that we are not honest in our criticisms, and that the Departments of the Government act more in the interests of the people of this country than we do ourselves. It seems to me that the proper position for this House to take is to encourage these rejections of unfounded claims, instead of overruling them by special legislation here.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I was surprised yesterday when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], undertaking to impress upon this House the necessity of economy, advised that that economy should begin with our pensions. As shown by the RECORD this morning, the gentleman advises that all pensions of all soldiers, of all soldiers' widows, of all soldiers' orphans shall be cut off unless the pensioners can show that they are in destitute circumstances.

I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that the people of this nation agree with the gentleman from Missouri. It is a strange thing, sir, that upon all occasions when the expenses of the Government are under discussion in many of the newspapers, or elsewhere, and economy is urged, we are advised to begin to economize by cutting off the pensions of our soldiers. Economy in any other direction is not urged upon us. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] almost wept yesterday because we could not have the money that is now going to the soldiers and the widows and orphans of the soldiers who served the Union to expend upon rivers and harbors, and for other purposes. I do not know how much of the river and harbor appropriations go to the gentleman's district, but I venture to say that he has in his district a large number of soldiers who are receiving pensions, and that they are at least as justly entitled to that money as are those who claim the appropriations for rivers and harbors.

The gentleman said further that the law which we passed a short time ago, giving pensions to veterans of the Mexican war, did not allow those pensions unless the claimants were in destitute circumstances. I do not understand that to be the case. I understand exactly the reverse to be the case. I remember that when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILSON] reported that bill a few days ago it provided, as was represented, that all Mexican veterans should have pensions regardless of their condition, and the amendment made by the House was to place the Mexican veterans on the same footing with the soldiers of the last war. That was the statement of the gentleman in charge of the bill, and it should be the law. I relied on the statement of the gentleman having the bill in charge.

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that the time has come when the people of this nation desire to say to the men who saved it that they shall not be pensioned unless they are subjects for the poorhouse. I want to say further that it is no favor to the soldiers of this country to tell them that they will be pensioned if they can show that they are in destitute circumstances and fit subjects for the poorhouse, because the poorhouses of the country are open to people in such circumstances whether they have been soldiers or not. I believe it is the sentiment of the soldiers of the country, and of the people of this country generally, that while they desire no extravagant legislation, and while they want to have all fraudulent claims cut off if there are any such, they do not desire that a soldier shall go to the poorhouse, or shall be a fit subject for the poorhouse before he receives a pension.

As to these alleged fraudulent claims we hear much, but generally the charge is without any substantial foundation. By the report of the Commissioner of Pensions just issued it appears that such number of 325 examiners as were required, who are at his command, have been sent out into the field to look up fraudulent claims or alleged fraudulent claims, and that in every instance where there has been any complaint made in regard to a pension an examination has been made or attention given to it. Even the writing of an anonymous letter is sufficient to open up an examination as to a pension claim. But it appears further from the report that out of something over 3,000 cases referred to these examiners, only 122 were found to be fraudulent, only 122 of the claimants were indicted. So that the fraudulent pension claims are really a mere bagatelle when compared with the great aggregate of pensions. The number of pension claims that are ascertained by these examiners, who go into the subject fully and ransack the whole country for evidence of fraud, is comparatively very small.

Much is said here about "deserters," and the gentleman objected a while ago to a bill which proposed to correct the record of a soldier charged with desertion. Mr. Speaker, I have not a word to say in favor of a man who left his comrades in arms and deliberately deserted the service of his country. I have nothing to say in palliation of such an offense as that. But on the "deserters' roll" there are thousands of cases where there were palliating circumstances, where for instance boys sick in the hospital were advised by their parents to come home, and then when they had recovered their health were advised by their friends that it would not be well to return to the army because they had been reported as deserters and would be punished. Then there are cases where husbands with letters urging them to come to the bedside of dying wives or children left their commands and under those circumstances were reported as "deserters." There are thousands of such cases where there were palliating circumstances. Again, in numberless instances where soldiers were reported as deserters they reënlisted and again entered the service. It seems to me that when thirty years have elapsed since the close of the war this nation can afford in cases of this kind to show sufficient magnanimity to remove the charge of desertion.

I think that a nation does not deserve to exist if it will not take care of its defenders in their old age. I believe that the people of this country are not ready to clasp hands with the gentleman from Missouri in support of the doctrine that a soldier must be in destitute circumstances before he shall be regarded as entitled to a pension. I believe that such is not the sentiment of the country. I believe that the people of the country want a careful, wise conduct of the Pension Department. But I believe they are in favor of a liberal interpretation of the general laws as they now stand with regard to pensions, and I think it would be a disgrace to this nation if we should accept any such proposition as that the defenders of this country, now that gray hairs have come, now that old age has overtaken them (they having lost years from the active service of life in the army while others were acquiring a competency), should now be regarded as not entitled to pension except to save them from the poorhouse.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Are you in favor of pensioning deserters?

Mr. PICKLER. No, sir; and I will say to the gentleman that no deserter is pensioned.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is the effect of this bill.

Mr. PICKLER. No, sir; there are no deserters pensioned. When an application goes to the Pension Department the first business of the office is to inquire into the soldier's record, and as long as he stands on the record as a deserter he gets no pension. That is where all this misrepresentation comes in, with which the attempt is made to arouse opposition against the pension policy of the nation. Sir, we might believe from what is said in some of our newspapers and from the speeches which are made here and there over the land that it was the bounty-jumpers and the deserters who fought the war for the Union. We might actually so conclude from what we hear.

But, sir, there are no deserters pensioned. It may possibly be that some special bill has slipped through—I know of no such case—granting a pension to a soldier against whom the charge of desertion was standing. But under the general pension law there is no pensioning of deserters; and this cry of deserters drawing pension is not true in fact. When the charge of desertion is removed from a man's record, then, of course, he stands pardoned, and is entitled to the same rights under the law as any other soldier.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Is it not the purpose of this bill to remove the charge of desertion in this case and give the man a pension?

Mr. PICKLER. I do not understand that this bill has reference to a case of desertion; the last one did.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, yes.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, Mr. Speaker, I listened to the reading of the report on the case of the man who was wounded at Bull Run, and I thought the bill was laid aside and we had gone on to another bill. I am talking of pension policy generally, and not to any particular argument as to the bill pending.

A MEMBER. This is a new bill entirely.

Mr. PICKLER. I am talking of general principles, and it makes little difference in regard to the merits of any particular bill. The principle is the same. Yesterday the point of "no quorum" was made here, and this House adjourned pending a pension bill. I am talking about the general principle involved in this question. I do not know what the policy of this House may be at the present session; but it seems to me that it is time we should be ascertaining it. If it is to be the policy of the House, as announced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], who has been so many years in service here, that all pensioners are to be stricken from the rolls unless they can show that they are in destitute circumstances, and that all widows and orphans of soldiers should be subjected to the same rule, we should be glad to know it.

I believe the people of the country are not ready for any such action as that. It is the men who are opposed to pensions on all lines who are always talking about "deserters," "bounty-jumpers," "bummers," "camp followers," and these and similar epithets are rolled as sweet morsels under the tongues of these gentlemen who are opposed to pensions per se. It is because they have no better excuse.

I have stated, Mr. Speaker, that no deserters draw pensions, and that disposes of that question which has been raised by the gentleman from Missouri. As far as bounty-jumpers are concerned, what was technically a bounty-jumper? It was a man who had enlisted and deserted for the purpose of reënlistment, and by that reënlistment to acquire a larger bounty. Now, in such cases he is reported on his first desertion, and appears on the rolls of the Government as a deserter. Therefore the bounty-jumper gets no pension until the charge of desertion standing against him is removed. As to camp followers, we hear something said of them and also of bummers.

These terms have no signification known to the pension law. I have known some of the best of soldiers designated bummers, and camp followers were not in the service. These charges dwindle to nothing when analyzed. It is extremely difficult for a fraudulent pension to be granted, and far more difficult for it to be long continued, if granted, under the present rigid administration of the pension laws.

Mr. ANDREW. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PICKLER. Certainly.

Mr. ANDREW. Do you favor this bill?

Mr. PICKLER. Certainly I do.

Mr. ANDREW. Well, I am very glad to hear it. It ought to pass, and we would like to have a vote upon it.

Mr. PICKLER. I am very much obliged to the gentleman. I have the floor.

Mr. ANDREW. I withdraw the remark. [Laughter.]

Mr. PICKLER (continuing). And I should be very much gratified indeed if the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, representing as he undoubtedly does soldiers himself, when such attacks as have been made on this floor on his side of the House as by the gentleman from Missouri on yesterday against the pension rolls of the Government, would take a little time himself here to defend the soldiers of the Union. I do not propose allowing such attacks to stand without protest.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I think the subject of pension legislation has been discussed very thoroughly and quite fully on this bill without giving any consideration to the real question now before the House, and I desire to call the attention of the House briefly to the particular measure now pending before it. This bill is to remove the charge of desertion against George E. Bowen, late of Company E, Sixteenth Massachusetts Volunteers. I wish to call the attention of the House to the report of the Committee on Military Affairs, made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CROSBY] who is not now in his seat.

The report states that this soldier enlisted on the 15th day of October, 1864——

Mr. DINGLEY. Is that not a misprint, I would ask the gentleman from New York. Should it not be 1861?

Mr. CURTIS. I can not tell, but I apprehend that it is an error, and that it should have been printed 1861, instead of 1864.

Mr. DINGLEY. It appears that this man was taken prisoner at the second battle of Bull Run, which took place in 1862.

Mr. CURTIS. I will first read the report as made by the Committee on Military Affairs. It states:

> The records in the War Department show that this soldier enlisted on the 15th day of October, 1864, and was mustered into the service on the said 15th day of October for three years. The records in the adjutant-general's office for the State of Massachusetts show him to have been killed at the second battle of Bull Run, on the 29th day of August, 1862.

It is more than likely that there is an error in printing the report, making it read 1864 instead of 1861, as the date of his enlistment. The report goes on to say:

> As a matter fact, instead of being killed, he was taken prisoner at this battle, and afterwards paroled and went to Columbus Ohio, where he remained until the close of the war. He did not reënter the service, as he was told by the Government officers that he need not return until he was exchanged. He appears to have acted in good faith and without any desire to abandon the service.

The question before the House is not one of pension legislation in general or in particular, but is whether or not this soldier who was supposed by his commanding officer, and was reported at the time of the engagement, to have been killed in action, but who as a matter of fact survived the action in which he was taken prisoner, and subsequently regularly paroled and sent North did acquit himself in compliance with the rules and regulations of the service. Is he to have an honorable discharge, put upon a footing with other soldiers who faithfully served. That is the question and the sole question before us.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me to propound this question to him? As a matter of fact was this prisoner ever exchanged as a paroled soldier?

Mr. CURTIS. He was not. He was simply paroled.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. How did it occur that he ever went back into the service?

Mr. CURTIS. He did not go back into the service.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. He never did?

Mr. CURTIS. No, sir; he went home and remained there and was told that it was not necessary for him to go back until he was exchanged. That was the information given to him by the Government officers.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Is there any evidence exhibited in the record to show that he ever informed anybody that he was a paroled soldier?

Mr. CURTIS. I have nothing more than this report, which seems to have been carefully prepared by the Committee on Military Affairs. The gentleman from Massachusetts, who prepared the report, has given attention to this matter, and I take the facts as I find them herein set forth. This indicates that this man was a paroled prisoner; that he went into a certain town in Ohio, and there remained under the impression that he need not reënter the service until he was exchanged.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Does the report show when he enlisted?

Mr. PICKLER. The report states the reason why he did not go back.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I have not the report before me, but the reason I asked the question was that my understanding was that the report stated that the man enlisted some two years after he was killed!

Mr. CURTIS. Let me read from the report:

> He did not reënter the service, as he was told by the officers that he need not return until he was exchanged.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Does not the report say that he enlisted in 1864?

Mr. CURTIS. The report states that, but it is a misprint, unquestionably, because he was captured at the second battle of Bull Run, in 1862.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. When does the report say he enlisted?

Mr. CURTIS. The report says he enlisted in 1864.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. When was he killed?

Mr. CURTIS. Here is the official record from the State of Massachusetts——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. No, when does the report state he was killed?

Mr. CURTIS. On the 26th of August, 1862. And here from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, from the adjutant-general's office, is a certificate that he enlisted on the 15th day of October, 1861.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. So the date stated in the report is a misprint.

Mr. BURROWS. It is simply a misprint in the report.

Mr. CURTIS. That is unquestionably the fact.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. The fact being that he enlisted in 1861, and was reported as killed in 1862.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes, at the second battle of Bull Run, on the 26th of August, 1862.

Mr. OATES. There was no battle on the 26th.

Mr. CURTIS. There was some very warm skirmishing about that time——

Mr. OATES. No, not on the 26th. I happened to be there.

Mr. CURTIS. I should have said the 29th. The report says that it was the 29th. I stated the 26th, by mistake.

Mr. BUSHNELL. If the gentleman will allow me, I understand that there is no evidence that this man ever reported to anybody after being paroled.

Mr. CURTIS. He went to Columbus, Ohio, and was informed that it was not necessary to perform any duty until he was exchanged.

The SPEAKER. The time for debate in favor of this measure is exhausted. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] has nine minutes remaining.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] seems to misapprehend what I said on yesterday, as well as what I have said on this bill. Either the gentleman himself is mistaken or I am, as to the effect of the bill passed a short time ago, for the relief of soldiers of the Mexican war. That was a mere service-pension bill, and unless I am very badly misinformed, and unless I cast my vote under a misapprehension, the bill that passed the House was the identical bill that came from the Senate. My colleague [Mr. WILSON], chairman of the Committee on Pensions, advocated and undertook to secure the passage of an amendment to that bill, which would have placed all Mexican soldiers on the pension list at $12 a month, instead of $8, after they had reached a certain age; but the bill as it came from the Senate, and as it passed the House, simply placed those upon the pension roll who from physical infirmities were unable to earn a living, who had no property for their support, and who were destitute.

Mr. PICKLER rose and shook his head.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] shakes his head.

Mr. PICKLER. I have not examined the bill to-day, but I remember it very well——

Mr. BLAND. I remember the bill very well, and I stated that my colleague [Mr. WILSON of Missouri] offered an amendment and advocated it, but afterward withdrew it, and the bill passed the House precisely as it came from the Senate.

Mr. PICKLER. The bill as it finally passed I understood to be a bill placing Mexican soldiers on the same footing with the soldiers of the last war.

Mr. BLAND. Not at all. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have never advocated on this floor the idea of limiting pensions to those who were destitute. I will go as far, in justice to the taxpayers of this country and to the pensioners themselves, in justice to the soldiers who were wounded and diseased in the service—I will go as far in placing them on the pension list as equity and justice demand. Indeed, I would rather repeal the disability bill and turn over every dollar of the amount we are to pay to the men who were wounded and diseased in the service. If we want to grant liberal pensions, let them be given to soldiers who are deserving of pensions.

The soldiers who were wounded or contracted disease in the service are themselves investigating this matter as to whether or not political pensions are being granted by Congress, and money squandered on parties merely for political purposes, to gain their votes without regard to merit, and whether a system of that kind will not ultimately redound to the injury of the honest pensioner and meritorious soldier.

Why, this disability pension bill, Mr. Speaker, has opened the door to an unlimited expenditure of money for pensions. Men are drawing pensions to-day on a claim of disability occurring since the war, who in my own knowledge, in many instances, are not only able-bodied, but are possessed of a sufficiency to maintain themselves and their families in not only the necessaries of life, but in luxury also. That it is abused, we all understand. If we are to have service pensions granted, let it be done upon the theory that the party absolutely needs it for his support; that he is not only disabled by reason of being bereft of property, but that he has no other means of support. That is the theory of the Mexican pension bill, and it was upon that line of argument that we proceeded in applying a service pension to all pensions granted for wounds and disabilities received in the war.

Now, this report, Mr. Speaker, if it shows anything, shows that this case has been before the Departments of the Government, and all the proof that could be gathered there did not justify the Department in removing this charge of desertion. What is the proof here? What further proof have we heard from this committee other than that which was submitted to the Department. It is here in the nature of an appeal from the Department itself from the same evidence and the same circumstances, the same thing.

I reiterate what I stated yesterday, that when we give service pensions, they ought to be limited to men who are disabled and who are destitute. When we go beyond that we are subjecting the people of this country to taxation that, in my opinion, sooner or later will work to the injury of the honest and meritorious pensioners.

I yield what time I may have to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I only rise to make the record complete in one matter. On the last day of the last session we were considering these bills which are on the Calendar of unfinished business. What has happened to-day has brought very clearly to my mind something which happened that evening.

The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] is very anxious to-day to pass pension bills. On the last day of the last session the same gentleman demanded the reading of the report in thirteen cases, in order to delay these very same pension bills.

Were it not for the fact that he demanded the reading of the reports on these bills at the time, every one of them now on the Calender might have passed, and would have passed in half an hour if he had let them go on, but he stood in the way, and demanded a reading of the reports; therefore, I say it does not come with very good grace from a man who has objected to the passage of pension bills to champion the removal of a charge of desertion. Instead of being in favor of pension bills his action shows that he is in favor of deserters. I have been in favor of pensions, but not in favor of deserters.

I think the gentleman has made a record for himself, and when the people read it they will understand that he is for a pension every time, with words, but when it comes to helping by getting out of the way and allowing business to proceed he does not do it. We are delayed today because of the obstruction of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] at the close of the last session.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman never uses his tongue to the delay of the House as he now attempts to twit me with doing!

Mr. BUTLER. I use it to some purpose when I do, as is apparent in this case.

Mr. PICKLER. In your opinion.

The SPEAKER. The time for debate is exhausted. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, however, That no pay or emolument shall become due by reason of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 48, noes 41.

Mr. BLAND. I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point that no quorum has voted, and the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER].

After some time spent in the count,

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky said: Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a proposition to the House. I gave notice before the recess that I would ask the House to take up the fortification bill to-day. I now ask the gentleman from Missouri to withdraw the point of no quorum on the vote for the engrossment and third reading of the bill. If that be done, the bill would be advanced only one step; and then I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to allow me to call up the fortification bill, and as soon as we get through with it he would have the same right on this bill that he has at the present time.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There can be no objection to that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. If that be the correct parliamentary status, I make that proposition.

The SPEAKER. The status of the bill is as stated by the gentleman from Kentucky. The bill was ordered to its engrossment and third reading and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] made the point of order that no quorum had voted. If the gentleman should withdraw that point the status of the bill would be that it was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and if gentlemen are willing by unanimous consent that the matter shall stand over in that condition, the House can proceed to the consideration of the general appropriation bill.

Mr. BLAND. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. PICKLER. I do not want to agree to anything.

Mr. REED. I understand that the gentleman from South Dakota declines to make an agreement?

Mr. PICKLER. I do not want to make any agreement about anything. Let things take their course.

Mr. ANTONY. I renew the point of no quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, as I understand now, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] has withdrawn the point of no quorum, and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] declines to make an agreement?

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Texas renews the point of no quorum. That settles that question, and it is unnecessary for the gentleman from South Dakota to take any position in the matter.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucy. Now, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio, the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill, that he allow me to make a motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the fortifications bill.

Mr. REED. How can that be done with the point of no quorum pending?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I understood the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] to withdraw the point.

Mr. REED. But the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ANTONY] has renewed it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I hope the gentleman from Texas will withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. ANTONY. I withdraw it.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. We have no objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair will announce that the——

Mr. PICKLER (interposing). Mr. Speaker, before that is done I want to make a suggestion. It is probable that on the passage of this bill no gentleman will raise the point of no quorum, and I therefore suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] that they let us vote upon the bill, and then they can go on with the fortifications bill. I do not believe that anybody will raise the question of a quorum on this bill, but at all events let it be voted up or down now.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall this bill pass?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which this bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry: Can I now, pending the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, make a motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills?

The SPEAKER. The previous question having been ordered on this bill to its passage gives it priority. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is, Shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time?

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that it was decided in the negative.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

Several MEMBERS. Too late.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is too late. He does not bring himself within the rule. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY], the Chair understands, desires to submit a resolution for present consideration.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE KENDALL OF KENTUCKY.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution fixing a time for paying tribute to the memory of the Hon. John W. Kendall, deceased, late a Representative from the Tenth district of Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, the 4th day of February, 1893, beginning at 3 o'clock p. m., be set apart for the purpose of paying tribute to the memory of Hon. John W. Kendall, deceased, late a Representative from the Tenth district of Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

There was no objection, and the resolution was adopted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, before the question is put upon that motion I desire to have it understood that this course is to be taken by unanimous consent. So far as I am concerned I am willing to agree to it, but with the understanding that after the passage of the fortifications appropriation bill we shall proceed under the regular order.

Mr. REED. What is the understanding? Is the regular order another pension bill?

The SPEAKER. The regular order is another pension bill.

Mr. REED. Then does not the arrangement now proposed require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN] simply waives his right for the moment to call up pension bills and allows this motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] to be made, intending to call up pension business again as soon as the bill of the gentleman from Kentucky is disposed of.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I consulted with the gentleman from Indiana before making the motion.

Mr. REED. If the gentleman from Indiana who has charge of these matters withdraws them for the time being, of course there is nothing more to be said.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I would not have made the motion without first consulting the gentleman from Indiana.

The motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of general appropriation bills, was agreed to.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. BYNUM in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9923) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of this bill be dispensed with and that it be read at once by paragraphs for consideration under the five-minute rule.

There being no objection, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I desire to state further that with the consent of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COGSWELL] it has been agreed that there shall be no general debate on this bill, but that we may proceed at once to its consideration by paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, general debate will be dispensed with, and the bill will be read by paragraphs for amendment and debate under the five-minute rule.

There was no objection.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I observe in the report a statement that the appropriations for fortifications and ordnance during the last five fiscal years have aggregated $15,947,608. I would be glad to have the gentleman state, if he has the figures at hand, what have been the expenditures for similar purposes during that period?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I am not able at this moment to give the figures, but I will hereafter insert them in the RECORD.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is all I desire.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BYNUM reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9923) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, had directed him to report back the same with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I move the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MARGARET M. RICE.

Mr. MARTIN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next pension bill.

The bill (S. 2187) granting a pension to Margaret M. Rice was read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of this bill.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I am in favor of this bill and hope it may pass. I desire further to thank the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BUTLER] for going so far out of his way a few minutes ago as to read me a lecture in regard to my conduct on the last evening of the last session. The gentleman is as far from stating the facts of the matter as he was last fall in his campaign at home, when he asserted at a public meeting, to his great chagrin afterward, that the Fifty-first Congress, at its first session, passed no river and harbor bill. The last evening of the last session I did call for the reading of a few reports, but not for delay. I do not deny that I was seeking to get forward a bill in which soldiers were interested, a bill granting to ex-soldiers employed in the Departments here certain privileges during the ensuing Grand Army encampment; that in the interest of the soldiers I was anxious to have that bill considered before taking up these bills upon which the previous question had been ordered, and in regard to the consideration of which there could be no doubt.

The gentleman goes far out of his way in trying to make it appear that I have opposed any of these bills.

He says he is delighted to hear that I favor bills to remove charges of desertion. Now, Mr. Speaker, when I believe that that there are palliating circumstances connected with desertion, or when there is a charge of desertion against a man which is an improper one, I think it ought in many instances be removed, and I believe that such a man is entitled to fair treatment as any other citizen of the United States is entitled to fair treatment. I may say that many of these men make good citizens. While many were at fault, yet at the same time we must remember that some little palliation can be found where the record shows a man to have been wounded on the field of battle, went home on the advice of friends, was never exchanged, and was advised by Government officers that he need not return into the service. I am not ashamed to vote to remove charges of desertion in such cases as that; but it is reprehensible to oppose pension legislation generally under cover of opposing deserters.

I am in favor of the passage of this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. I desire to present a request, or assert a right, if I am entitled to it, to control the time in favor of the bills reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will always recognize the gentleman for that purpose, but did not observe that he rose to claim the time, and recognized the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. PICKLER. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not become sensitive in regard to the matter.

Mr. MARTIN. I rose to address the Chair for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs the gentleman's pardon, but was not aware of the fact, or he would certainly have been recognized to control the bills reported from his committee.

Does the gentleman from South Dakota desire to reserve his time, or will he yield his time to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. PICKLER. I yield with pleasure the right in favor of the gentleman from Indiana. I am in favor of the bill.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Well, let it pass.

Mr. PICKLER. I hope the gentleman charges nothing for his advice.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MARTIN. Unless I can be recognized to control all the time remaining I do not desire any.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will then recognize the gentlemen from Iowa who addressed the Chair a few moments ago.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish, Mr. Speaker, simply to rise for the purpose of accepting the apology of the gentleman from South Dakota, and to say that under the circumstances, having explained it so nicely, I will not call him out.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

CHARLES B. STEWARD.

The next business reported from the Calendar of Unfinished Business was the bill (H. R. 6982) to remove the charge of desertion from the name of Charles B. Steward.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the charge of desertion to be removed from the record of Charles B. Steward, who, under the name of Edwin S. Button, served in Company H, Seventeenth Regiment New York Volunteers; also, under same name, in Company M, Fifth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery, and cause to be issued to said Charles B. Steward an honorable discharge.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Add to the bill: "Provided, That no pay or allowances become due by virtue of this act."

Mr. PICKLER. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what is intended by that amendment?

Mr. MARTIN. This is a bill that comes from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HULL. The object is to prevent any back pay, and attaches to all bills of this character reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on the amendment recommended by the committee.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being upon its passage,

Mr. LITTLE said: Can the report be read?

The SPEAKER. The matter is debatable.

Mr. LITTLE. I would like to have some information as to the facts.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The report (by Mr. PATTON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6982) for the removal of the charge of desertion from the name of Charles B. Steward, have had the same under consideration and submit the following facts and recommendations:

From the records of the War Department it appears that Charles B. Steward, under the name of Edwin S. Button, was enrolled in Company H, Seventeenth New York Volunteers, on May 3, 1861, to serve two years; that he served faithfully until June 2, 1863, when he was mustered out of service with his command by reason of expiration of term of enlistment; that he again enlisted December 30, 1863, under same name, in Company M, in the Fifth New York Heavy Artillery, to serve three years; that he served faithfully until November 10, 1864, when he is reported to have deserted.

From evidence submitted it appears that on October 20, 1864, the soldier, being sick, was furloughed for thirty days, and that he went to his home, where his health failed to improve, and, being under the care and treatment of his family physician, he requested said physician, who is now dead, to report his condition to his officers, which he thought was done. But subsequent facts fail to show that this report was ever made, and after the expiration of said furlough he was marked as a deserter.

The soldier not recovering his health sufficiently to return to service and not wishing to go to a hospital, remained at home ignorant of the charge that had been entered against him until his command was mustered out of service, July 19, 1865.

These facts being fully proven by numerous affidavits of persons who were intimately acquainted with the circumstances covering the entire period of absence of the soldier, verified by his own sworn statement, the soldier's faithful service extending over a period of three years, with the facts and evidence herewith submitted, we recommend the following amendment to the bill: "Provided, That no pay or allowances become due by virtue of this act," and when so amended it do pass.

[General Headquarters, State of New York, adjutant-general's office.]

BUREAU OF RECORDS OF THE WAR OF THE REBELLION, Albany, June 15, 1891.

The records of this office show that one Edwin S. Button, a private of Company H, Seventeenth Regiment of Infantry, New York Volunteers, enlisted on the 24th day of May, 1861, to serve for the period of two years; that he was mustered in the service of the United States on the 24th day of May, 1861, and that he was honorably discharged and mustered out from that service on the 2d day of June, 1863, with company.

By the direction of the adjutant-general of the State.

FRED. PHISTERER,
Colonel and Chief of the Bureau.

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish to ask some member of the committee reporting this bill whether there is any fact developed showing why this soldier enlisted under an assumed name? It seems his enlistment was under an assumed name, and there is no explanation given of it.

Mr. PATTON. With reference to that particular point, with regard to the name, I would say that the evidence shows he enlisted under the assumed name because of his being connected with a family of that name, and he was known under the name of Button at home. He enlisted under that name, while his real name was Steward.

Mr. McMILLIN. He was known under one name, while another was his real name.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question was taken, and the bill was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment, joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to cover back into the Treasury $48,800 of the appropriation to Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians; asked a conference with the House on the joint resolution and amendments, and had appointed Mr. JONES of Arkansas, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. PLATT as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

It also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1664) for the relief of Lister Noble;

A bill (S. 1933) concerning testimony in criminal cases or proceedings based upon or growing out of alleged violations of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended March 2, 1889, and February 10, 1891;

A bill (S. 3382) to authorize a corrected patent to be issued for the donation land claim of Wheelock Simmons and wife;

A bill (S. 3537) for the relief of M. P. Deady; and Joint resolution (S. R. 124) directing the Secretary of War to investigate the subject of raft-towing on the Great Lakes and their connecting waters.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 9487) to amend an act approved April 22, 1890, authorizing the Natchitoches Cane River Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across Cane River, in Louisiana;

A bill (H. R. 9488) to amend an act approved March 2, 1891, authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River, Louisiana, by the Rapides Bridge Company (limited); and

A joint resolution (S. R. 112) to print and bind 2,000 extra copies each of the Drill Regulations for Infantry, Cavalry, and Artillery.

PLEASANT R. ISRAEL.

The next business in order was the bill (H. R. 4049) for the relief of Pleasant R. Israel.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Pleasant R. Israel, late private in Company C, First Regiment Indiana Volunteers, in the war with Mexico, and pay him the sum of $20 per month, in lieu of pension now received by him.

With an amendment, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask that my colleague [Mr. PARRETT], from the Committee on Pensions, present the facts to the House in connection with this bill.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, let us have the report read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PARRETT] to control the fifteen minutes in favor of the proposition, and then will recognize the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE] to control the time in oposition to it, if he wishes to oppose the bill.

Mr. PARRETT. Mr. Speaker, all I know about this bill is contained in the bill itself and the report. The report, however, shows that it comes precisely within the purview of the general law with reference to Mexican soldiers. Therefore, unless there is something to be said to the contrary by some one directly representing the bill, I will move that it will lie upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PARRETT] moves that the bill lie upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the bill was ordered to lie upon the table.

HARRIET COTA.

The next business in order was the bill (H. R. 9233) to grant a pension to Harriet Cota.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Harriet Cota, permanently helpless daughter of John S. Cota, late a private of Company H, One hundred and sixth Regiment New York Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recognized to control the time in favor of the bill, if there is to be any opposition to it, and I will yield that time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CURTIS].

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. CURTIS], if he desires to occupy the floor, for fifteen minutes.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I will not occupy the time unless there is opposition to the bill. I apprehend there will be no opposition to it, and accordingly will reserve my time.

Mr. WISE. I would like to hear the report read.

Mr. PICKLER. I call for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The report (by Mr. CURTIS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 9233) granting a pension to Harriet Cota, and submit the following report:

The petitioner is the daughter of John S. Cota, who served in Company H, One hundred and sixth New York Volunteers, from August 20, 1862, until he died October 10, 1864, of wounds received in action, as shown by records of the War Department.

It is shown that she has no property or means of support whatever; that she is supported by an uncle, her mother's brother, and that her mother died in 1860; that the petitioner is partially paralyzed and has been an invalid since she was 2 years old, she being now 33 years of age.

These facts are shown by testimony of John B. Lewis, Corydon Person, and Smith S. Thomas, the petitioner's uncle. Dr. D. W. Finneman of Potsdam, N. Y., testifies that the petitioner is now a paralytic, having suffered from a shock which affected the left side of face, right arm, and left leg; right arm much atrophied, 3½ inches difference at biceps. In walking she is liable to fall, due to weakness of left leg and foot. It is impossible for her to do any kind of work.

The soldier's widow, his second wife, was pensioned from the date of his death until January 28, 1868, when she married John Shaw. This petitioner and a son, John, were then pensioned until each attained the age of 16 years, which in the case of John, the younger, was January 15, 1879, since which date no pension has been paid.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I have just sent for that report. There was so much confusion that I could not hear the reading of the report, and I would be glad to have it read again in my own time.

The SPEAKER. That can be done. The Clerk will again read the report.

The report was again read.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I think this bill shows to what extent this Congress and previous Congresses have been willing to go upon the pension question. Is it a fact that we are not only to pension minors until they become 16 years of age, but for life? I do not believe it will be the policy of this House to pass any such a bill as that. It was supposed that to pension minors of soldiers until they were 16 years of age under the general statute was liberal enough. This is the law of to-day; but here is a bill that proposes to make an exception, and to pension a minor not only up to the age of 16, but up to the age of 33, and I suppose for life; so that if this policy is to be adopted, not only the soldiers, but their descendants, and probably their descendants to the third and fourth generation, are to be pensioned.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Provided they are sick.

Mr. BLAND. If there is any necessity for this character of pensions let us pass a general law. We have no right to select out a few individuals and pension them and to neglect all the others in similar circumstances. If this pensioner is entitled to a pension under the general law she certainly ought not to come to Congress. If she is not entitled to a pension under the general law we ought to enact a general law that will not only cover this case but all like it. But are we ready to proceed that far? Is this House ready to go into that character of legislation, to set a precedent to pension the descendants of soldiers after they arrive at age? Unless we intend to set that precedent of course we ought not to pass this bill.

As I have stated before, it simply exemplifies the disposition of Congress to saddle burdens upon the people of this country without limit, by increasing the amounts to be paid for pensions, until probably we will have $250,000,000 on this account alone.

The time has come, and I think the last election showed that, when the country wants us to call a halt in this business. If there was one thing at issue in the last election, as I understand it, it was the enormous expenditures of the Federal Government; and no one will claim that the expenditures of the Federal Government are so far in excess of what is necessary in any direction as in that of pensions. We will probably appropriate $550,000,000 or $600,000,000 for the next fiscal year. If pensions are to grow in this way, without reform, but on the contrary in the direction of extravagance, the time will very soon come when we will have to appropriate seven or eight hundred millions of dollars to meet expenditures.

Then will come the time when the people will demand not only that unmeritorious pensions shall be done away, but the real meritorious soldier himself will be deprived of the pension that he ought to have. I am willing, as I said awhile ago, to give even extravagant pensions to a soldier who was wounded or contracted disease in the service, and to pension him to the time of his death; but we have no right to go to work and pension his descendants, as that bill proposes. I think it will be well for this House to set a precedent by which the next House may be guided, and by which the demands of the people of this country for economy and retrenchment may be granted.

There is no demand for greater economy and retrenchment in any Department of this Government than in that of the Pension Department, for at last there is where these extravagant appropriations are required. Outside of pensions our taxes to meet the requirements of the Government would not be so onerous; but if we are to appropriate $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 for pensions, and probably reaching beyond that, the day will come when the honest pensioner will thank those who stand between him, the legitimate pensioner, and the repudiation of all pensions.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the committee which reported this bill has assigned me to defend it before this House. I desire to confine myself to the bill before the House, and not to enter upon that general discussion of pensions which my friend from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] has invited, not only to-day, but previously, and which my friend from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] has taken up with great alacrity. I hope this bill will not be opposed upon any other ground than that of the propriety of its adoption, and not be linked with a general policy which may hereafter be inaugurated by the majority of this House.

The principle involved in this bill has been settled by previous Congresses, and settled in a dozen or more cases in the last session of this Congress, to pension those children who need the care of a parent, and who have been left destitute and helpless; and the gentleman from Missouri has not before raised his voice against that policy.

If you pension a mother of a soldier who died in the service because the mother has lost her support, or that of a child of tender years because of the failure of paternal support, then it is as just and legitimate to pension it during a period of imbecility or infancy, as it is to name any specific time.

It is believed by many good lawyers that the act of 1890 properly covers all these cases; but every act of Congress is interpreted by the Secretary of the Department by which it is to be executed; and his interpretation is the law of the land until it is construed by the courts or modified by a subsequent act. An attempt has been made in bills of this character to so interpret that act, in respect to helpless children, that their names shall be put upon the roll. A general act should be passed by Congress.

I will not enter into a political discussion, because it is not the proper time, coming so soon after the election to which my friend has alluded. In the discussion which took place before that election the friends of the gentleman from Missouri were generous in their promises to give liberal treatment to the soldiers. If there is to be a modification of the past policy, if the gentleman is to speak by the authority of the great party of which he is an honored member, and is to bring forward a new policy in this House, or into any subsequent House as the settled policy and purpose of his party, and it is to refuse these just pensions authorized by previous Congresses, then I think it will be worth while to give it political consideration and answer it, and to state the views of the Republican party in a manner to have them understood by the country. But on this special bill I have no desire to be drawn into a discussion of the policy of a great party on the question of pensions. This bill provides for a helpless child who in its infancy was stricken with paralysis, whose mother was dead, whose father was wounded in the service, and who died as a result of that service. If this is not a wise and judicious measure consistent with the past policy of this and other Congresses, let it fail on its merits, let it fail because it does not come up to the requirements of that policy which has met such generous approval and support from the people of the country at large. I make no reference to its want of support from any section or any party. I do not intend to plead party questions or party measures in the consideration of this bill. I am the introducer, I prepared the report on behalf of the committee that brought it before this House. I speak of matters within my own personal knowledge. I bring to you, gentlemen, a bill which has been heretofore approved in principle by all the Congresses from the war to this, and in a dozen cases, in the first session of this present Congress. I do not think it is the will or the purpose of this body to abandon so abruptly its past policy, as advised by my friend from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], that beneficent policy which it has pursued in the past, of which it has given me pleasure to say, in discussing the acts of this Congress, that just and meritorious pension cases had been fairly treated by my friends as they sit on either side in this House, and by those who stood on different sides in the conflict out of which arose the necessity of granting these pensions.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I know of no such precedents as those of which the gentleman speaks. I do know, however, that this House heretofore has legislated extravagantly in the interest of pensioners; so much so that the country has protested. I know also that, so far as the general statutes are concerned—and they must speak for the general policy of Congress—there is no provision in them, as the gentleman confesses, for allowing pensions like this. His own party, having had control of this Government almost continuously since the war, has refused to pass any statute providing for pensions of this character, and therefore, so far as the question of precedent is concerned, I can only answer him that if we are to follow the precedents of his own party in this respect we must refuse to pass this bill.

We ought not to take up these special bills and pass them where general laws will apply, and if there is any necessity or justification for a general law covering cases of this sort, why did not the gentleman's party pass such a law many years ago? As I stated a few moments ago, the last disability bill passed has so widened the door in this matter of pensions that the whole country has become alarmed, and especially the meritorious pensioners, whose pensions we would like to increase from time to time according to their merits, but are unable to do so because of the enormous squandering of money upon the unmeritorious. Shall we enter now upon the policy of pensioning the descendants of soldiers during life? I understand that this applicant is a married woman——

Mr. CURTIS. She is a single girl, an infant in everything except years.

Mr. BLAND. Well, I have been misinformed on that point. But, Mr. Speaker, are we to have our sympathies enlisted here in favor of one particular class? How is the money to be procured to pay these pensions? Who is it that pays into the public Treasury the enormous amounts that flow out so liberally in this stream of pensions? It is the poor girls of the country, who pay it in their proportion; it is the hard-working, the poor, and even the destitute people of this country from whom we collect that money; because under our system of tariff and internal-revenue taxation the taxes are imposed on the poverty of the country instead of on its wealth. The poor man to-day pays as much under our system as does the millionaire. We are simply oppressing one class of our people to give special privileges and to build up an aristocratic class in this country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time, five minutes, to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN], the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to one fact. If this woman had been under 16 years of age on the 27th day of June, 1890, she would have been entitled to a pension under the provisions of the law which was intended to apply to paralytic or imbecile or otherwise utterly helpless children of soldiers who lost their lives in battle. Now, then, simply because of the fact that she was beyond the age of 16 years on the 27th day of June, 1890, under a ruling of the Department she is not entitled to a pension.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAND. In order to test the sense of the House as to the principle which the gentleman advocates, I ask him why not bring in a general bill to cover all such cases instead of showing this favoritism to particular individuals by special bills?

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, at the last session of this Congress the members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions and many other gentlemen upon this floor strove for hours to secure the passage of a bill reported by that committee covering just such cases as this. We were not able to get action on the bill and it was not passed, but that is not the fault of the committee nor of this House.

Now, this proposition meets us squarely this wise. Here is a case of a man who enlisted in defense of his country. He went into battle and there received wounds which resulted in the loss of his life. He left a paralyzed child 2 years of age, a child who is without means of support and utterly unable to take care of herself in any way, and I put the question to every member upon the floor of this House: Who owes this girl a support? Neighbors? Relatives? Or the Government for whose defense this soldier, because of his patriotism, lost his life?

Cases of this kind have been passed before in this body, and I put it to the gentleman from Missouri whether or not the people in his district, including the hired girls of whom he speaks, would hesitate one moment in raising their voices to say, "We cheerfully pay our share of the tax in order that this helpless girl, the daughter of a soldier of the Union, may be supported by the Government for which he gave his life."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question being taken, there were on a division (called for by Mr. BLAND) ayes 64, noes 20.

Mr. WISE. No quorum.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 104, nays 66, not voting 157; as follows:

SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 6, 1893.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D.D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in pursuance of the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 3, 1887, a certified copy of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President appointed in the State of Washington at the election held therein on the 8th of November, 1892, as certified to him by the governor of that State; which was ordered to lie on the table.

PAYMENT TO ATTORNEYS FROM INDIAN FUNDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of July 12, 1892, a letter from the Commissioner on Indian Affairs, together with a detailed statement showing amounts paid to attorneys out of appropriations made by the Fifty-first Congress, and also the contracts made between Indian tribes and attorneys for the recovery of moneys, etc., under which such payments were made; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of A. E. Booth and 80 other citizens of Adams County, Iowa, praying for the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill; which was ordered to lie upon the table.

Mr. SHERMAN presented memorials of 27 citizens of Camp Chase; of the Congregational and Disciple Societies of Christian Endeavor of Chagrin Falls, and of the Ministerial Association of Osborn, all in the State of Ohio, remonstrating against the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of 63 citizens of Belpre, Ohio, praying for the passage of a law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors on the grounds of the World's Columbian Exposition; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. CULLOM presented petitions of sundry laborers and farmers of Saline County and of citizens of Gallatin County, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the appointment of a Senate committee to investigate the combine formed to depreciate the price of grain and asking for the postponement of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill until such committee shall report; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HANSBROUGH presented a petition of Gen. C. H. Smith, Garrison No. 83, Regular Army and Navy Union of Fort Yates, N. Dak., praying for the passage of legislation providing for the retirement of enlisted men after twenty-five years' service; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. QUAY presented a memorial of Trinity Church of the Evangelical Association of Sunbury, Pa., and a memorial of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Sunbury, Pa., remonstrating against the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a memorial of sundry Methodist preachers of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the sale of intoxicating liquors at the World's Columbian Exposition; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. PERKINS presented a memorial of the Presbyterian Church of Humboldt, Kans., remonstrating against the repeal of the present law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. PASCO presented the petitions of George E. Pace and 33 others, of C. D. Yoder and 31 others, of John E. Walton and 7 others, of F. H. Parsons and 34 others, of P. W. Butler and 35 others, and of M. W. Lovell and 36 others, all citizens of the United States, who are largely interested in the mining and shipment of phosphate rock, etc., of Florida, praying that such appropriation may be made as may be necessary to protect the entrance to Cumberland Sound and the harbor of Fernandina, Florida, and prevent the destruction of the work already commenced; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of merchants and other business men of Boston, Mass., praying for the passage of legislation repealing the present law for the purchase of silver bullion by the Treasury, commonly known as the Sherman act of 1890; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2265) for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks, crosswalks, and gutters in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon.

SATURDAY BANK HALF HOLIDAY.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 130) to amend an act entitled "An act making Saturday a half holiday for banking and trust companies in the District of Columbia," approved December 22, 1892, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute and to ask for its immediate consideration, as it is a matter of importance to the District.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read for information, if there be no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has it just been reported?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has just been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It refers to an act which was passed by the Senate at the last session and became a law in December. The act did not cover Georgetown or Anacostia. It is an amendment to that act so as to cover those two parts of the District.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed substitute to the joint resolution will be read, if there be no objection.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on the District of Columbia report to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That section 1 of the act of Congress approved December 22, 1892, entitled "An act making Saturday a half-holiday for banking and trust company purposes in the District of Columbia," be, and it is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

SECTION 1. That every Saturday which under existing laws shall not become a legal holiday in its entirety, in the District of Columbia, shall therein be a legal holiday, from 12 o'clock at noon, for all purposes respecting the presentation for payment or acceptance or the protesting or giving notice of the dishonor of bills of exchange, bank checks, drafts, promissory notes, and all commercial paper whatsoever, whether made in or beyond the said District, or whether made before or after the passage of this act, and all such bills of exchange, bank checks, drafts, promissory notes, and commercial paper which otherwise would be due and payable, or presentable for acceptance or payment, in said District, on such half-holiday Saturday, shall, therein, be due and payable or presentable for acceptance or payment on the secular or business day next succeeding: Provided, however, That any acceptance or payment thereof with interest thereon to said date when the same bears interest made on such half-holiday Saturday, before 12 o'clock noon, shall be lawful.

And all bills of exchange, bank checks, drafts, promissory notes, and commercial paper whatsoever, which, but for existing law, would be due and payable, or presentable for acceptance or payment, in said District, on any day which is a full legal holiday, or on Sunday, shall, therein, be payable, or presentable for acceptance or payment, on the secular or business day next succeeding, and all acts and parts of acts so far as inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire how the joint resolution comes up at this time.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It is a report made by the Committee on the District of Columbia, relating to the former act which was passed by the Senate at the last session. It is requested by all the bankers here and it covers the whole District, giving a half-holiday to the banks. The act did not cover Georgetown or Anacostia, and the proposed amendment of it covers all the banks of the District. It also provides for all classes of commercial paper and so corrects some inaccuracies which were found in the present law when an attempt was made to put it into operation.

Mr. HOAR. I wish the Senator would allow the joint resolution to remain pending until Monday, or if it has any advantage by being reported now he can withdraw the report and it can be made just as well at another time.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The only objection is that to-morrow is Saturday, and the joint resolution ought to be passed at once.

Mr. HOAR. It is a serious subject, affecting the time of the maturity of negotiable paper, and I should like to have an opportunity to glance at it before it is passed. The Senator can bring it up later in the day, perhaps.

Mr. McMILLAN. All right, I have no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be laid aside informally.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 3686) for the relief James B. McElhose; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HUNTON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3687) for the relief of Thomas H. G. Todd; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 3688) to authorize the Washington and Marlboro Electric Railway Company to extend its line within the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HIGGINS introduced a bill (S. 3689) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Henry R. Tilton, and of personal effects thereon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 132) to print 100,000 copies of special report of the Bureau of Animal Industry on diseases of cattle and on cattle feeding; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

NICARAGUAN CANAL.

On motion of Mr. MORGAN, it was Ordered, That 3,000 copies of the Senate bill No. 1218 be printed for the use of the Senate.

INTRODUCTION OF REINDEER IN ALASKA.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Education be directed to transmit a copy of the latest report of Dr. Sheldon Jackson on the introduction of domesticated reindeer into Alaska.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 123) to fill vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 166) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to cover back into the Treasury $48,800 of the appropriation to Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9923) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PROPOSED SUSPENSION OF IMMIGRATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. HILL, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the Senate be directed to transmit to the honorable the Secretary of State a copy of Senate bill No. 3513, now pending in this body, entitled "A bill for the suspension of immigration for one year," and that the Secretary of State be, and is hereby, respectfully requested to inform the Senate at his earliest convenience whether the provisions of the said bill absolutely suspending immigration for the period of one year are in conflict with any treaties now existing between the United States and any foreign countries; and, if so, with what countries, and any further information which he may deem necessary for the information of the Senate in relation to the propriety of the enactment of the said bill in its present form.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, there is no objection to the adoption of the resolution. Immediately after the bill referred to therein was taken up for consideration by the Committee on Immigration the questions suggested by the resolution were asked informally of the Secretary of State, and he is now ready to reply to them. Therefore I hope that the resolution may be passed, although I see that the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] it absent. I desire to say that upon consultation with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] it is thought the resolution ought to have certain verbal changes which I send to the desk and move as amendments to the resolution.

Mr. CARLISLE. The Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] is necessarily absent this morning, and requested me to have the resolution passed over without losing its place until he should return; but I have examined the amendments suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, and I am satisfied that with those amendments, if the Senator from New York were here, he would desire to have the resolution passed, so I do not ask to have it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the resolution so as to read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to transmit to the Secretary of State a copy of Senate bill numbered 3513, now pending in this body, entitled "A bill for the suspension of immigration for one year," and that the Secretary of State be, and is hereby, directed to inform the Senate, whether the provisions of the said bill absolutely suspending immigration for the period of one year are in conflict with any treaties now existing between the United States and any foreign countries; and, if so, with what countries, and any further information which he may deem necessary for the information of the Senate during the consideration of said bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 9923) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes; was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ADDITIONAL QUARANTINE POWERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? If not, pursuant to the agreement already reached, the Chair lays before the Senate the bill (S. 2707) granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service.

Mr. QUAY. I rose to move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next. I make that motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire unanimous consent to remind the Senator from Pennsylvania that to-day and to-morrow have been assigned as a special order to consider the quarantine bills. It may be that we shall not need to-morrow and that at the close of the day we can adjourn until Monday, but until it is entirely certain that we shall get through with this subject, as we do not wish to displace the unfinished business next week, I hope the Senator will withdraw the motion, renewing it later in the day if there be occasion for it.

Mr. QUAY. Upon the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire I will withdraw the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to inquire whether the special orders for to-day and to-morrow are to commence immediately after the morning business. If otherwise, I ask that we proceed with the Calendar until 2 o'clock.

Mr. CHANDLER. The consideration of the bills is to commence after the routine morning business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The agreement will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the order adopted on the 4th instant, as follows:

Ordered, That on Friday next, after the routine business of the morning hour is transacted, and on Saturday if necessary, bills on the Calendar reported by the Committees on Epidemic Diseases and Immigration having relation to the danger of the introduction of cholera into this country during the present year shall be the special orders and have exclusive consideration on those days, without otherwise displacing the present unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2707) granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service, which had been reported from the Committee on Epidemic Diseases with amendments.

The first amendment was in section 1, line 3, before the word "vessel," to insert the word "other;" so as to read:

That it shall be unlawful for any merchant ship or other vessel from any foreign port, etc.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if that would not subject the vessels of our Navy returning from foreign ports to the quarantine regulations of the States?

Mr. HARRIS. I did not hear the question of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. DOLPH. If the amendment inserting the word "other," in line 3 of the first section, is adopted, would it not subject one of our naval vessels arriving after a cruise from a foreign port to State quarantine regulations?

Mr. HARRIS. I think it affects all vessels sailing from a foreign port to the ports of this country, whether they be our own or those of foreign countries.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is the present law, I understand. Our naval vessels are expected, when coming from any foreign port or any infected port, to comply with the State quarantine regulations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 4, after the word "port," to insert "or place;" so as to read:

That it shall be unlawful for any merchant ship or other vessel from any foreign port or place to enter any port of the United States except in accordance with the provisions of this act and with such rules and regulations of State and municipal health authorities as may be made in pursuance of or consistent with this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee, through the Vice-President, whether we are now simply acting upon the committee amendments?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. And whether other amendments will be excluded if not offered now?

Mr. HARRIS. Other amendments will be in order in Committee of the Whole and in the Senate after the bill shall have been reported from the committee.

The next amendment of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases was, in section 3, line 26, after the word "another," to strike out "which" and insert "and;" in the same line, after the word "when," to insert "said rules and regulations have been," and after the word "secretary," at the end of line 27, to insert "they;" so as to read:

The Marine Hospital Service shall report the facts to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall, if in his judgment it is necessary and proper, order said Marine Hospital Service to make such additional rules and regulations as are necessary to prevent the introduction of such diseases into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State from another, and when said rules and regulations have been so made and approved by the Secretary, they shall be promulgated by the Marine Hospital Service and enforced by the sanitary authorities of the States and municipalities, where the State or municipal health authorities will undertake to execute and enforce them; but if the State or municipal authorities shall fail or refuse to enforce said rules and regulations the President may detail an officer or appoint a proper person for that purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 6. That on the arrival of an infected vessel at any port not provided with proper facilities for treatment of the same, the Marine Hospital Service may remand said vessel, at its own expense, to the nearest national or other quarantine station where accommodations and appliances are provided for the necessary disinfection and treatment of the vessel, passengers, and cargo; and after treatment of any infected vessel at a national quarantine station, and after certificate shall have been given by the United States quarantine officer at said station that the vessel, cargo, and passengers are each and all free from infectious disease, or danger of conveying the same, said vessel shall be admitted to entry to any port of the United States named within the certificate. But at any ports where sufficient quarantine provision has been made by State or local authorities the Marine Hospital Service may direct vessels bound for said ports to undergo quarantine at said State or local station.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next committee amendment will be stated.

Mr. PLATT. Was the last amendment agreed to, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think I quite understand it; but I do not know that it is important that I should.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read.

Mr. PLATT. I do not ask to have it read, but I should like to know what the last clause of the section means? It reads:

But at any ports where sufficient quarantine provision has been made by State or local authorities the Marine Hospital Service may direct vessels bound for said ports to undergo quarantine at said State or local station.

Suppose the authorities will not take them?

Mr. HARRIS. It simply refers to the plant necessary to treat an infected vessel by disinfecting the vessel and its cargo, and where a State quarantine happens to be nearer the port of entry than another quarantine, if that State quarantine is equipped with such plant, it gives the Marine Hospital Service authority to send the vessel to that quarantine for treatment.

The next amendment of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 7. That whenever it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the President that by reason of the existence of cholera or yellow fever in a foreign country there is serious danger of the introduction of the same into the United States, and that notwithstanding the quarantine defense this danger is so increased by immigration that a suspension of the same is demanded in the interest of the public health, the President shall have power to suspend immigration from such countries or places and for such period of time as he may deem necessary.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Tennessee to allow that amendment to pass over without being voted upon until after I shall have submitted some remarks upon the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to complying with the request of the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over for the present.

Mr. HARRIS. In section 2, line 14, after the word "satisfied," I move to insert the word "that;" so as to read:

To be satisfied that the matters and things therein stated are true.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. In line 20 of the same section, after the word "of," I move to insert "furnishing information and." These are amendments suggested by the Marine Hospital Service and the Secretary of the Treasury.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, line 20, after the word "of," it is proposed to insert "furnishing information and;" so as to read:

The President, in his discretion, is authorized to detail any medical officer of the Government to serve in the office of the consul at any foreign port for the purpose of furnishing information and making the inspection, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. In section 3, line 39, after the word "exists," I move to insert "or from which the President has reason to believe that infected articles of merchandise are being shipped."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, line 39, after the word "exists," it is proposed to insert "or from which the President has reason to believe that infected articles of merchandise are being shipped;" so as to read:

The Marine Hospital Service shall make such rules and regulations as are authorized by the laws of the United States and necessary to be observed by vessels at the port of departure and on the voyage, where such vessels sail from any foreign port or place at which contagious or infectious disease exists or from which the President has reason to believe that infected articles of merchandise are being shipped to any port or place in the United States, to secure the best sanitary condition of such vessel, her cargo, passengers, and crew.

The amendment was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. It will take but a few minutes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] wishes to be excused from further service upon the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, and asks that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] be appointed thereon.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the Chair fill the vacancy.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

ADDITIONAL QUARANTINE POWERS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2707) granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service.

Mr. HARRIS. In section 2, I move to strike out the word "and," being the last word in line 30. I see the word is repeated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER Mr. President, it is my duty and privilege to support this bill (S. 2707) granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service. It has been reported by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], who has for many years given the subjects of quarantine and of epidemic diseases his close attention as chairman of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases. I had occasion to serve during the Fiftieth and Fifty-first Congresses as a member of that committee, and retired in the present Congress in order that my colleague [Mr. GALLINGER], who, I believe, is the only physician in this body, might appropriately have a place upon it. I have had abundant opportunity to notice the intelligence and fidelity which the Senator from Tennessee has brought to the preparation of measures to be acted upon by Congress concerning quarantine and the exclusion of infectious diseases either seeking to enter from foreign countries into this country or to pass from State to State, and I take it for granted that the details of this bill which has been submitted by him are in the main wise and judicious.

I am in favor of every possible step which can be devised for the protection of this country from cholera during the coming season. All the powers of the State governments should be put in motion to prevent its introduction, and all the powers of the National Government should be exerted for the same purpose. To be specific, I believe that the Treasury Department should, without a day's delay, promulgate rules and regulations prescribing the quarantine methods to be adopted to prevent the introduction of disease by sea, which rules and regulations should govern the immigrants for a certain period on the other side of the water before they take ship, should prescribe the regimen to be adopted and the precautions to be resorted to on shipboard during the voyage, and should also provide the sanitary measures to be taken by way of quarantine or otherwise in our own ports upon the arrival of the vessels. I believe, moreover, that after the Treasury Department have formulated such regulations as existing law authorizes, they should be given by this bill, or any other bill which may be needful, all the further power and all the additional authority which they may ask for or of which they can by any possibility make use to keep the scourge of cholera from either entering the country or spreading after it has made its entry.

Even further, I believe that when the Treasury Department has done all that it can now do, and when the bill which the Senator from Tennessee has reported from the Committee on Epidemic Diseases shall have become a law and shall have been acted on, it will still be expedient for this Congress to go further and to pass Senate bill 3513, which has been reported from the Committee on Immigration, for the entire suspension of the admission of alien immigrants into the United States for one year.

Mr. President, I do not think that the danger which is to be apprehended from cholera during the present year is sufficiently comprehended by the American people. It is the characteristic, I think, of our people that we are apparently fearless concerning disease and danger until they actually arrive, and then we are very apt to become panic stricken and to resort to measures of unnecessary rigidity. It is to defeat the arrival of cholera within our borders, if possible, and to prevent any panic, that I believe the bill should pass totally suspending immigration for one year.

The Committee on Immigration was directed by a resolution of the Senate of July 16, 1892, to continue its investigation into the subject of immigration from foreign countries. In pursuance of that direction, a meeting of the committee was held at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, in New York, on the 26th day of November, at which were present Senators HALE, PROCTOR, HISCOCK, FAULKNER, GRAY, CALL, and myself. We requested a considerable number of eminent physicians of the city of New York to meet us at that time and advise us informally concerning the apprehended danger of cholera.

Those physicians, without compensation, gladly came and made their statements, and there was a full and free conference. Subsequently they were requested to reduce their opinions to writing and forward them to the committee, which they have done; and those statements are to be found printed in the document which I hold in my hand, which is now in type for the use of the committee. I desire to place on record for the information of Senators the statements of these physicians, all concurring in the opinion that there is imminent danger of an invasion of cholera during the beginning of the present year. These questions were asked the physicians:

I. Is there, or not, a feeling of apprehension in the public mind and among physicians of a visitation from Europe of cholera in the spring or summer of 1893?

II. What is the character and extent of the danger according to your view of the subject?

Dr. W. A. Ewing said in answer to the two questions:

There is a widespread feeling of apprehension, both in the minds of the public and among physicians, lest there be an epidemic of cholera during the coming year, either from dormant germs already here or from fresh importation.

Dr. Stephen Smith said, in answer to the two questions:

These questions I answer emphatically in the affirmative. I may add that the most eminent medical experts of Europe are of the opinion that there will be a recurrence of cholera in the cities and towns where it prevailed in 1892, and that the pestilence, spreading from those centers, will be more widespread in 1893 than it was last year.

If travel and traffic with the seaport towns of Europe continue unrestricted and unregulated cholera will, in my opinion, be introduced into this country very early in the coming season and will be widely distributed to interior cities.

Dr. E. G. Janeway says:

A feeling of apprehension exists in the public mind, and amongst the greater number of physicians with whom I am thrown in contact, that there will be a visitation of cholera from Europe in the spring or summer of 1893.

The extent of this danger is, in my opinion, very considerable. The history of past cholera epidemics forces the conviction upon me that the disease will lie dormant here and there in Russia, Germany, France, and Holland during the winter, to spring into activity so soon as the temperature suitable to the growth of the germs causative of the disease is reached. Where conditions favorable to the disease exist outbreaks may even occur during the winter. How many centers of development may show themselves is a matter about which we are necessarily in the dark. The future alone will reveal how thoroughly and successfully the contest against the germs of cholera has been waged during the past summer and autumn. According to the statement of those who studied the outbreak of cholera in this country in 1873, the first cases made their appearance in New Orleans as early as February; others occurred in March. Later the cholera visited Cincinnati, St. Louis, Chicago, and numerous smaller cities and towns west of the Allegheny Mountains.

Dr. Joseph D. Bryant answered:

The business public, in my opinion, apprehend a visitation of cholera here in the spring and summer of 1893. That the physicians conversant with the past and present state of affairs have this apprehension I have not the slightest doubt.

Dr. Joseph E. Winters says:

There is a decided apprehension in the minds of the public and of physicians that there will be a visitation of cholera from Europe to this country during the spring and summer of 1893, unless means are taken to prevent it.

The extent of the danger to us will depend entirely upon the means taken to exclude it.

Dr. Lewis A. Sayre says:

There is considerable apprehension both among the profession and the public that there will be a revisitation of cholera in 1893.

The very able and faithful sanitary superintendent of the health department of the city of New York, Dr. Cyrus Edson, says:

The first question I must answer without qualification. There is a deep feeling of apprehension, both among physicians and the public generally, that the danger of an epidemic of Asiatic cholera during the spring and summer of 1893 is imminent.

The character and extent of the danger is, in the present condition of affairs, in proportion as (a) the disease is prevalent, and as (b) quarantine is ineffective.

(a) Reliable reports from the cities of Northern Europe indicate that thus far the disease is surviving cold weather, and is likely to survive the entire winter. Should it do so, we must expect that Northern Europe will suffer from a severe epidemic of cholera that will commence sometime during the spring of 1893. This will put us close at hand to the disease at least three months earlier in 1893 than in 1892. In other words, the disease will have at least three more months favorable weather and conditions than it had in 1892, and the danger that it will find an entrance and obtain a foothold will be proportionately greater than was the case in 1892. The history of Asiatic cholera in this country during the past, as was shown by President Wilson's testimony, leads to the conclusion that this danger is a very great one.

Mr. Charles G. Wilson, president of the health department of the city of New York, answers as follows:

In answer to the first question, permit me to say that I am of the opinion that there is a well-founded feeling of apprehension, not only among physicians and sanitarians, but also in the public mind, that unless the most strenuous measures are adopted the country will have a visitation of cholera in the spring or summer of 1893.

Then he proceeds to give a carefully prepared history of the previous visitations of cholera, showing that where the cholera appeared in any year it invariably manifested itself much earlier the next year.

Dr. George F. Shrady says:

There is a well-founded apprehension that cholera may visit the United States during the summer of 1893.

Dr. Alfred L. Loomis says:

Answer to query 1: There is.

Answer to query 2: I think it imminent. Unless means are taken to prevent its introduction, we are almost sure to have an epidemic.

These opinions were so forcible and so unmistakable that the Committee on Immigration did not feel at liberty to neglect to take action upon them.

Mr. VEST. Will it interrupt the Senator if I make an inquiry?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly not.

Mr. VEST. The document from which the Senator has read is not accessible to Senators generally, at least I have not been able to obtain it.

Mr. CHANDLER. There are copies to be had.

Mr. VEST. I understood it was printed for the use of the committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. Some copies have been brought to the Senate.

Mr. VEST. Has the Senator from New Hampshire a statement from Dr. Hamilton, the former Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service?

Mr. CHANDLER. There is not printed any opinion from Dr. Hamilton, but I will make a statement in reference to Dr. Hamilton, if the Senator desires it, a little later. Dr. Hamilton's opinion is the same as those of the other physicians whom I have quoted.

Mr. VEST. Dr. Hamilton has been examined by the committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. He has been present with the Senator from Tennessee and myself on the visit to New York, but his statement has not been taken in writing.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will permit me, while I wish, of course, to do what is necessary to preserve the health or the lives of the people, I confess that my disposition is to go very slowly in regard to a measure so drastic as that which is submitted now to the Senate.

I happened the other day to accidentally meet Dr. Hamilton in a railroad train, and he himself brought this matter up. He stated that he had appeared before the committee and was on his way to Washington to appear, as I understood, again. He said to me that there was no necessity for excluding immigrants; that the cholera germ, as he expressed it, was fully understood by the advanced thought of the medical profession, and could be controlled by them. He further expressed the apprehension that if this measure should be adopted it would result in the worst class of immigrants, the filthiest, and the most diseased coming through Alaska and Mexico.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me for a second?

Mr. VEST. I will with pleasure.

Mr. HARRIS. Dr. Hamilton is decidedly in favor of the passage of Senate bill 2707, which is now under consideration.

Mr. VEST. Which excludes immigrants?

Mr. HARRIS. By no means. There is a pending amendment to the bill, which has not yet been acted upon, which gives to the President authority, when he is satisfied that there is an exigency demanding it, to suspend immigration for such time as he deems absolutely necessary to the prevention of the importation of disease. That amendment is pending. I saw that the Senator was addressing himself to a bill which is not now under consideration.

Mr. VEST. I was addressing myself to the remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood the Senator to be speaking not with reference to the bill of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. VEST. I understood the Senator from New Hampshire to say that he favored and his committee favored the exclusion of immigration for twelve months.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood the Senator to be addressing himself to that proposition.

Mr. VEST. I was. I will state that Dr. Hamilton made that statement to me, and as he has had control of our quarantine regulations for a number of years, both during Democratic and Republican administrations, I am disposed to give his opinion great weight. Therefore, I asked the Senator if Dr. Hamilton's testimony had been taken and printed.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, when I was interrupted by the Senator from Missouri (Mr. VEST) I was showing to the Senate, by the opinion of these doctors, that there is imminent danger of cholera coming into the country during the present year. The Senator interrupted me to state the opinion that had been given to him by Dr. Hamilton, that it was not necessary, in order to prevent an incursion of cholera, that immigration should be totally suspended for one year; which may be true so far as the opinion of Dr. Hamilton is concerned; and the Senator himself may be correct in entertaining the same opinion. The proposition is open for discussion and has two sides to it; but Dr. Hamilton does not differ from the doctors whose opinions I have just been reading, that there is imminent danger of the entry of cholera during the coming spring. I suppose the Senator from Missouri does not understand that Dr. Hamilton underrates in the least the danger of the advent of cholera, but only that Dr. Hamilton believes, as many of these doctors do, that the disease may be held in check and even kept out of the country without the necessity of the suspension of immigration for one year.

Mr. VEST. That is all I stated. Dr. Hamilton stated to me that there was necessity for strict quarantine regulations, but not to the total exclusion of immigrants.

Mr. CHANDLER. Dr. Hamilton does not differ from the physicians whom I have quoted upon the proposition, that there is great danger of cholera coming into this country during the coming spring, unless the most rigid and effective methods of exclusion are resorted to.

Mr. President, after the Committee on Immigration returned from New York, where they had this conference with these physicians, a consultation took place, the result of which was the reporting by the Committee on Immigration of Senate bill 3513 for the total suspension of immigration for one year.

Realizing that this is a harsh measure, and one that no person will wish to resort to unless the circumstances absolutely require it, the members of the Committee on Immigration, myself as chairman especially, immediately entered into conference with the Senator from Tennessee and ascertained that it was his purpose to press the consideration by the Senate of the bill now pending granting additional quarantine powers to the Treasury Department.

It was also the opinion of the Senator from Tennessee and myself that any measures which the Treasury Department might think it important to prescribe to exclude cholera from our borders should be adopted by that Department without any further delay, and without saying that they were waiting for additional legislation by Congress. Upon consideration of this point it occurred to me to write a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., December 22, 1892.

SIR: Realizing that it is important that the policy and measures of the United States Government in reference to immigration and the introduction of cholera into this country in the spring of 1893 shall be known and announced to European nations at as early a date as possible, so that preparations abroad may be made accordingly, I have endeavored to ascertain the situation in Congress with reference to the probabilities of legislation, with the following result:

I. There is pending a proposition to exclude all immigration from European countries for the coming year. This is quite likely to be adopted, but it is not certain that it will be.

II. There is pending a proposition for a national quarantine system which will wholly abolish the State system now existing in New York State. This proposition may be accepted in the next Congress, but the controversy it arouses will prevent its adoption by the present Congress, which ends March 4.

III. There are pending propositions to make more specific and to enlarge the powers of the President and Secretary of the Treasury to deal with immigration and apprehended infection—notably the Senate bill of Senator HARRIS of Tennessee, chairman of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases. These propositions are intended to authorize this Government to establish severe sanitary rules and regulations to be put in force in Europe as well as on the steamers and after their arrival in our ports; and there will be no opposition to making such national rules and regulations superior to those of any State with which they may come in conflict.

IV. It is my judgment that legislation in this last direction should not wait a single moment by reason of the pendency of the first two propositions. Such additional legislative power as the Executive may need for dealing promptly and effectively with the danger of disease from Europe during the coming spring should be perfected and passed through both Houses at the earliest possible day in January, and immediately thereafter any new rules or regulations essential to the public safety, made necessary by such legislation, should be announced to the world so that all persons or corporations concerned, at home or abroad, may know the prohibitions and requirements of this Government, to which they must rigidly conform.

Senator HARRIS is, I am sure, ready to confer with you with reference to the details of the bill introduced by him; and in a conference on this subject the other Senators and Members who are most interested therein will, I doubt not, gladly participate. I write to impress upon you my own conviction that the holiday recess should not pass without a successful effort to bring the details of any needed legislation into the best possible shape for presentation, on the day of reassembling, to both Houses of Congress.

Moreover, while I do not doubt that some new legislation will be adopted, yet I trust the Executive will not wait therefor before preparing and promulgating certain national rules to govern intercourse from Europe with this country in the spring of 1893. No legislation will be likely to interfere with or weaken such rules, and it is desirable that they shall be proclaimed early in January whatever may be the situation or prospect of legislation.

Very respectfully,

W. E. CHANDLER.

Hon. CHARLES FOSTER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. CHANDLER. In response to this letter, Secretary Foster invited the Senator from Tennessee and myself to call upon him. We did so on the 23d, and also had an interview with Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Spaulding, the assistant in charge of quarantine and immigration questions. The result of these conferences was that the Senator from Tennessee and myself went to New York on the 28th day of December, and on the 29th and 30th we examined the present preparations for the exclusion of cholera from that city. It is well known to Senators that 90 or 95 per cent of the immigration into the United States comes into the city of New York, and that the most danger of cholera is to be apprehended from vessels arriving at that port.

Before we went to New York the following memorandum was sent to Assistant Secretary Spaulding, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paper will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Memorandum for the Secretary of the Treasury, furnished by Senators HARRIS and CHANDLER December 23, 1892.

I.

Please inform us what is the present statutory authority under which the President's proclamation was issued establishing a twenty days quarantine of immigrants.

II.

What additional law, if any, is desired confirming or conferring power in the Executive in reference to quarantine.

III.

Please examine Senate bill No. 2707, as reported December 22, and suggest at once any desirable amendments, either in form or substance.

IV.

It is suggested that the Executive regulations to be observed abroad, on the voyages, and in our own ports, for the prevention of the introduction of cholera or other disease, during the year 1893, be framed and promulgated immediately and without waiting for new legislation.

Mr. CHANDLER. Upon arriving in New York we found the preparations made by the State authorities were these: They have upon Hoffman Island a large hospital, or rather barracks, intended as a general rule for the accommodation of quarantined passengers who are not diseased. These Hoffman Island buildings are now in excellent condition. They were subjected during the dangers of last year to severe criticisms by a committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, and in a report on that subject, which has been recently printed, the report of the special committee on quarantine, those criticisms of the buildings and other plants upon Hoffman Island are recited, but in a latter portion of the report it is stated that the defects which the committee found have been measurably remedied. As Hoffman Island appeared to me, it seemed to be in every way admirably designed as a quarantine station.

Directly below Hoffman Island is Swinburne Island, and that is covered with hospital buildings. It is intended for the detention of passengers among whom there may be some cases of cholera. The buildings upon Swinburne Island are therefore arranged upon the pavilion plan, and in addition to the main or central buildings there are a number of pavilions located at different points about the island, in order to provide for the separation of patients. I think the Senator from Tennessee will concur with me in saying that Swinburne Island is also thoroughly equipped for the purposes for which it is intended to be used. Those two large establishments upon those islands now stand empty. They are only occupied by attendants, and they are ready for use. They belong to the State of New York. I should suppose they were of great value; perhaps, in round numbers, $500,000 each, or $1,000,000, would represent the money investment of the State of New York in these properties.

It is, however, not the purpose of the State quarantine authorities to treat any cases of cholera actually entering the port upon Hoffman or Swinburne Island, but they intend to have and now have distinctly in view a floating hospital, believing that cases of actual cholera can be better treated, or at least with more safety, upon a floating hospital than at either Hoffman or Swinburne Island or anywhere upon the land.

Mr. HARRIS. The floating hospital is in the course of construction at this time.

Mr. CHANDLER. The floating hospital is now in the course of construction.

These constitute the quarantine preparations of the State of New York, the State quarantine being under the control of Dr. William T. Jenkins, who accompanied the Senator and myself, and showed us what facilities were possessed by the State of New York for keeping out disease. We were also informed that the State had acquired Fire Island as an additional quarantine station, but that we did not visit.

On the next day, the Senator from Tennessee being unable to accompany me, I examined the preparations which had been made by the city health department of New York. That department is under the charge of the city board of health, of which Mr. Charles G. Wilson is president and Dr. Cyrus Edson is the sanitary superintendent. The preparations which the city authorities make is for dealing with cholera if any cases actually enter the city, and for dealing with other similar diseases which so enter. If a case of cholera passes the State and National authorities and reaches the city, or if the disease breaks out in the city, it is taken in charge by the city authorities. The preparations which the city has for dealing with contagious or deadly diseases are as follows: They have a sanitary station on the East River at the foot of Sixteenth street, I think. There is a reception hospital there, and a hospital that has existed for many years, called the Willard Parker Hospital, and there is now building at this point a large modern model hospital for the treatment of patients with infectious diseases; but it is not designed to keep such patients for any length of time at the reception hospital.

The main reliance of the health department of the city is upon the Riverside Hospital at North Brother Island, which is up the East River beyond Blackwells Island and this place I visited. I found it to be a central hospital with many pavilions now existing and others in the course of construction. This is where the typhus fever patients of last February were taken, and where all the cases of deadly contagious disease are taken for treatment. It is a most admirably arranged establishment. The preparations for avoiding the transmission of disease from one patient to another are of the most perfect character. If I may be allowed to judge, I can not conceive of any better hospital that can be constructed for such a purpose than the Riverside Hospital at North Brother Island, belonging to the city of New York.

In addition the health department of the city controls a large vacant island called Rikers Island, about half a mile from North Brother Island, and upon that it is designed, if there is a great outbreak of cholera, to treat patients in tents. I found that the plan of treating persons who are threatened with or have cholera in tents out of doors is regarded favorably at North Brother Island. Steam pipes have been carried out into the open spaces, coils of pipe have been erected, wooden floors have been laid down, and hospital tents have been placed over them and they are heated by these coils. I was informed that there was no trouble even in the coldest weather in treating cases of infectious disease in those tents; that is to say, the patients can be treated without any more danger to their own lives than if they were kept inside of a brick or wooden building, and there is less danger of communicating the contagion to others.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] and myself also examined the national preparation to keep out cholera.

Mr. PLATT. Before the Senator comes to that will he allow a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. Who appoints the health officer of the port of New York, Dr. Jenkins?

Mr. CHANDLER. Dr. Jenkins is a State official appointed by the governor. Dr. Cyrus Edson is at the head of the health department of the city of New York, and I have stated the distinction between the two jurisdictions.

Mr. PLATT. The health department of the city has nothing to do with the disease until it gets on land?

Mr. CHANDLER. No, sir; the line of demarcation is, that it is the business of the State quarantine authorities to keep disease from getting into the city, and the health department of the city has nothing to do with that duty. After the disease has entered the city it is the business of the health department of the city to take care of it and suppress it, if they can; and they have nothing to do with quarantine.

Now as to the preparations of the national authorities. Last summer, in pursuance of the general power of the Secretary of the Treasury, and I suppose with the funds which were given to him by a vote first taken in the Senate (the amendment having been reported by the Senator from Iowa, Mr. ALLISON), the United States officials undertook to make preparation for cholera, and went down below Swinburne Island to Sandy Hook, just out of the line of the main ship channel, which makes a right angle at this point, and erected temporary barracks. This is Camp Low, at Sandy Hook. The buildings are of wood, with a large wooden hospital remote from the barracks. Large numbers of quarantined passengers, among whom disease had not developed, were taken and kept there some six or eight days last summer, and Camp Low remains subject to be enlarged and improved, and I think it is in every way an available station for quarantining passengers, or even for the treatment of passengers who may be diseased.

Mr. PLATT. It is on the United States reservation.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is on the United States military reservation, up the Hook as far away as possible from the military station and from the light-house, but not over to the Jersey shore, because the Hook proper is separated by a bare neck from the main land of New Jersey, and there can be no possible objection to the use of this end of Sandy Hook as a quarantine station.

This appears to be the whole national preparation for cholera. It is not to be forgotten, however, that there is Ellis Island, the immigration station, where all immigrants go after they have passed the State quarantine and the national quarantine, where certain inspections are made in order that the immigration act of March 3, 1891, may be complied with, and where immigrants who happen to be sick are taken care of, by means of ample hospital accommodations, although it is not intended that persons who may be afflicted with contagious or infectious disease shall be treated upon Ellis Island.

Mr. CULLOM. A large building has been recently erected there?

Mr. CHANDLER. There is a very large building, but it is needed for immigration purposes. Whether there is much or little immigration it is needed for immigration purposes and would not be available as a cholera hospital.

Mr. PLATT. It would not be needed if immigration were entirely suspended, I suppose?

Mr. CHANDLER. If immigration were entirely suspended it might be possible to get along without Ellis Island, but I do not think that under any suspension for one year we should be without a certain number of steerage passengers, and those steerage passengers it would be judicious to send to Ellis Island, as all immigrants are now taken to Ellis Island.

Mr. PLATT. What does the Senator mean by that? Does he mean that there would be steerage passengers coming as tourists, or for pleasure, or temporarily?

Mr. CHANDLER. I see the purpose of the Senator, and will be very happy to discuss that point with him at some time; but the suspension of all immigration for one year does not in terms abolish steerage passage. It will still remain the duty of the immigration officers to enforce the laws, and they will have occasion to use Ellis Island. Besides, Ellis Island is so near to the Jersey coast that I am quite sure the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], who was afraid to have a naval powder magazine there, would certainly object to its being used as a cholera hospital.

Mr. President, I was favorably impressed with the preparations at New York, national, State, and municipal, for keeping out cholera and for treating cholera cases if cholera makes its advent into the city. I have nothing to find fault with, nothing to censure, nothing to complain of. I think that substantially all the preparation has been made that is demanded by the situation, except that I believe the Secretary of the Treasury should without a week's delay put Camp Low into the most perfect condition, and I think that a large contingency or emergency appropriation should be given to the President and the Secretary of the Treasury before Congress adjourns on the 3d of March.

Mr. CULLOM. If it will not interrupt the Senator, as this seems to be a sort of joint stock arrangement between the State and National Government, I wish to inquire if the Senator is entirely satisfied with it himself?

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, it is not a joint stock arrangement. There is a national jurisdiction and there is a State jurisdiction on the subject of quarantine. Under the existing laws of the United States it is the duty of the national authorities to aid the State authorities. While I am aware that the inconveniences of this double jurisdiction are so great that at no distant day it may be deemed necessary or advisable by Congress to take entire control by national authority of the subject of quarantine, yet the difficulties which would surround an attempt to do so at this time are so great that I am not myself in favor of making the attempt at this session of Congress. That is the point the Senator wished to call to my attention.

Mr. CULLOM. That is what I desired to hear the Senator give his expression upon. I do not pretend to indicate that this is not the best that can be done under the circumstances, but I wanted to ascertain whether the Senator thinks it is satisfactory.

Mr. CHANDLER. My own tendency is toward an exclusive national quarantine, but Senators will remember that on August 1, 1888, we passed a bill for the establishment of several new quarantine stations. A very fine quarantine hospital was established at San Francisco, and all along our coast national preparation was made for excluding disease. The exceptions were at New Orleans, New York, and Boston, I believe. If there are any other State quarantines maintained in full vigor the Senator from Tennessee will correct me. Therefore Louisiana, New York, and Boston have large quarantine establishments. The States have invested a great deal of money at their stations, and by the deliberate decision of the act of Congress of 1888, which established eight national quarantine stations, it was determined that national quarantine should not supercede State quarantine at New Orleans, New York, and Boston; and there has been no serious attempt to wipe out those State quarantine establishments until now.

I am inclined to believe, as I have already stated, that at no very distant day Congress will deem it advisable to take sole possession of the quarantine stations at Boston, at New York, and at New Orleans; but Senators will see how difficult it is to do it at this time. Shall we pass an act of Congress wholly excluding the New York State quarantine authorities from helping exclude cholera during 1893? Shall we do that? If so, shall we get along without Hoffman Island and Swinburne Island, or shall we take possession of them? Can we purchase them by negotiation, or can we take possession of them by condemnation in season to deal with the disease of cholera which is, I am afraid, already lurking at our doors?

Mr. President, I deal with the subject not theoretically, because theoretically I am in favor of national quarantine, but I deal with the subject practically. Notwithstanding there were some differences of opinion last year between the national and State authorities, I am not in favor of undertaking to bring on the conflict which would arise at once if we should undertake by an act of Congress at the present time to wipe out all State quarantines, and now, on the eve, for ought we know, of a terrible incursion of cholera, attempt to take possession of the Louisiana State property, the Massachusetts State property, and the New York State property, and assume the sole responsibility for the National Goverment of excluding cholera in the coming spring from admission into those ports.

Mr. PLATT. May I ask the Senator whether he intends to throw the entire responsibility of excluding cholera in those ports upon the State authorities?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not. My proposition is that we shall pass the bill which the Senator from Tennessee has reported. I found that Senator adverse to any such radical measure as the Senator from Connecticut is in favor of. I found the Senator from Tennessee, who as I said has been dealing with this subject in the Senate for ten years and who has added so much useful legislation to that which was upon the statute book, adverse to radical and hostile legislation. As we had gone from 1888 to 1892 upon the deliberate policy of allowing a State quarantine to prevail at the mouth of the Mississippi, at Boston Harbor, and at New York Harbor he was averse to undertaking at one blow, when we ought to be making direct preparations for the appearance of cholera, to destroy the State quarantine and establish as the sole protection of the country a national quarantine in those three ports.

I must confess, Mr. President, that I have been influenced by a desire to accommodate myself to the views of the Senator from Tennessee and to many other Senators who I know are opposed at this time and under the circumstances to attempting to secure legislation for the establishment of exclusive national quarantine, which perhaps one year from now, after the exigencies and the great danger which is now upon the country has passed, may meet with general approval.

So, Mr. President, I think we should pass the bill which the Senator from Tennessee has reported. I think we should give to the Executive the fullest power in the premises. I think we should make the power of the Executive supreme over the power of the State whenever there may be a conflict of opinion or judgment between them.

Mr. CULLOM. Does this bill do that?

Mr. CHANDLER. I think so.

Mr. PLATT. I should like the Senator to explain how this bill does it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will leave the discussion of the details of the bill to the Senator from Tennessee. There is no doubt at all that whatever the United States enacts on this subject is superior to anything which the State may enact. That is not a proposition which is subject to dispute. It is not necessary to put into this bill that whatever is done by the national authority in pursuance of the bill shall be supreme over State action, because it is a well-settled doctrine that this being a regulation of commerce, the regulation of intercourse between nations, the national power when it acts is supreme, and any control of the State over the question is solely with the permission of the national authority.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. Has the Senator examined the laws and the practice of two States; for instance, of Alabama and Georgia?

Mr. CHANDLER. I have not.

Mr. FRYE. I am informed by very intelligent shipmasters that the whole thing is simply a farce: that the law is used for the purpose of levying fees on vessels; that a vessel will get within 16 or 18 miles of Mobile, for instance, when there is no danger of cholera or anything else, and that some person entirely ignorant of his duty will come on board perhaps 8 miles further off, take a tin vessel and burn some sulphur, call it fumigating, and charge the vessel with very heavy fees. Our shipmasters at any rate think that the whole thing down in those two States they have written about has been run simply for the purpose of levying fees from American vessels.

Mr. CHANDLER. That may be true, Mr. President. There is no State quarantine establishment in Alabama or in Georgia that I think would be interfered with if the United States took sole control of quarantine in the ports of those States. If I am wrong the Senator from Tennessee will correct me, but I think that under the existing statutes the national authorities can take exclusive control of quarantine in the ports of Alabama and Georgia. If under these circumstances extortionate fees for useless services are being exacted by the authorities of those States, there ought to be a bill passed by Congress at once to prohibit such exactions. But I am dealing only with the situation that is presented by the existence of the three large State quarantine establishments at Boston, New York, and New Orleans. The more I have thought of them the more have I realized that it is practically impossible at this time by an act of Congress and proceedings thereunder to safely and judiciously wipe out the State quarantine establishments at those ports.

Therefore, I think that we should go on as we are; that the two sets of authorities should protect Boston and New York and the mouth of the Mississippi River, and that the State authorities and the United States authorities should get on harmoniously together in the great effort which the spring is to impose upon us of keeping cholera out of those three ports. The governor of the State of New York should put at the head of his quarantine establishment, if such a man is not now there, a superintendent who will get on well with the United States authorities, and the Secretary of the Treasury should put at the head of the national quarantine establishment in the city of New York, if he is not already there, a man who will get on well with the State authorities; and there should be a public sentiment in this country that will not tolerate questions of etiquette or petty quarrels between the national authorities and the New York State authorities during the coming cholera season.

Mr. President, while I have endeavored to forward the national and State preparation that is being made to keep cholera out, and while I cheerfully and cordially support the bill which the Committee on Epidemic Diseases have reported, after all I believe the danger is so great that we ought to suspend immigration for one year, and I deem it to be my duty to place some argument in favor of such a suspension before the Senate.

The evidence is conclusive and overwhelming that cholera does not come in the cabins of the steamships. It comes with immigrants in the steerage. This is not an invidious distinction to make. It is a distinction that is forced upon us by irrefutable facts. It is not a difference between the poor man and the rich man. It is a difference between the clean man and the man who is not clean. It is the difference between healthy persons who start with healthy surroundings at the port of departure and have them on the voyage over and persons who start under unfavorable circumstances, who are brought under conditions that are unclean and unhealthy, and who therefore bring the cholera with them while the more favored classes of passengers do not bring it.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does not the Senator believe that there would be just as much danger of bringing contagion into this country by permitting aliens to come in who do not come here to reside or to settle on lands, but simply come here as temporary visitors, as there would be from the other class?

Mr. CHANDLER. Not if they do not come in filthy steamship steerages.

Mr. MITCHELL. But that is begging the question, it seems to me. The bill inhibits the coming to this country of aliens who are coming as immigrants for the purpose of residing here and of making settlement on lands, while it leaves the door open as to all other aliens who come here, not for the purpose of residing, not for the purpose of settling upon lands, but for a temporary purpose, for the purpose of visiting the country.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator hear the evidence before he makes up his mind? I say frankly that the object of the suspension for one year of alien immigrants is to break up steerage passages.

Dr. Ewing says:

To my mind the chief danger lies in the immigrant and his luggage coming to our shores, and that danger is very great under the methods heretofore in vogue.

Dr. Stephen Smith says:

The cholera germ may be transported in a viable state in a warm, moist medium, as soiled old clothing. The conditions favorable for the transmission of the cholera germ, therefore, are found in steerage passengers (the common immigrants) and their personal effects. The immigrants, also, are far more liable to be exposed to personal contact with cases of cholera in foreign ports than ordinary travelers. It follows that cholera is more likely to be conveyed by immigrants than by any other means known.

Dr. Janeway says:

Almost all of the danger of the introduction of cholera into the United States will be by means of steerage passengers and their effects. This is almost equivalent to saying by means of immigrants and their effects. There is no reasonable doubt that the suspension of all immigration for one year from March 1, 1893, except that from North and South American ports, would tend very strongly to prevent the introduction of cholera.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him again?

Mr. CHANDLER. I want the Senator to hear the whole evidence before he reaches an opinion.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will he allow me just one question at that point? If it be true, as stated in that testimony and as is claimed by the Senator, that the great danger lies in steerage passengers, would it not be better that the Senator should draw his line of distinction as between steerage passengers and passengers who are not steerage rather than between aliens who come here to settle and reside and aliens who come here for temporary purposes?

Mr. CHANDLER. Undoubtedly the object should be accomplished in the most practicable way. It can be reached either by the exclusion of all immigrants coming for settlement or by the abolition of all steerage passages. It is a fair question between the two methods. But if you were to abolish all steerage passages, then you would not allow your own citizens abroad to come home in the steerage. There are these two methods, one or the other of which I think ought to be adopted, and as I have studied the subject, it seems to me that the most practicable and feasible method is to suspend the coming of all immigrants for settlement.

Dr. Joseph D. Bryant says, after having stated the quarantine measures which he thinks ought to be adopted:

If, however, for any reason, the preceding propositions be not feasible for the present or for the future time, then the only remaining one is the adoption of the second method, which is the exclusion for a proper time of the infection-breeding and infection-carrying agents—the immigrants themselves.

Dr. Lewis A. Sayre says:

The danger to be apprehended from immigrants and their belongings is very great.

Dr. Joseph E. Winters says:

It is certain that cholera will reappear in Europe during the coming year and it is equally certain that unrestricted immigration from Europe to this country will bring the scourge to us.

Foreign immigrants in the steerages of the European steamships, or immigration in any form or shape whatever, will be the certain means of keeping all European visitors from this country during the spring and summer of 1893.

Dr. Cyrus Edson says:

The great danger is that the disease will be brought into this country by immigrants arriving here from European ports.

Dr. Shrady says:

The history of every epidemic in this country has proven that the disease entered our ports on account of defective quarantine, and that it has been carried to us mainly by filthy immigrants.

Dr. Loomis says:

I think its introduction will be entirely through immigrants coming to this country in the steerage of the steamships.

Moreover, Mr. President, this is the view entertained by other authorities than those who appeared before the committee. There is before the Senate Executive Document No. 13, Fifty-second Congress, second session, a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury of December 5, 1892, from Dr. E. O. Shakespeare, port physician of the city of Philadelphia, who has given full and diligent study to this subject. He says the cholera will come in—

Unless constant care be taken to guard against the probability that the germs of the disease may be transported in the clothing and personal effects of those classes of transatlantic travelers who usually come to this country in the steerage.

And he goes on to prove by the prior history of cholera that such is the fact. He speaks of the cholera coming on former occasions, and says:

Again in 1873 epidemic outbreaks of cholera occurred in Ohio, Minnesota, and Dakota, which were caused by cholera poison packed up in the household effects of emigrants from Holland, Sweden, and Russia, respectively.

These immigrants sailed from healthy ports in healthy vessels, and were subjected to the usual sanitary requirements of the period (that is, mere boarding by the quarantine officer and hurried inspection). They passed through New York and the intermediate territory without injury to the public health; but when their infected goods were unpacked in the interior of the continent, they liberated the poison which gave rise to the local outbreaks.

In the discussion of this question I can not too severely emphasize the well-known fact that cholera has never been brought to the Atlantic coast of North America except by vessels transporting this class of filthy people from Europe. I have repeatedly pointed out that it is practically only people of this class and condition who, during time of prevalence of cholera in any portion of Europe whence they are likely to proceed or through which they may migrate, expose this country to the danger of cholera.

To persistently and relentlessly, winter and summer, adhere to the policy of rigid exclusion from all our ports of these dangerous classes until cholera shall have entirely vanished from Europe, is to strike at the root of the difficulty, and, in my opinion, is the only way to certainly succeed in protecting the country during the whole time it is threatened with the infection of this disease.

Dr. Shakespeare further says in an article in the Medical News of September 10, 1892:

To my mind, in the case of the United States, so far distant from the source of cholera, and so remote from European shores, we need only to fear, during the prevalence of a widespread epidemic of cholera in the northern portion of Europe, the introduction of the disease here through the numerous hordes of emigrants constantly arriving from Europe.

It is a fact beyond dispute that cholera preys upon and breeds among those living in squalor and filth, and closely follows their movement. It is exceptional, even in Bengal, the home of cholera, that the Englishmen there are attacked by the disease. It is true, also, in filthy and frightfully unsanitary localities in Southern and Eastern Europe, that the intelligent and well-to-do classes suffer to no great extent during the period of cholera epidemic. There is but little danger of the class of people who constitute the cabin passengers of the transatlantic steamers bringing with them, either on their persons or in their clothing, the infection of cholera. It is for this reason that I hold most confidently that the chief and, I may say, the only source of danger of cholera finding a foothold, when inspection is properly performed at quarantine, lies in its introduction by the emigrant classes.

Dr. John H. Rauch, who is the secretary of the Illinois State board of health, takes the same view of the subject in an address delivered at the opening of the national conference of the State boards of health, held in the city of St. Louis, October 13 and 15, 1884:

It may be necessary to absolutely prohibit immigration, for a time, at least, from infected countries. Every one of our cholera epidemics has been directly and unmistakably traceable to the arrival of immigrants infected in person or in baggage and household goods. It was the crowded troopship and transport which brought the contagion into France from China and Egypt. It is the crowded pilgrim steamer and passenger vessel which carries it from Bombay and Calcutta into Europe and elsewhere, as already instanced. It is the steerage of the immigrant vessel, with its crowd-poison and other conditions favorable to the development of a specific contagion, which we have to fear.

And this, Mr. President, is the summing up by the Treasury Department in a circular to collectors and other officers of the customs, issued by Acting-Secretary O. L. Spaulding, November 16, 1892:

Experience has demonstrated that the principal danger of infection through immigration arises from passengers brought over in the steerage. The crowding of immigrants to the extreme limits of the steerage accommodations of many of the ships, the considerable quantity and the character of their baggage and personal effects, and the consequent difficulty of maintaining those conditions of cleanliness and ventilation which are demanded by sanitary laws, are among the causes which create special danger of infection from the class of immigrants referred to. These perils do not arise from the transportation of passengers in the cabin, and the Department finds no occasion to interfere with the landing of the latter, after they have passed the inspection of local health authorities.

Mr. President, here, as I submit, is conclusive evidence that that there will be no great danger of the introduction of cholera this year unless it comes in the steerages, brought by the immigrants. There will be no considerable danger that a quarantine will have to be established which will seriously interfere with the Columbian Exposition at Chicago, unless there is the danger of the admission of cholera through immigrants coming from Europe. It is my fear that whatever quarantine regulations may be established, if immigration continues to come, the cholera will come. Let the bill of the Senator from Tennessee be passed, let the most rigid rules be prescribed by the Treasury Department for quarantine on the other side of the ocean, for the surveillance of passengers while on the voyage, and for quarantine in our own ports, and nevertheless if these immigrants come the cholera will come with them, and the quarantine will not be successful.

Mr. President, I desire to read on this point from the statement already in print of Dr. Cyrus Edson, the sanitary superintendent of the New York City health department. Dr. Edson says:

> In regard to effectiveness of quarantines. It is an almost universally accepted fact that 70 per cent of what are termed good quarantines fail. In other words, where attempts have been made to keep a given contagious or infectious disease out of the country, in only about 30 per cent have the quarantine officers been successful. A perfect quarantine is only a theoretical possibility. The enormous amount of detail necessary to a perfect quarantine can not, in my opinion, be covered by the work of any man or men. I do not by this statement wish to be taken as condemning quarantine. The latter, when properly conducted, is of great value in reducing the danger.

That is the matured opinion written out by himself of the health officer of the city of New York, who feels that, notwithstanding all the quarantine preparation either national or State authorities may make, he will be obliged to deal next summer with cholera present within the precincts of the city.

I need only refer to the typhus-fever cases of one year ago. The steamship Massilia, which left Marseilles January 1, 1892, and Naples on the 7th of January, and reached New York Harbor January 30, brought from Naples about 450 Italians and about 270 immigrants of Russian origin from Marseilles. No serious disease being detected, they were nearly all allowed to land. Ten days later, on February 11, cases of typhus fever were discovered among the Russians, and after prompt efforts to find and discover all the immigrants and isolate them the disease was finally suppressed, the outcome being as follows:

Among the Massilia's passengers there were 138 cases, and 13 of the patients died. Sixty residents of New York were taken sick, and 15 died. Eleven of the health department employés, including nurses, helpers, and police, had the disease, and 5 died, making the total deaths 33 out of 209 cases.

A careful examination of the New York State quarantine officer, Dr. William M. Smith, health officer of the port of New York, whose assistant, Dr. E. C. Skinner, passed all the immigrants, showed that these officers had no reason to suspect the presence of typhus among the passengers.

The inspection made by the United States officers at Ellis Island was attended with a like conclusion. Several passengers were detained for various sicknesses, but typhus was not suspected until February 12, after it had broken out in New York City, and the few persons at Ellis Island then supposed to have typhus recovered.

Now, here was an absolute failure by medical inspection on the other side, by surveillance on shipboard, and by the investigation of the national and State officials on this side to keep typhus fever out of New York. It came in. It was dealt with afterward with remarkable success, in my judgment, for it is a disease much more malignant and more likely to be transmitted than cholera; and yet it was not dealt with until after all these deaths had taken place. Senators will notice that the deaths were more numerous among citizens of New York than they were among the infected immigrants themselves, and that typhus fever has not left New York yet. It appeared to be stamped out last winter.

There was little heard of it during last summer and fall, but now in the cold weather of the winter that very typhus fever has reappeared in the city of New York, and since the Senator from Tennessee and myself left that city there have been twenty or thirty cases of such fever fully developed in the crowded lodging houses in the city of New York. So I say that quarantine will not be sufficient; that sanitary preparation will not be sufficient, and that the only radical plan and complete measure the United States can adopt to keep out this dreadful disease, which is not much feared now because it has not yet come, but which will create a panic when it does come, is to practically break up steerage passages, and to keep out alien immigrants who wish to come here for settlement during the present year, 1893.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Will the Senator yield to a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will ask the Senator if he does not think that the suspension of immigration at the American ports would divert the stream of immigration into this country through the ports at Halifax, Quebec, and by way of the Great Lakes and the Canadian Pacific Railroad.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not, Mr. President. I do not think that if this radical measure is adopted by the United States the immigrants are going to be allowed to embark on board the steamships, and I certainly do not believe that Canada is going to protect herself any less rigidly than we will protect ourselves.

Without going at length into the subject but to answer the question directly, I am not afraid, if the bill passes for the suspension of immigration for one year, that there will be any cholera-breeding immigration which will come into this country by land. So I say that we ought to pass a one-year suspension bill. I believe that before the 3d of March arrives we shall conclude to pass it. I believe before that time the Senator from Tennessee will conclude, from the cholera manifestations in Europe and from reflection upon the subject, that more radical measures than quarantine measures will be necessary in order to protect the sixty-seven millions of American people from an advancing and terrible scourge of pestilence which even now threatens them.

Mr. President, a suspension of immigration for one year, and the prohibition during that period of any entry into the United States, for settlement, of persons from European countries where cholera prevails is not a great hardship. Immigration has been already almost suspended, and we ought to take advantage of its breakdown and prevent the reëstablishment of such steerage passages as have prevailed. The steamship companies already profess that they have given up taking steerage passengers, and that the recent extensive arrival of immigrants has only resulted from the fact that many prepaid tickets have been sold, and that immigrants are making haste to use them.

But the steamship companies have discontinued since the first day of January the sale in this country of prepaid tickets, and it is only necessary to take advantage of the fact and by law make a legal suspension for one year and no great harm will be done. If we delude ourselves into the belief that quarantine regulations will be sufficient, and that the Treasury Department and Dr. Jenkins will keep the cholera out of New York City, and if immigrants understand that they are to be admitted, and the stream of immigration is to be resumed in the spring, we shall find out to our sorrow, in my judgment, after Congress has adjourned on the 4th day of March, that we made a mistake in not adopting more stringent measures than are proposed, except in the bill which has been reported by the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. If the introduction of cholera is simply a question of passengers coming, as it is called, in the steerage, why may it not be avoided under section 2 of the bill of the Senator from Tennessee, requiring every vessel to have a bill of health and comply with certain sanitary regulations in order to get that bill of health? In other words, can we not refuse to receive any immigrants who come in the steerage? Can we not abolish the steerage although the vessels are foreign vessels?

Mr. CHANDLER. We can undoubtedly abolish steerage passages if we wish to do so. I spoke of it as an alternative method of legislation. That would be compelling, however, all our own citizens who are abroad to return in the third cabin. That is an alternative proposition. I prefer myself to say to foreigners who want to come here to settle, stay away for a year. That rule practically abolishes steerage passages, and no foreigners will come, except as visitors, and they will come in the cabin, and they will be an entirely different class of persons from those from whom cholera is to be apprehended.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] asked a question which the Senator from New Hampshire did not reply to. It was whether under the bill now pending and under rules and regulations which might be prescribed under the terms of the bill steerage passengers could not be provided against without any further legislation than the pending bill. That was the question the Senator from Connecticut asked.

Mr. CHANDLER. I reply to both Senators that undoubtedly steerage passengers can be excluded.

Mr. FRYE. Under the pending bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. Not as it now stands.

Mr. FRYE. Now, I should like to ask the Senator another question: Section 7, which appears in the bill as a proposed amendment, I suppose has been adopted.

Mr. HARRIS. No; that is the pending amendment.

Mr. FRYE. Section 7, which is a proposed amendment, provides that whenever the President of the United States is satisfied that immigration ought to be stopped he may himself stop it by proclamation for such time as he thinks proper. Does not that answer to a certain extent the requirements of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CHANDLER. Without intending to give offense, I desire to say that I consider it cowardly legislation to push the responsibility for suspending immigration off upon the President. It is not a question of what we will do when cholera actually breaks out. The Senator from Tennessee and I know very well that this country will approve anything the President may do, whether he has law for it or not, when cholera breaks out. The question is, What shall we do in apprehension of cholera? I say it is a cowardly way to legislate to say, "Mr. President, you stop this immigration whenever you think best."

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if this be cowardly legislation, whether all legislation that lodges a discretionary power with a public officer is not equally cowardly?

Mr. CHANDLER. No, it is not. The Senator's question does not deter me. There are certain discretionary powers that should be given to the President of the United States, and we are doing this every day in legislation; but there are certain other subjects, as the Senator from Tennessee very well knows, upon which we do not trust to the President's discretion, but as to which Congress undertakes to determine the policy, and this should be one of them.

Mr. President, if we pass the 7th section and leave the subject there the Senator from Maine and I know very well that President Harrison will not between now and the 4th of March suspend immigration unless there is a widespread breaking out of cholera in Europe, or unless it actually appears in this country. He will not do it. Immigrants will not understand that they can not come; they will prepare to come. There is not one chance in one hundred that between now and the 4th of March President Harrison will do what we have not the courage to do.

Mr. PLATT. What will happen then?

Mr. CHANDLER. What will happen after the 4th of March? The new Administration will have a great deal on its hands for thirty or sixty days after the 4th of March, and the President may have more troublesome subjects to deal with even than contagious and infectious disease. Will he on the 5th day of March, immediately after he is inaugurated, take up this subject as the first thing and say, "I see I am authorized to keep the cholera out, and now I will issue a proclamation and notify immigrants that they can not come, whom Congress ought to have notified three months ago that they could not come?"

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator will allow me, the President who is to come in the 4th of March evidently has courage enough to issue such a proclamation if in his judgment it is necessary, because long before the 4th of March he issued a proclamation to prevent what he believed to be infection of the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I dislike the way the Senator from Maine has of introducing his humor into the discussion of a serious subject. I know very well that eight years ago the President-elect, who is now again the President-elect, in the month of February issued a proclamation on the subject of the free coinage of silver, and requested that Congress would pass a bill suspending the law for the purchase of 2,000,000 ounces of silver a month; and before deciding whether to vote in favor of the bill of my friend, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON] I shall wait for the February pronunciamento of the President-elect. I wish to hold myself in reserve as to that bill until I hear from him.

But, Mr. President, I do not think that he has any views that will be of use to us concerning the suspension of immigration on account of cholera. I do not believe that he wishes after the 4th of March to take this subject up, and to answer the Senator from Tennessee over again, I think that here is a question which, under existing circumstances and with the widespread danger that exists in this country, we should not commit to the discretion either of the present President or the incoming President. I think that here and now in January we ought to say that steerage passages shall be broken up and that no alien immigrants shall come here to stay during the year 1893.

If we do this it will not be necessary to impose lengthy quarantine upon our passenger steamships. Cabin passengers, tourists, visitors to Chicago can come feeling that they will not be detained at quarantine, while if we do not adopt such laws and regulations that European visitors may feel sure that they are not to have a lengthy detention at quarantine they will not come to the World's Fair, and moreover, Mr. President, if after our apathy and neglect cholera breaks out in this country the Columbian Exposition will be a failure.

Mr. President, I earnestly hope that advantage may be taken of the present suspension of immigration to continue that suspension, not only until the World's Fair has passed, but until we can devise ways and means for the resumption of immigration under different and proper conditions.

I introduced in the Senate a bill, No. 3663, on the 4th of January, 1893, which has been referred to the Committee on Immigration, and which contains my views as to what should be the permanent legislation of this country with reference to immigration. I will insert a copy of its provisions in my remarks:

A bill establishing additional regulations concerning immigration to the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 1 of the act of March 3, 1891, in amendment of the immigration and contract labor acts, be, and hereby is, amended by adding to the classes of aliens thereby excluded from admission into the United States the following:

"I. All persons physically capable and over 12 years of age who can not read and write with reasonable facility their own language, except that an aged person not so able to read and write, who is the parent or grandparent of an admissible immigrant, may accompany or be sent for by such immigrant.

"II. All persons not provided, in addition to means of reaching their final destination, with sufficient money of their own or of the heads of their families, for their comfortable support for two months after their arrival; the amount to be required not to exceed $100 for each single person or head of a family, and $25 for each member of a family accompanying or sent for by such head of a family.

"III. Persons blind or crippled, or otherwise physically imperfect, so that they are wholly or partially disabled from manual labor, unless it is affirmatively and satisfactorily shown on special inquiry that such persons are sure of an abundant support and not likely to become a public charge.

"IV. Persons belonging to societies which favor or justify the unlawful and criminal destruction of property or life."

SEC. 2. That every person entering by sea and every alien entering by land into the United States (except those coming directly from American countries who are citizens of the United States, or are citizens of other American countries and have resided therein for one year or more next prior to their departures) shall upon such entry sign a declaration stating the name, with first and last name in full, the sex, and whether under or above twenty-one years of age, the nationality, the town, city, or other place of last residence, and in the case of an alien whether the entry is as a visitor or settler. The head of a family may sign the declaration for himself and the other members of his family, and guardians or other proper representatives may sign the declarations for persons under their charge. All such declarations shall be received by the proper officers of the United States and shall be recorded and filed within the customs districts where the persons enter.

Agents of steamship companies and of the owners of vessels may make the declarations hereby required in behalf of their officers and seamen who intend to continue with the ships. Any person entering the United States without the declaration required by this section shall be deemed to have entered unlawfully and shall be dealt with accordingly under the provisions of existing law.

SEC. 3. That any alien who is about emigrating to the United States may make application to any United States consul, declaring his purpose, and that he is not excluded from admission into the United States, and thereupon said consul shall make due inquiry and shall examine such evidence as may be submitted to him, and if he shall be satisfied of the truth of the declaration he shall so certify thereon. Such application shall be in triplicate, and may be sworn to before such consul as well as any other officer authorized by the laws of the locality to administer oaths. Any applicant may include in his declaration any members of his family intending to emigrate with him. Two of the triplicate applications, with the consular certificate thereon, shall be returned by the consul to the applicant and the third shall be kept by the consul. The two carried by the applicant shall be delivered by him to the proper inspection officers on arriving in the United States; and if said applicant and the persons therein named, if any, are admitted, the fact and date of admission shall be written or stamped thereon, and one shall be returned to the applicant and the other retained by the inspection officers. The presentation to the inspection officers of any such application and consular certificate shall not give to any person the right of admission into the United States, but such inspection officers shall make due and sufficient inquiry as now by law required before granting any such admission. Blank applications for use in accordance with this section shall be prepared and printed by the Secretary of State and furnished to the various consular officers. They shall be printed in the English language, and also in such other language as may be appropriate, in which case both the English version and its translation shall be upon the same sheet of paper, and each shall be signed and executed. Suitable regulations and instructions for carrying into effect the provisions of this section shall be issued by the Secretary of State, and the Secretary may fix a schedule of fees to be paid by applicants hereunder. Any person making an application and declaration as in this section allowed, who shall make any false statement therein, or who shall submit any false evidence in support of such application and declaration, and any consular officer who shall make any false certificate on any application and declaration made to him under this section shall be punished by fine not exceeding $500 and by imprisonment not exceeding six months, and may be tried for his offense in any court of the United States in any district where he may at the time be found.

SEC. 4. That section 1 of "the passenger act, 1882," approved August 2, 1882, entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea," shall be, and is hereby, amended as to the dimensions of the compartments or spaces for passengers carried in a steamship by requiring for each compartment or space on the main deck, or on the first deck next below the main deck, 200 cubic feet for each passenger carried instead of 100 cubic feet as now required, and by requiring for each passenger carried on the second deck below the main deck 250 cubic feet instead of 120 cubic feet as now required, and it shall not be lawful to carry or bring any passengers upon any deck which is situated more than 5 feet below the water line. Section 2 of "the passenger act, 1882," aforesaid shall be, and is hereby, amended so as to require that each berth of an emigrant passenger shall be located fore and aft and not across the vessel, and section 3 of said act shall be, and is hereby, amended so as to require that there shall not be less for male passengers than three closets for the first 150 such passengers, nor less than four closets for the first 200 such passengers, and an additional closet for every additional 100 such passengers, and so as to require that each ventilating tube or pipe of exit shall be of sufficient capacity to allow a cross-section area of at least 3 inches for each passenger occupying a portion of a compartment as mentioned in said section; and the following clause in said section 3 is hereby repealed, namely, "in any steamship the ventilating apparatus provided, or any method of ventilation adopted thereon, which has been approved by the proper immigration officers at the port or place from which said vessel was cleared, shall be deemed a compliance with the foregoing provisions."

Said section 3 is hereby further amended by adding thereto the following provision:

"All ventilation shall be from and to the air above the uppermost deck, where the pipes must be properly protected and secured from the action of the sea, and no dependence shall be placed on ventilation by air ports through the vessel's sides. In every steamship the ventilating apparatus provided and the method of ventilation adopted thereon shall be subject to the approval of the sanitary or medical inspector appointed by the authorities of the United States, and in cases where such inspector may find the ventilating apparatus of any steamer defective, inadequate, or incomplete, it shall be his duty to notify the master and the collector of the port of his disapproval of the same, and it shall be unlawful for such steamer to land another load of passengers at any port in the United States until the apparatus has been made perfect, adequate, and complete.

"In case ventilating apparatuts has been required embracing fans and blowers, they must be kept in motion whenever necessary for proper ventilation, and any failure to so keep them in motion shall subject the master of the vessel for each offense to the penalty provided in said section 3."

SEC. 5. That every petition for naturalization as a citizen of the United States shall be filed at least sixty days before the same shall be heard and tried by the court, and notice thereof shall be given in writing to the district attorney, solicitor, or public prosecutor, whose duty it is to represent the United States, or the State, district, or Territory in such court; and upon the hearing, if in a United States court, the United States shall be represented by the district attorney or his assistant, and if in a State court the State may be represented by the United States district attorney or his assistant, or by the State's attorney, solicitor, or public prosecutor; and it shall be the duty of such officers to appear against such petition and to require that the allegations thereof shall be fully proven. Upon the hearing there shall be produced, if practicable, the original or a copy of any consular certificate which may have been issued to the applicant, and of any declaration which may have been made by him upon entry into the United States.

One of the most important provisions of this bill is a condensation of another bill that is now pending, requiring better accommodations for passengers coming from Europe in the steerages of the great steamship lines, more cubic feet of space, better ventilation, and improved accommodations in various ways. I believe there is no subject to which this Congress can give attention of more importance than the requirement that our immigrants, such as we admit, shall have better accommodations on their passage. We do not want any $10 immigrants. The price of steerage passages has at times been reduced as low as $11.

I have been told that the steamship companies bringing immigrants from the Mediterranean have discovered that they can feed an immigrant for 17 cents a day; that to bring an immigrant in ten days from the Mediterranean will cost for subsistence a dollar and seventy cents; that they can make money by bringing them at $11, and that they can make $10 each for bringing immigrant passengers when they charge nineteen or twenty dollars. Mr. President, we do not want such immigrants. We do not want any man or woman or any family, whether they come as tourists or whether they come for settlement, so poor as to come with such steerage accommodations as the transatlantic lines have been in the habit of furnishing.

Mr. DAWES. Then, if I understand the Senator, our great gain in immigration is what the passenger brings with him and not what he is himself.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Massachusetts has not correctly stated my theory, as I think he must see. It is not what the passenger brings with him of personal property or of money that is in itself important to us, but it is important that the people who come here shall be cleanly; that they shall be immigrants of good habits; that they shall be of those classes of the population of Europe that will make good citizens. What I say is that immigrants who are willing to come and do come under some conditions that prevail do not make good citizens whether they bring one dollar or a hundred dollars with them.

Mr. DAWES. I took the Senator as he stated it, that he did not want anybody to come here who was so poor that he could not pay nineteen dollars, or such a matter, for his passage, who could not come in any other way than in the steerage. Now he says that he alluded to the character of the party. I suppose that an immigrant's character does not depend upon the amount of money he has. I suppose that a man may be a man of excellent character and habits and cleanly and be very poor at the same time. It may be so. The Senator may have a different opinion.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, he can not be cleanly if he comes in the steerages of the steamships as they are now conducted. The Senator from Massachusetts does not wish to misrepresent my point.

Mr. DAWES. Certainly not.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not now arguing directly in favor of the exclusion of immigrants; I am arguing in favor of establishing such conditions of transportation that the immigrants will be healthy and will be cleanly; and if these requirements do result in such increased passage money that some immigrants stay away while others come, I do not care. The primary object is not to increase the cost of coming, nor to exclude poor people from coming. It is to make it sure that all persons shall come under favorable, decent conditions, such as human beings of any country ought to be entitled to if they travel on steamships.

Mr. DAWES. I beg the Senator's pardon if he thought I was misrepresenting him. I would not misrepresent him. I do not think the Senator intended any such thing as that. All I desired was that he should not be misrepresented.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to remind the Senator from New Hampshire that we exclude by law entirely from immigration into this country the most cleanly people on the face of the earth—the Chinese.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator will allow me a little further, he after all makes the amount of money a man has in his pocket the test. He measures his character by that in his statement when he does not mean that. I beg the Senator to put it in a different shape.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am very glad that, although the Senator imputed a meaning to me which I did not entertain, he now has corrected my position. I am much obliged to him for that.

Mr. DAWES. No, I do not put a different meaning upon it. I want to draw the Senator out so that those who read his speech will not put a different construction upon it from what he intends himself. The Senator having stated what he understands, why does he make the test of the character which he commends and desires to encourage a question of poverty?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not. I have not done it anywhere. I say that such and such accommodations shall be provided which safety to life and safety to health require the steamship companies should furnish, and then if immigrants can not get here they may stay away.

I propose further in Senate bill 3663—and I should like the opinion of the Senator on that point—that immigrants who come here shall have money enough to live on for sixty days after coming here. Why not? If a man has no money how is he to live? We have a law on the statute book providing that if he has found somebody who will employ him to work he shall not come in. It is the rigid, unalterable law of this country that if a man has a contract either expressed or implied under which he can get work by which he can live he shall not come in, and we deport him back across the ocean. If under those circumstances a man comes in without any money how would the Senator dispose of him? I say as long as the contract-labor law remains upon the statute book so that no man can come in who knows how he is going to get a living we should require him to have money enough to live on sixty days while he is finding work which will support him and prevent him from becoming a pauper.

Mr. DAWES. Is it not as easy, if the Senator will allow me, to modify the contract-labor law as it is to provide that a man shall not come in the steerage, no matter what his character is, while if the man arrives in the cabin there is no exclusion of him?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will say that I think the contract-labor law in the case of some individual immigrants works a hardship. The primary object of the law was to prevent employers of laborers in large numbers, in case of a strike, from sending out of the country and making contracts with gangs of workmen to come in here and take the places of the striking employés.

With that object of the law I sympathize, but it works a great hardship in some individual cases, because it is a rigid rule that if an immigrant come here without any money and yet has an understanding with some person that he will give him work, he can not come in, and we inexorably send him back across the water. If that rule is to continue it is utter folly for us to allow people to come in without any money, because for the first sixty days they are in imminent danger of going upon the public authorities for support. Therefore, I argue that it is reasonable to require immigrants coming under such circumstances to have enough money to be sure of a support at least during the first sixty days after they arrive.

Mr. President, I not only ask the help of Congress to make the conditions of steerage passages to the United States more tolerable and more decent, but I also ask the assistance of a higher power than Congress, that is to say, the steamship companies themselves, and of yet a greater power, that of the press of America. I find in the Washington Post of January 2, 1893, published by my former associate, Mr. Hatton, a Republican who is not sound on negro suffrage, and by my genial friend, Mr. Beriah Wilkins, a Democrat who is not sound on free trade, an article headed as follows:

A GRIDIRON LAHN PARTY—THE FAMOUS CLUB'S WATCH-NIGHT DINNER ON AN OCEAN STEAMER—FEASTING AND FUN AFLOAT—NEWSPAPER MEN AND THEIR WIVES THE GUESTS OF THE NORTH GERMAN LLOYD STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

I will omit some portions of this notable article. This North German Lloyd Steamship Company is the favorite route for the Secretary of the Treasury and the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and the commissioners of immigration and other Treasury officials when they go abroad, and the company is very kind to them. It always gives them the best accommodations, and if they find themselves lacking money when they are on the other side and Congress has been negligent in providing the means for their transit and their support over there, it loans them money. The North German Lloyd Steamship Company is also always very courteous to our friends of the press, and gives the Gridiron Club an annual dinner on one of its great ocean steamers. This is the account, which under the circumstances I deem worthy to be perpetuated in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

The members of the Gridiron Club and their wives returned to the city last night. They had been the guests of President Gustav Schwab, of the North German Lloyd Steamship Company, and Dr. George O. Glavis, of this city, at a dinner given on board the transatlantic steamer Lahn, the company's crack ship, at its wharf in Hoboken. The event, occurring as it did on New Year's Eve, proved a happy and jolly method of bidding farewell to the old year and welcoming the new.

The trip of the club to Jersey City was a delightful introduction to the festivities of the evening. The Pennsylvania Railroad had placed two well-stocked parlor cars at the disposal of the Gridironers, and as Mr. Robert A. Parke, of the Pennsylvania Company, was in the party as a guest, it need hardly be said that no detail of comfort was overlooked. At Philadelphia Mr. George W. Boyd, assistant general passenger agent, met the train and was royally welcomed, but was unable to accompany the party.

Almost the whole of the railroad officials seem to have turned out to welcome this party, and inasmuch as according to the interstate-commerce law the Pennsylvania Railroad Company could not carry these gentlemen of the press without being paid for the transportation, it is clear that for the ordinary passage-money paid by these excursionists there was returned a most liberal and unusually cordial greeting by the railroad officers.

Arriving at Jersey City, the travelers were conveyed in a steamer to the Lahn. After the guests had clambered up the steep gang-plank to the deck of the magnificent ship, they were met by President Schwab and Capt. Hellmers, the latter a handsome German of commanding presence, who welcomed them to the hospitalities of the steamer.

The tables laid in the spacious saloon presented an attractive appearance when, at 5 o'clock, the guests seated themselves, happy in the knowledge that no one ever became seasick on an ocean steamer when it was tied to a wharf. The American and German colors were appropriately intertwined. The piratical Gridiron flag—an immense white gridiron on a black ground—which had been flying from the masthead, covered the wall of the forward end of the saloon, and was a conspicuous object. At a distance the tables presented the appearance of a flower garden, but closer inspection disclosed the masses of color to be beautiful corsage bouquets ,or the ladies.

In a graceful speech of welcome, Mr. Schwab surrendered the post of honor to Mr. Frank Hatton, the recently elected president of the club, who, on this occasion, took up the gavel for the first time. From that moment the Gridironers had everything their own way. They sang, talked, told stories, interrupted the guests with witty questions and comments, and in innumerable ways contributed to a memorable entertainment.

Here I will omit various statements of the Post, but there was a large gathering of 90 or more persons. Assistant Secretary Spaulding was present and graced the ceremonies; and I am informed that a year ago the commissioner of immigration in New York City, Col. John B. Weber, was also present—the Commissioner of Immigration whose duty it is to enforce against these steamship companies the rigid law of March 3, 1891, which was placed upon the statute book to be obeyed, and not to be disregarded.

Now, Mr. President, I seek the assistance of the North German Lloyd Steamship Company, and of the members of the newspaper press in general and of the Gridiron Club in particular, in improving the condition of the steerages of the North German Lloyd steamers and of the other steamers which bring immigrants into this country, immigrants who do not ride in Pullman cars on the Pennsylvania Railroad and who do not live in the first cabin of this magnificent steamer, the Lahn, and who, when night comes, are not laid away in the sumptuous staterooms of such steamers.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to Mr. Schwab's testimony before the Committee on Immigration. He appeared here representing the steamship companies, and his platform in reference to the immigration laws was substantially the platform of the railroad companies, "let us alone and we will do about what is right." The railroad managers of this country are utterly unable to comprehend why anybody should think that, without law and without regulation, they will not treat the people of this country well because it is for their interest to do so, and Mr. Schwab endeavored to convince us that it is more for the interest of the steamship companies than of the Congress and people of the United States to take good care of immigrants and to do about what is right on the subject of immigration. The acting chairman, Senator HALE, called Mr. Schwab's attention to an extract from the Baltimore Sun of December 16, as follows:

STILL AHEAD OF NEW YORK.

The disposition of New York to boast of unusual occurrences in that city is shown in a dispatch yesterday concerning the number of passengers landed by a single steamship. The performance bragged about in this instance has been eclipsed many times by Baltimore.

The dispatch says: "The biggest load of steerage passengers that ever came into any port in this country on one vessel arrived here to-day on the North German Lloyd steamer Stuttgart, from Bremen. She carried 2,223. The largest previous number was brought here last May on the Darmstadt, of the same line, and was 2,094."

On April 14, 1892, the Oldenburg, of the North German Lloyd line, landed in Baltimore 2,493 passengers, and again, on April 28, 1891, the Weimar landed 2,428. It may be added that if the Federal quarantine had not been so restrictive against Baltimore the Stuttgart would not have landed the 2,223 passengers at New York, but would have come to Baltimore, where all would have been landed, examined, and forwarded toward their destinations in eight hours, as was the case with the number on the Oldenburg and Weimar.

Then Senator HALE asked Mr. Schwab:

Is it a fact, as stated here, that in one ship of your line you have brought over 2,200 steerage passengers?

At first Mr. Schwab did not seem to know much about it.

Mr. SCHWAB. That refers to Baltimore, does it not?

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. This dispatch is from New York.

Mr. SCHWAB. As to Baltimore I do not feel competent to answer.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. This refers to a steamer, the Stuttgart, which arrived in New York.

Mr. SCHWAB. In New York? It is a fact that she arrived there with 2,200 immigrants, steerage passengers. It was probably simply due to the fact that a large accumulation of prepaid passengers had come together, partly booked before September 1 and partly representing families and residents in this country.

Mr. President, the doctors who appeared before this committee have some opinions on the subject of the steerages of ocean steamers. Dr. Stephen Smith, a man of superior authority, who would not say what he did not believe, says:

The extreme filthiness of immigrant ships has long been a crying evil. Steamships arrived at the port of New York during last September, carrying upwards of 1,000 steerage passengers among whom cholera prevailed, which were so filthy that quarantine officials were nauseated by the sights and smells. The neglect of the officers of these steamships to enforce common cleanliness of the steerage deserves the punishment of a forty days' quarantine.

He also says:

The entire neglect of the steerage passengers by the proper officers of the ship in all matters that pertain to their cleanliness, comfort, and health has long been the subject of bitter complaints on the part of the immigrants themselves, and was strikingly apparent during the summer. The food is usually poor in quality and insufficient in quantity, and is served without tables and table appliances; the water is often unfit to drink; the bunks are filthy; the closets are foul; bathing facilities are absent or inadequate; the sick are not properly attended, and disorder and discomfort reign throughout the steerage. The appearance of these quarters on some of the cholera-infected steamships in September last showed the most criminal neglect by the officers.

Dr. Shakespeare, port physician of Philadelphia, in his letter of December 5, has something to say on this subject. He says:

The herding of these people (that is, the class of people who, in ordinary times, cross the Atlantic in the steerage) into the miserably ventilated and frightfully unsanitary quarters usually provided for the steerage passengers on transatlantic steamships, the modern rapidity of ocean travel, and the great facility with which these swarms of people are soon distributed all over our country, tend to multiply the danger to the public health.

He also recommends the Philadelphia board of health to so enforce the President's proclamation suspending immigration as will insure the public health against the dangers which are sure to arise from the subterfuges and evasions systematically practiced by the transatlantic steamship companies, or by the westward-bound steerage passengers themselves, or both, in order to defeat the only purpose which can justify the issuance of the President's proclamation, viz, the protection of the United States against the introduction of cholera infection through the persons or apparel and effects of the class of people who, in ordinary times, travel in the steerage.

Dr. Shakespeare further says:

I contend that the conditions of the steerage, for which the transportation companies are responsible, are unfit surroundings for American citizens at any time, much more so when they may be further endangered by close association with immigrants who may have in their persons or personal effects the infection of cholera.

I wish in this connection to emphasize the fact that there is no Atlantic transportation steamer with the steerage full that ever came into an American port, even after some effort to make a decent appearance, clean enough to escape indictment and punishment for maintaining a public nuisance if the same law were applied to them that is now almost daily enforced for the protection of Philadelphia against the slovenliness of some of her own citizens.

* * * * * * *

The business and trade of the ports of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore have been made to suffer solely because of the greed of these companies for the profits by this traffic in human freight in quarters but little better than those provided for the transportation of cattle.

Mr. President, if any reputable physician, if any person not interested in the steamships, familiar with this subject has ever asserted that the transportation of immigrants in large numbers across the North Atlantic by the steamship companies is conducted under conditions of suitable cleanliness and proper protection to the health of the immigrants, I have yet to hear from that authority.

Many years ago we used to hear of the horrors of the middle passage when negroes were kidnapped in Africa and brought here to establish the system of American slavery. I will not say that there are any such horrors in the steerages of the North Atlantic steamship companies, but I do undertake to assert that when 2,000 immigrants are crowded into one of these ships and bad weather comes on and the portholes are closed and the hatches are covered, the conditions which exist below deck—not in the cabins and saloons where the newspaper friends of these steamship companies are entertained—the conditions below in the steerages are dishonoring to the steamship companies which permit them, are disgraceful to humanity, and are a discredit either to the laws or the administration of the laws of the United States.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I understand the Senator from New Hampshire to give his sanction to the bill of the Senator from Tennessee. If all the evils which he is talking about occur in the passage from the other side to this, why has not the Senator provided in some way that those evils in transportation shall cease? The bill is very defective in that part. Otherwise the Senator should not inveigh against the steamship companies for a condition of things which he might remedy by a single section in the bill providing that they shall not carry so many passengers in a given space or shall better take care of them.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, no bill can be passed that the steamship companies are not willing to have passed. We are legislating with their consent; that is all. Just so far as they agree, and their newspaper friends are willing to help, we can legislate, and no further. These details as to the steerages are reported on good authority.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to ask the Senator a question. I should like to ask why not?

Mr. CHANDLER. Because the influences that from time to time have been exerted by the steamship companies have prevented any progress in legislation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask the Senator who is the subject of such influence? I suppose he can speak only for himself in this body.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will not go into any personal discussion with the Senator from Colorado. I have made no charges of illegitimate influence, but what I have said about the North German Lloyd Steamship Company has been openly and frankly stated. The Senator can read what I have said. If he wishes to make any personal issue with me I will not go into it at this time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not wish to do that.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator, for I have not been able to study his bill quite so much as I ought perhaps. I ask him whether in that bill which is the favorite with him, he has provided effectively against this influence?

Mr. CHANDLER. Against what influence?

Mr. DAWES. Against the influence he is denouncing, the fact that we must legislate with the consent of the steamship lines and of the press.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will give an illustration of what I mean, and Senators may draw their own inferences, the Senator from Colorado or anybody else. There is a bill now upon the statute book, perhaps it came from the Committee on Commerce, which provides very carefully for the ventilation of steamships. It states exactly what the ventilating apparatus shall be, and how it shall be constructed, and then there follows this clause:

> In any steamship the ventilating apparatus provided, or any method of ventilation adopted thereon, which has been approved by the proper emigration officers at the port or place from which said vessel was cleared, shall be deemed a compliance with the forgoing provisions.

Now, will the Senator tell me why we should put any such provision as that into our law, why we should elaborate rules for the ventilation of steamships and write them down in our statute book to be enforced by our officials, and then put into the law a comfortable clause that, notwithstanding all the provisions we have made, if the immigration officers of the country abroad approve of such ventilating apparatus as the foreign companies furnish, then all the provisions which we have enacted may go for nothing?

Mr. DAWES. Why should I answer the Senator? I do not believe in any such thing.

Mr. CHANDLER. By a provision in Senate bill 3663, which I have introduced, that clause is repealed. I think it is degrading to the United States to pass a carefully detailed law about the requirements as to the steerages of steamships and then deliberately wipe it all out by saying that if the foreign officials approve of the steerages, then the ships may come with immigrants, the provisions in our law to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I am endeavoring to finish and have almost finished.

Mr. PLATT. I will not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have entirely expressed my opinions, Mr. President. I invoke the assistance of the North German Lloyd Steamship Company and ask them to carry out their promise not to bring 2,200 passengers on any one of their steamships, and I invoke in all sincerity the newspaper press of this country, which is wholly represented in this city by the Gridiron Club, to aid in this great work of beneficence and humanity, the improvement of the steerage of immigrant steamers, so that we may feel assured that when the club next year have their annual excursion to New York in the luxurious cars of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and are hospitably treated on board that magnificent steamer, the Lahn, they may congratulate themselves that there has come some fruit of their labors, and that not only are these steamship companies able to give to their cabin passengers and their newspaper guests and their official guests the kind of entertainment they enjoy and the kind of quarters they occupy, but that also when the steamers start on their long voyages across the ocean down in the depths of the steerages there may be immigrants who, if they learn to whom they are indebted for their improved accommodations, may utter blessings on the Gridiron Club.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, after the long period of investigation in which the honorable Senator from New Hampshire has been engaged during the winter as the chairman of the Committee on Immigration, he finally recommends the absolute suspension of immigration for one year.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from New Jersey allow me to make an appeal to him?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I will.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill granting additional powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service is now under consideration. It does not involve, except so far as the seventh section may possibly indirectly involve, the question of immigration; and I do earnestly hope that whatever debate there is to be upon the question of prohibiting immigration for one year or other period will be postponed until the bill of the Senator from New Hampshire, which is the next measure in order after the disposition of this bill, may come up.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I have listened with great consideration to the Senator's request, but I shall not change the direction in which I was first steering, because I expect to get back to the Senator's bill in a few moments. The Senator from New Hampshire, chairman of the Committee on Immigration, with the committee, has undertaken to prepare a bill intended to protect the people of this country against the invasion of cholera or other infectious diseases. Pending that the Senator from Tennessee, chairman of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, has reorganized a bill which I think was before the Senate at its last session, and he now comes before the Senate with his plan for preventing cholera and other infectious diseases from obtaining a lodgment on our shores. Both the bills are here. The Senator from New Hampshire has discussed both of them. It seems as though the two bills were really hunting in couples with the intention to act first upon the bill of the Senator from Tennessee and then to be followed by the bill of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MCPHERSON. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. So far from "hunting in couples," while I am very earnestly in favor of the passage of the bill I have reported, I am equally earnestly opposed to the bill of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I can not say that I am opposed to either bill, but surely I can not consistently vote for both on the same day. I am not opposed to the bill of the Senator from Tennessee, because it gives some additional precautions, and as an auxiliary to other legislation it would be a very fit and proper bill to pass. But the bill of the Senator from Tennessee is entirely insufficient to reach the difficulties of the case. He proposes to give additional powers to the marine officer. What are the powers he proposes to bestow upon that officer? The power to make certain rules and regulations and do certain acts, but at the same time he is left, in the Sentor's bill, entirely at the mercy of the local quarantine officer. He enjoins upon the Federal officer to act in concert with the State authorities. The only step forward the Senator has made in his bill is to require that there shall be a medical examination of the immigrants at the place where they are shipped. That is virtually all the Senator's bill proposes to do so far as the machinery of quarantine is concerned.

Mr. HARRIS. I am sure the Senator from New Jersey would not intentionally misrepresent the provisions of the bill. If he will examine section 3 he will find that it not only lodges the power with the Federal authorities to make rules and regulations where none exists, but to make additional rules and regulations where they do exist, that are deemed insufficient. It does authorize the State authorities to execute their own rules and such additional rules as may be made where they consent to do so; but if they fail or refuse to execute them efficiently, then it is made the duty of the President to detail or appoint persons to execute them. So the execution of the rules is rendered as certain as legislation can render it.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator while upon his feet answer me a question? After your Federal officers have made your rules and regulations, what have the Federal Government in the form of appliances to assist them in the execution of those rules? Thay must rely entirely upon the State quarantine and upon such provision as the State has made for quarantine.

Mr. HARRIS. The appliances at the quarantine stations, I mean the national ones, are very far from being perfect at this time; but if the rules and regulations provided for by this proposed act shall be made at such places as the proper authorities deem necessary to have them executed, this legislation will necessarily be followed up by providing the appliances and the stations and the things necessary for their government.

Mr. McPHERSON. That is exactly what I object to now. The time to make such legislation is to make it now. It is to prepare a bill and submit it to Congress which will cover this whole question, to embody it in one bill and leave nothing to be done in the future. I believe that this quarantine question should go into the hands of the Federal authorities and be lodged there, and nowhere else. Especially do I believe this with respect to the great port of New York. More than 90 per cent of all the immigration to this country comes through that port. It is impossible for the State authorities, with any appliances they now have or any that they are likely to get, to afford the necessary facilities to protect the country against the invasion of disease which is likely to happen. The London Times the other day, in a long article giving statements made by sanitarians of Europe, conveys the idea that there is a widespread opinion among the sanitarians of Europe to-day that the seeds of cholera have been sown all over those states.

All the great seaport towns during the past summer have been victims of the cholera. The great steamship lines running from European ports come directly to the port of New York, and many of them have had cholera on board their ships. It will be impossible to keep it out even if you suspend immigration, although I think that would be a very great aid.

But, sir, what we require is to place this whole question where it rightfully belongs, in the hands of the Federal Government.

Mr. SQUIRE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. McPHERSON. Certainly,

Mr. SQUIRE. I have just returned from a trip to the State of Florida, as a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Immigration. The subcommittee there learned much upon the subject we are now discussing from the State officials of Florida, who provide the means for resisting the approaches of contagious and epidemic diseases. The statement made to me by Dr. Porter, who is the principal officer of the board of health of that State, was that it had taken that board nine months to prepare the very excellent quarantine station which now exists on an island near Tampa; that is provided with all the facilities for disinfecting vessels by the use of the bichloride of mercury and by the use of the gases from the burning of sulphur, so as to apply these remedies directly from the wharf to the ships. Also by the use of an immense cylinder for the disinfecting of clothing and other effects by the application of steam heat and dry heat upon the wharf. But it takes time to prepare such an apparatus; and it would be impossible, should an effort be made now to turn this business all over to the United States authorities, to prepare what will be necessary in time to resist the encroachment of cholera or other epidemic disease in the incoming spring.

Therefore I ask the consideration of this point by the Senator; that now we are almost in the immediate presence of the danger expected, and that it will not do, perhaps, to depend entirely upon what may be provided by the Federal Government; that we must avail ourselves of the preparations which have already been made in the States of Florida, Louisiana, South Carolina, and other places. I understand that we have no such adequate provision in the city of New York.

The question arises, are we to neglect to avail ourselves of the efficient arrangements already provided at great expense by the different State governments—arrangements that have been perfected by the skill and experience of the best experts on this subject—arrangements that have required time, to the extent of many months, for their completion.

Is it right that all this preparation shall be rendered useless, and that an attempt be made to establish a new regime and to indoctrinate new men as to their duties so as to supersede these officials of the State boards of health with Federal officials who may not be familiar with local conditions, and thus to introduce an entirely new system just at this time when the dreaded disease is so soon to be expected?

Is it not better to follow substantially the lines of the bill now engaging the attention of the Senate, which proposes to recognize all that is efficient in the past work of the State boards of health, and to inaugurate the Federal work whenever and wherever may be found necessary to supplement the work of the State?

Mr. McPHERSON. I have no idea of turning the quarantine stations all over this country into the hands of the Federal Government at the present time, for the reason that the appliances now used are abundantly sufficient to perform all the duty which may be required of them at the seaport towns where there is but little commerce and less travel. So far as the State quarantines are concerned, they may be made efficient with such aid as the Federal Government may be able to give them, and I think under the bill of the Senator from Tennessee the Federal Government will be able to give them at least the benefit of advice and to assist in making regulations.

But there ought to be the best possible quarantine in the great port of New York. The people of all the States of the American Union ought not to be held responsible for dereliction of duty in the State or city of New York in the management of its quarantine. If inefficient men or inefficient appliances are all that are found there for the reception of immigrants or the reception of other passengers coming across the water in the great steamship lines, then the people living in the States in the interior have a right to complain and have a right to demand that the general Government shall protect them against the inefficiency of a quarantine established at the port of New York simply to protect its own people.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] has spoken about the appliances found in the harbor of New York, all of which he confesses are to-day under the control of the State authorities. He has spoken of Hoffman Island, Swinburne Island, and other points. I have had some little experience myself of those things, and the view I had of the whole surroundings there, taken from the deck of a quarantined steamship, leads me to believe that we want none of these appliances. Let New York keep them. The Federal Government owns property enough to-day in the neighborhood of New York to establish a quarantine to guard against all diseases, a place far removed from the centers of population, far removed from any danger of infection by anybody, and within sixty days abundant quarantine facilities could be placed there to prevent cholera reaching the port of New York or any part of the United States.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him whether he would advise preparations to be made for meeting cholera in New York Harbor this spring, without using Hoffman or Swinburne Island?

Mr. McPHERSON. I would never allow an infected ship to pass by Fire Island. It is 40 miles, you may say, from Sandy Hook, directly in the line of all incoming vessels, where the Government owns a large amount of property for light-house purposes. It is a natural location.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is there any harbor there?

Mr. McPHERSON. An excellent harbor on the inside of the island.

Mr. CHANDLER. Such a harbor that the large Atlantic liners incoming could lie there?

Mr. McPHERSON. Not at all; the Atlantic liners could not lie there, because the water is not deep enough; but a Government boat could go out and meet an incoming ship, and if it carried disease and infected passengers bring them ashore.

Mr. CHANDLER. How can you deal with a heavily laden ship out at sea practically, supposing it is rough weather? I understand that when passengers were sent to Fire Island last summer the sea was rough, and there was trouble about landing them.

Mr. McPHERSON. There is no time at which passengers could not be disembarked from a ship at Fire Island.

Mr. CHANDLER. I had the impression, if the Senator will allow me, that Fire Island was practically out at sea.

Mr. McPHERSON. Fire Island is but a short distance from the coast. But that is foreign to the question entirely. I had hoped that something would be done with respect to the regulation of immigration. We are receiving to-day immigrants from all over the world, very largely through the agency of the steamship companies, who have their agencies in every country in Europe soliciting patronage. They have provided facilities on their ships for steerage passengers. They want to fill up the steerage apartments at all times, and they secure passengers by whatever means it may be necessary for them to take.

I have somewhere heard it stated, and I believe it to be true, that even the pauper houses and the prisons in some of the countries of Europe have been emptied out, and there is a suspicion that even the governments themselves have been engaged in assisting this class of people to emigrate to the United States in order that they might be got rid of permanently. Here are diseased people, infirm people, and all that class of people are now invited to come here and become a burden upon our Government, paupers and criminals as well.

No one would go further than I to assist immigration from foreign countries to this country, provided the immigrants were of that class who ought to be received in the United States; but if they are simply to be transferred from one country to another, to fill our prisons, our poorhouses, and reformatory institutions, then I think there should be some regulation with respect to the character of people we should admit. All these things should be taken into consideration and be regulated by rigid laws.

The simple fact of suspending for a single year all immigration means what? It means to keep out thousands and tens of thousands of worthy and desirable immigrants whom we might want to come to our country. The effect of it will be that at the expiration of that time we shall have made no progress whatever, we shall have passed no law to regulate the subject. We find in this bill of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] a simple provision that immigrants shall be examined upon the other side for contagious or infectious diseases, and for nothing else. That is all the purpose this legislation contemplates.

I wanted to begin at this session of Congress the preparation of a bill turning over at least the great immigration quarantine station at the port of New York to the Federal authorities, and let the Federal authorities prepare suitable facilities for quarantining passengers when they are found to come from an infected port or in an infected ship. That is the true policy. The idea of trying to work the quarantine stations of this country, the large ones particularly, by the joint authority of Federal and State superintendence is something that can not be done.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, it seems to me that this is a most extraordinary measure, and one that ought not to be adopted except in the presence of actual and extraordinary peril to the people of the United States.

This bill proposes to give power to certain officers of the Marine Hospital Service to control the whole of our foreign commerce, growing up towards two thousand million dollars. It invests certain officers with power to prohibit the entry of vessels bearing this enormous commerce into our ports. I wonder if our friends have considered how much the prosperity, the very subsistence, and the profitable employment of our working people in the vast hives of our industry are dependent upon the unobstucted movement of this commerce. It is a tremendous power; it is one that might well be exerted in the presence of war or when war was actually threatened, or when some great pestilenee was threatening to visit the land.

It seems to me that our scientific people have become dreadfully alarmed about the cholera in one single spot on the continent of Europe. What other government, Mr. President, has become stampeded and is proposing to imperil its whole foreign commerce on account of the cholera in the city of Hamburg, in Germany? Has Great Britain, so dependent upon her commercial relations with the Continent of Europe, with her people enjoying free intercourse with all the peoples of the Continent, taken any steps to lay an embargo on the shipping all around her borders? We have heard nothing of the sort. Has France done it? What steps has Germany taken to prevent the spread of this terrible contagion throughout her own borders? Nobody but the people of the United States seem to be alarmed, and alarmed to such an extent that they will put our entire foreign commerce, involving the employment of the whole of our people, within the power of a few marine hospital employés throughout the country, wherever they may be sent under the provisions of this bill.

This is all done, Mr. President, upon the predictions of the scientists. They are gentlemen for whom I have great respect, though they live far up in the realms of imagination. It was only a short time ago that the credulous people of this planet of ours were frightened almost to death by the predictions of the scientists that Beila's comet was going to crush us into smithereens, and the people were sitting up all night watching for the coming of this marauder, this wanderer throughout the universe, threatening the existence of all the primaries and secondaries in the universal creation; but Beila's comet did not come, and the scientists have been greatly at fault.

Now we are told because the cholera is at Hamburg, in Germany, that there is danger to the whole 70,000,000 people of the United States so imminent and threatening that the power of stopping the movement of the vast volume of our commerce is to be placed in the hands of a few men.

I read not long ago the predictions of another scientist down in the State in which I live. He, too, was predicting what terrible ravages the cholera was going to bring to this country, but he said the scourge was to come from Mexico and not from across the Atlantic. What does your bill propose to do to prevent Texas from being swept by this pestilence coming from Mexico? What provision does this bill make to prevent social intercourse all along the border between our country and Canada? How many people do you suppose come annually from Canada to the United States? I will astonish you directly when I read a letter from one of the most distinguished men in Canada on that subject.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to suggest to him that the act of 1890 clothes the Marine Hospital Service with ample power to protect the Mexican and Canadian borders and ample power over interstate commerce?

Mr. MILLS. In addition to this bill? Then, this bill, I take it, is merely supplementary to the other; and I suppose the provisions of the law, which I have not examined, to which the Senator from Tennessee refers, are as arbitrary and extensive as the provisions of this bill in putting the commerce between the United States and Canada and the commerce between the United States and Mexico into the hands of a few scientific people, who are to determine whether a vessel is healthy or not before it sails. One of these scientific gentlemen at Liverpool, or at Havre, or at some other point, is called upon to inspect a vessel loaded with a cargo valued at a million or five million dollars, and to determine whether that vessel is healthy or not. The scientific man holds in his fist the destiny of a vessel, and holds in his grasp the wealth and the fortunes of the men whose property is embarked in its hold. He is to determine the healthful condition of this vessel.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator from Texas, if he would not have a scientific man to do this work, what sort of a man would he have?

Mr. MILLS. I would not have anybody. I would not place that power in the hands of a scientific or a nonscientific man. If the cholera breaks out in Europe to such an extent that it threatens the health and safety of the people of the United States, it is an old doctrine of that party to which the Senator from Delaware and myself belong that the States are invested by their own citizens with the power to take care of the health of their own people. The States have done it heretofore as far as it was possible to do it.

But suppose that each one of the officers to be appointed under this bill should stop a ship from sailing and go to the extent, on the supposition that that vessel could do mischief, of preventing it, can he stop goods, with perhaps cholera or the yellow fever in the goods themselves, from coming on vessels which have their certificates of good health?

I remember a few years ago, during the unpleasantness between our friends north of the Ohio and those on the south side of it, that a distinguished citizen of the State of Kentucky was charged by some of our friends north of that border with shipping blankets across the river into the northern country among their people, with the intention of sending yellow fever to them in those blankets. It was a false charge. He was a gentleman of the highest integrity; but the scientists knew, or at least they taught, that these contagious diseases could be sent in goods. Can the scientific officer whom you place at these ports, who goes over the decks of a vessel and sees that the decks are washed clean and sees that the vessel is clean, tell whether or not the germs of disease are in the goods, placed there by the diseased person who handled and made those goods? The germs can come through the goods; they can come in the clothing of the saloon passengers, as well as in that of those in the steerage of the vessel, for pestilence is no respecter of persons. Whatever scientists may say to the effect that nobody but those who are clothed in rags and poverty carry disease, it is a fact that the wealthiest and the best people of the country will be stricken with it as well as the lowliest and the humblest.

I remember when I was a boy I went to Texas. I was an immigrant. It was in 1849, and there was cholera in the United States. I went down the Mississippi River and up the Red River. There were passengers on the vessel who had the cholera. They were just such people as we; they had on as good clothes, though they did not pay quite as much for them as we pay for ours. I stood by and nursed them, and helped to bury them when they were dead. The people who will come in the cabins and saloons of your foreign vessels and will dine at the tables, characterized by my friend as the tables around which sat the Gridiron Club, a small club of respectable gentlemen, but not all of the respectable gentlemen connected with the press of the United States, all of them may be subject to be attacked by the cholera.

This measure is not a proper measure to prevent the introduction of cholera into the United States. If it is carried out unwisely it may seriously affect the commerce of the people of the United States. While being unable to protect their health, it may seriously affect their commerce, and in seriously affecting that seriously affect the employment of hundreds of thousands and millions of poor people whose successful and constant employment is both meat and bread to their own mouths and the mouths of their wives and children.

I can not see any possible good that can come from this measure, and therefore I shall vote against placing this extraordinary power in the hands of these gentleman, and I shall vote very cheerfully against placing in the hands of the President of the United States, whether he be a Republican or a Democrat, any such extraordinary power as that, to suspend immigration to this country at his pleasure.

It has been the cherished policy of our Government from its very infancy to extend open arms to the people of all the countries of Europe to come and make their homes with us, to live in and help develop our country. They have helped to extend the boundaries of our frontier to the Pacific Ocean, and now have obliterated it entirely. They work down in our mines under the surface of the earth; they work in our forests; they fight in our armies.

Yes, sir, I remember to have seen them in that same period of unpleasantness to which I referred, touching elbows with me, and confronting me sometimes too closely on the other side for my comfort. I have seen their regiments when the commands were given to them in their own mother tongue, when they could not understand the language of the country they were defending, and for which they were dying on the field. I do not intend under the alarm of any scientists to prevent these people from coming and finding happy homes in our midst. They died for your side, too, Senators on the other side; at least they served by the thousands, yes, and died by the thousands, too. You found them everywhere just like the rest of us, all of them believing with the gallant Decatur, if they did not express it as beautifully as he did, "My country—may she always be right; but right or wrong, my country."

They loved the spot where they lived; they gave their blood and their service and their lives for it, too; and I do not intend to vote for any measure that may be brought here to stop immigration under the pretense of preventing the spread of the cholera. That is the pretense; but really I am apprehensive that away down below that the intention is to prevent the spread of Democracy in this country. I have noticed after these people have been here a little while, when they cut down the forests and dig the ores out of the mines and extend the lines of settlement and establish their little homes, the next thing they do is to vote the Democratic ticket. It is not the spread of cholera that some of our people dread so much as the spread of that liberty-loving sentiment which pervades the bosoms of those people who have suffered from despotism, as our fathers did a hundred years ago.

We are much more sleepy, much more confident in our fancied security about our institutions than our fathers were a hundred years ago; and those people who come to infuse fresh blood into our veins love liberty with greater jealousy than we do; that is, we are disposed to be more confident that liberty is secure, and they dread encroachments upon it. They stand faithful sentinels on the outposts, and they are ready to challenge every invader who comes to the camp.

There must be some great and overruling peril which threatens the safety of our people to induce me to give to the President of the United States, whoever he may be, the power by a fiat to stop the whole immigration of people from other countries coming to this.

For these reasons, sir, I have come to the conclusion that this bill ought not to pass. If some Senator who has had longer experience in this body than I, and who is more familiar with its rules of procedure, had given voice to the sentiments I have uttered I should not have spoken, but I felt that it was my duty to express them. I have done so. I will leave to the States to prescribe the laws which have prevented the introduction of contagious diseases, believing that they have the right and the power to do so, and that they can do it much more efficiently than can the General Government.

Perhaps it is unnecessary for me to read now the letter to which I referred, though as I said I would do so, I will read it, notwithstanding what my friend the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] has said. I confess I was astonished when I read this letter from Mr. Farrer, a distinguished subject of the Queen living in Canada, in relation to the immigration coming annually from that country to this. He says:

How large the exodus, as it is called, has become may be gathered from the Canadian blue books. At the census of 1881 the population of the Dominion was 4,325,000. At the census of 1891 it was 4,833,000. Between 1881 and 1891 the government reported the arrival of 850,000 emigrants from Europe, secured at a cost of $3,000,000. The natural increase may be put at 14 per cent, say 600,000 for the decennium, without counting that among the emigrants. Hence the population in 1891 ought to have shown a numerical increase of at least a million and a half, whereas it was only 508,000, so that a round million of native and European born Canadians must have crossed the line. An invader who should overrun the country could not do worse than deport 100,000 of the choicest men and women every year. Annexation could not be expected to stop the exodus absolutely, for northern people will always turn their faces to the sun, but it would certainly diminish it by bettering the economic environment.

I simply read this to show how many people are annually pouring across the line from the north into our States, by whom we might expect cholera to be brought, because Canada is taking no steps to prevent the importation of this disease; she is not taking any steps, as I am informed, to prohibit the entry of vessels into her ports; and if all Europe is overrun with this disease and we lay an embargo around our entire coast, immigrants can still come to us through Canada.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I had supposed that the Senator reporting this bill would explain to the Senate what additional powers, if any, are given to the United States in cases where State quarantines are already established. I think we ought to have that information. It is entirely familiar, of course, to the Senator who has reported the bill, but not so familiar to other Senators.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, referring to section 3, he will find that it gives to the Federal authority the power to make quarantine rules and regulations at such ports and places in the United States as have no such regulations at this time; and where quarantine rules and regulations exist, if deemed by the Federal authority not sufficient to prevent the importation of contagion, to make additional rules, which, in the opinion of the Federal authority, will be sufficient. When these additional rules and regulations have been made, it authorizes the State organization to execute those together with their own. If, however, the State authorities fail or refuse to execute them, it is made the duty of the President of the United States to detail or appoint proper persons to execute the State rules as well as the additional rules, and to see that rules which will prevent the introduction of contagious diseases are executed.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I am not advised as to whether that is an additional power given to the United States. I suppose that under present laws the United States could take charge of quarantine matters in New York Harbor; at least I am informed that it did so last summer to a considerable extent under laws which already exist. I do not know how far this may be giving to the United States additional powers in this respect. My own judgment is, from the very cursory examination which I have been able to give the law as it stands at the present time, complicated as it is by several different enactments, that it does not give any additional power to the United States to deal with the danger of the approach or the existence of cholera in those ports where State quarantines have been established.

Section 3 of this bill is a very peculiar section. The power of the United States to deal with quarantine affairs in all our ports I suppose is unquestioned, at least I did suppose so until I heard the remarks of the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. It is only where the United States has failed to provide law for the exercise of that power that the States may exercise it. But this seems to be a bill which makes the United States of secondary importance, and the United States power a secondary power to the power of the States; in other words, the whole feature of this section seems to be that wherever a State has undertaken at all to establish quarantine stations, and to exercise power to prevent the approach or the influx of contagious disease, there the United States must only coöperate with the State authorities; and there is an intimation here that it is very doubtful whether in law they may even do that. The very first lines of the section are:

SEC. 3. That the Marine Hospital Service shall coöperate with and, so far as it lawfully may, aid State and municipal boards of health in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations of such boards and in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations prepared by the Marine Hospital Service and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries, and into one State from another.

What does that mean? The Marine Hospital Service may aid the State authorities in so far as they may lawfully aid them. I suppose that is intended to raise the question in this bill whether, if a State has established sufficient quarantine laws, the United States Government has any power whatever in such a case.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to suggest——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to suggest to the Senator that the language which he criticises means only this, or was intended to mean only this: Congress has power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States." Local and municipal boards of health not only deal with quarantine matters, but with a great many other sanitary matters.

Speaking for myself alone, I do not believe that Congress has any constitutional power to enter a city in the State of New York or Tennessee for the purpose of doing sanitary work. While it has the absolute right under the Constitution to so regulate commerce with foreign nations and amongst the several States as to strip it of contagion, to that extent the Federal Government may enter a State; but when a board of health enters upon mere sanitary local work, I deny the power of Congress to intervene.

Mr. PLATT. The only thing which is referred to in the clause which I have read is the enforcement of rules and regulations to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries and into one State from another.

Mr. HOAR. To what section does the Senator refer?

Mr. PLATT. Section 3. So it proceeds to enact that in so far as the Government "lawfully may," it may aid the State in doing that.

My whole trouble about this section—I shall refer to it a little further on in some other particulars—is that it seems to be drawn upon the line that the Government has to ask permission of the State to take any hand whatever in quarantine affairs, and that only when the measures which have been adopted by the State are deemed to be insufficient can it make any additional rules or regulations to those which have been made by the State. Then the General Government has to rely upon the State in the first instance to enforce those additional rules and regulations. However, it is provided that if the State fails or refuses to enforce them then the President may detail an officer or appoint a proper person for that purpose. It makes the Government subordinate to the State in the matter of dealing with quarantine.

I do not stop to speak of the indefinite way in which the Secretary of the Treasury is to find out that the State regulations are insufficient. The bill says he must take the opinion of the Marine Hospital Service. I do not know how he is going to get the opinion of the Marine Hospital Service. I never heard before of getting the opinion of a bureau to act upon and to form additional rules and regulations upon. The bill does not provide for taking the opinion of any officer, but simply the opinion of the Marine Hospital Service. When the Secretary of the Treasury gets that opinion—how in the world he is to get it nobody knows—then he can do these things in so far as they are allowed by this bill; but, as I said before, if he makes additional regulations, they are still to be enforced by the sanitary authorities of the State where they will undertake to execute and enforce them; and the only power which is given by this section is, that when all this has failed, when the quarantine establishments of the States are insufficient, and additional regulations have been made, then, if in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury or some one else, the State authorities do not properly enforce the rules and regulations which have been made by the Government, a detail may be made of an officer by the President to do it. If any way can be devised more ingeniously calculated to precipitate and create a conflict between the State and national authorities I should like to know what it is.

Mr. VEST. I understand that the State of New York and the municipality of the city of New York have a very perfect system of quarantine. Does the Senator from Connecticut propose that that quarantine system in the State and city shall be ignored entirely, and that no use shall be made of it if cholera threatens this country?

Mr. PLATT. The Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York supposes so according to a document which I have in my hand, and which will perhaps answer the suggestion made by the Senator as well as it can be answered. It is not very long, and I shall read it. It is recent action being dated January 3, 1893, a petition addressed to the Senate and House of Representatives.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

May it please your honorable body:

Your memorialists, the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, at a largely attended meeting, called to consider the report of their special committee on quarantine, unanimously adopted the following resolutions, among others:

Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce memorialize the President and the Congress of the United States to enact as speedily as may be a suitable law placing the control of quarantine at New York and at all other places under national control.

Resolved, That the attention of Congress is respectfully directed to the injurious influences that continued indiscriminate immigration may have upon the welfare of this country, in the hope that careful investigation relative thereto may be promptly had.

The arguments in favor of a national quarantine, drawn from the recent experiences of New York, were declared to be the following:

1. The Federal Government, being an indispensable factor in every quarantine crisis, it is only by giving to the Federal Government complete control that conflicts of authority and the weakening effects of official jealousy can be avoided.

2. The Federal Government, in every crisis, through the various arms of the public service, is able to command an amount of expert coöperation entirely beyond the reach of a State department.

3. The Federal Government has at command the trained men who have to be summoned to the help of the State in time of peril. It is better to have the Federal Government directly responsible, instead of indirectly.

4. To these may be added the further consideration that the coöperation of consuls with the quarantine officials is a matter of growing importance. The health officer complains that he failed to receive the aid from this quarter to which he was entitled. It is clear that these officers would be less likely to be at fault as towards Federal officials.

5. An international supervision of infectious diseases is a probable and a very desirable outcome of recent experiences. Such an outcome of itself would necessitate a national quarantine.

To these arguments might be added many others, not the least of which appear to your memorialists the opportunity, through Federal control, of obtaining a uniform basis for quarantine in all places, and that a high scientific basis; and the preventing of needless quarantine of one American port against all others. In view of the not improbable outbreak again of cholera in the spring, and in view of the importance of time for making the needful preparations, your honorable body is urged to take decisive action speedily, and to equip whatever authorities may be charged with the responsibility of conducting the Federal quarantine with ample powers and with ample funds to enable them to cope adequately with any emergency.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

ALEXANDER E. ORR, Vice-President.
[SEAL.] GEORGE WILSON, Secretary.

It is not signed by the president, Seth Low, but the whole history of what the Chamber of Commerce did during the difficulties which arose between the State and Federal authorities in New York with reference to the exclusion of the cholera I think warrants the inference that it is according to his view of what should be done.

We have, then, this body in the State of New York, than which none stands higher and than which none exerts a greater or more powerful influence, asking Congress to put the whole matter of quarantine at the port of New York in the hands of the Federal authorities. As the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON] has well said, a neglect to do it, in my judgment, imperils the health of the American people.

No one can read the account of the attempt to deal with cholera last fall in the port of New York by the authorities of the State without being convinced that quarantine ought to be in the hands of the Government, ought to be in the hands of Government officials with Government power and Government funds back of them, to do what is needful to prevent the introduction and spread of cholera.

Just so long as we legislate upon the ideas that the Government is only to be secondary in whatever it does to the State authorities, just so long, it seems to me, we shall have insufficient quarantine, insufficient regulations to prevent the introduction of disease, and insufficient dealing with it when it comes into port.

I do not know why there should be such hesitation about the matter. I do not know why the State of New York, into which I am informed 90 per cent of all immigration to this country comes, should assume to deal with that immigration in the matter of bringing here infectious diseases. It is not alone the State of New York which is interested. The State of my friend who sits near me, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], is as much interested as the State of New York. The success, I had almost said the opening of the doors of the World's Exposition in the city of Chicago depends upon keeping the cholera from effecting a lodgment on our shores. Why should the State of New York assume the right to deal with it as it approaches those shores, to deal with it upon the high seas and before the vessel has touched the jurisdiction of the State of New York? There is a great deal of tenderness about this matter.

As I said, there is no question about the law; there is no question about our constitutional power. That was settled long ago. There seems to be some idea that in some way we ought to be very courteous to these authorities. My idea is that the National Government should go ahead. Then, if the State authorities wish to coöperate with the National Government, all right; but the idea of this bill is that the State authorities shall go ahead and then the Government shall be permitted to coöperate with those authorities in so far as it lawfully may.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut, who has given much attention to this question, whether there is anything, in his judgment, that ought to be done to keep out infectious diseases which possibly can be done which is not provided for reasonably by this bill; and, if so, what?

Mr. PLATT. I must have been singularly unfortunate in what I have said either in clearness or emphasis if the Senator has not understood me. I have said that I thought the thing which ought to be done, and the only thing which should be done, was to put the whole matter into the hands of the Government, which has ample power, which has officers who have had experience, and who know better how to deal with infectious diseases than do the State authorities.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator does not understand my question. I did not mean to ask the Senator whether he thought that someone not provided for by this bill ought not to do it, or that things ought not to be done in that way, but whether any particular thing, the detention of passengers, or any particular examination of passengers, or any particular exclusion of passengers, or anything which the experience of mankind and medical science suggests ought to be done, is not provided for in this bill; that is, whether there is not somebody whose authority and duty it is to do it—if somebody else could do it better?

Mr. PLATT. Subject to the power of the State authorities, undoubtedly.

Mr. HOAR. That is not my question.

Mr. PLATT. Undoubtedly if there was no conflict generated between the officer whom the President might appoint and the State board, the officer whom the President appointed might go on and act. The State arrangements may be entirely inadequate, so that no officer detailed by the President in the emergency can cope with the disease. The disease when it comes may find an absolute and entire want of the arrangements, scientific and other, which are necessary to enable the disease to be coped with, when, if it were put in the hands of the Government, the Government might have made preparation in advance for the coming of the disease, which everybody knows or expects will come.

Mr. HOAR. But if the States have not made sufficient preparation in advance, is there not full power lodged by this bill in the national officers do that very thing?

Mr. PLATT. I will answer the Senator from Massachusetts categorically that I do not think there is.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps the Senator will pardon me for adding one suggestion.

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. The difficulty in my honorable friend's attitude, in my view, is this: We find dealing with this subject to-day certain existing quarantine arrangements, powers, hospitals, lands, State officers——

Mr. HARRIS. General equipment.

Mr. HOAR. I agree with the Senator that it might have been better in the beginning that the States never should have touched and that the nation should have taken possession of the whole thing; but we must recognize existing conditions. I understand that the bill—without entering upon the question whether the Senator is right or whether I am right in this a priori idea—says: "We will authorize the national authority to look into this matter, and wherever the State regulations are insufficient, whether we see that insufficiency in advance or discover it later, when the time arises instantly to step in and supplement them and do everything that the State has not provided for.

If we do not do what this bill proposes in that way we have to improvise within the next three months a full national system, put it in operation, select our officers, get our hospitals, condemn our land, and throw away and make absolutely useless and worthless everything that New York or Massachusetts or Louisiana or any other State has now prepared for the purpose. It is not a question of original policy, it is not a question what would be the best for ten years or twenty years; it is a question what is best for the next three or six months. Therefore, if that be the nature of the question with which we are dealing, then to answer that question it seems to me it is important for some Senator to rise in his place and say, "Here is this particular thing which ought to be done, which is essential to be done, and which you will not get done if this bill is all the law in addition to State regulation which exists on the subject." It is to that particular point I call my friend's attention.

Mr. PLATT. I do not propose at this time to enter into the history of the attempt to exclude cholera from the port of New York last fall. It is enough to say that cholera effected a landing, and that, in my judgment, if the matter had been in the hands of the Federal Government or the Marine Hospital Service when news was telegraphed from Hamburg that cholera was there and was likely to come on a certain ship, it would not have effected a landing. Cholera came into the city as the result of ineffective quarantine.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. PLATT. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the Senator is mistaken and has not studied the facts with his usual care. There were only ten cases of suspected cholera in the city. The doctors came to the conclusion, after making microscopic examinations and other investigations, that those ten cases were cholera cases. I think only three of the patients died, and there is doubt in my mind whether any one of those ten cases, even if it was cholera, was anything but sporadic cholera or exaggerated cholera morbus. At all events, I am not convinced that it came into the city of New York from Europe. In my judgment the methods adopted by Dr. Edson and the city health department were such as to prevent the cholera making any headway in the city. So, when the Senator argues that the State quarantine establishment did not keep cholera out of New York City last year, he is arguing from mistaken premises. It did keep it out of the city very effectually.

Mr. PLATT. If one cholera patient was found in the city of New York I should hold that that cholera patient did not contract cholera in the city of New York. Cholera is not a New York disease. If the Senator says there was no case of cholera there, going against what has been the public understanding and what has been the opinion of the highest medical authorities of New York, then he has the best of the argument; but if one cholera patient was found in the city of New York, the inference is almost irresistible that it was because of an insufficient quarantine, and it is an open and notorious fact that for want of patrol people were escaping from the ships and getting to shore more or less during that whole quarantine; in other words, no one can read the history of that quarantine without knowing that it was notoriously inefficient, unskillful, and unscientific.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. Suppose all the facts he states are true, under what theory does he propound the belief that they will not exist if this bill giving power to the Marine Hospital Service passes?

Mr. PLATT. Upon the theory that the State quarantine authorities in New York, when this bill passes, will say, "Oh, yes, the Government recognizes that we are to deal with cholera; the Government simply is coming in in case of an emergency;" and whenever a question arises as to whether their arrangements are perfect, whether their rules are perfect, whether the people who are dealing with it are competent to deal with it, there immediately arises a conflict between the President and the State of New York, the President and the Secretary of the Treasury insisting that the Government ought to take hold, make the quarantine efficient, and keep out the cholera, and at the same time protest going up from the State of New York that the health officers of the State of New York, appointed for political reasons and not on account of their scientific ability, are entirely capable of dealing with it and are dealing with it in proper shape. Then, if the President overrides the State authorities and sends a health officer there, there is not a Senator here who does not know that there will be an immediate conflict of authority and every effort made to prevent his proper discharge of the duties of his office.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask purely for information. Does he or does he not recognize the possibility or probability of quarantine regulations which are not strictly regulations of commerce, perhaps not regulations of commerce at all, which fall within the powers known as police powers of the States, over which Congress has no control?

Mr. PLATT. In so far as relates to the control of disease upon the water, no.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not know exactly where the line which divides regulations of commerce from the exercise of police powers is located, but I have never been absolutely clear that a State may not in the exercise of police powers make quarantine regulations which go even beyond the regulations of commerce. That is the question I wanted to submit to my friend.

Mr. PLATT. I do not see how any State board can make any rule or regulation for the keeping out of disease, or for the treatment of it while it is on board a ship before the passengers have landed, which can in any way be said to be carrying out the police powers of the State.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if he means to say that a ship having come within the jurisdiction of the State of New York, and the Government of the United States having taken no cognizance of this question, the State can not interfere to protect its citizens?

Mr. PLATT. Again I am unfortunate in making the Senator hear me or in being able to express myself.

Mr. TELLER. I was following the Senator very closely and heard every word he said.

Mr. PLATT. I said the law undoubtedly was that where Congress failed to act the State might take entire control of the matter

Mr. TELLER. The Senator qualifies it now, as I understand him, that this being a question of commerce the State can not interfere. I understand, if the Senator will allow me, that it does not make a particle of difference whether it is a commercial question or not the State still has the power to protect its citizens against the bringing in of diseased persons.

Mr. PLATT. So long as the State does not interfere with commerce it has, but when it goes to the extent of interfering with commerce then it trenches upon the powers of the United States.

I do not know that I desire to pursue this matter further except to say that the argument is now made that we have not time as a government to deal with this matter; that the States have taken such steps that they only are able to deal with the matter, and the Government has no time between now and the probable approach of cholera to make the necessary arrangements.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator mean to say that a State has not the right to stop all commerce in order to protect the lives and health of its citizens? That is the question. Has not the Supreme Court of the United States decided absolutely that the State has that right, notwithstanding Congress has exclusive control over commerce with foreign nations and among the States?

Mr. PLATT. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. VEST. Over and over again.

Mr. PLATT. I understand the law to be that the State may not interfere with commerce in the exercise of its police power.

Mr. VEST. With great deference to the Senator, the State has the right to protect the lives and health of its citizens in any event. That is an absolute right of all sovereignty; and the States as to their internal affairs and the health and morals of their citizens are sovereign under the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think a State can shut out commerce from its borders upon the pretense of protecting the health of its citizens.

Mr. VEST. That is another question. Whether it is a pretense or not, would be a question which would be decided by the Supreme Court, but the State can act in any emergency of that sort, and that is one of the highest duties of the State.

Mr. PLATT. The State can not, as the Supreme Court has decided, prevent the sale of a bottle of liquor in the original package. That case must be so recent as to not have passed from the memory of the Senator.

I was about to answer the argument that if we establish national quarantine in New York, Massachusetts, and Louisiana, there is no time to make the proper arrangement to prevent the introduction of cholera. The cholera came to New York last fall about September 3, and the health officer of the State of New York puttered with it until the Secretary of the Treasury discovered that something must be done. He sent an officer over there, one of the surgeons of the Department, and in eight days Camp Low was built, equipped, put in readiness, and received passengers from infected ships under the control of Surgeon-General Hamilton. That was one of the greatest feats of construction the country has ever known or seen. The entire laundry machinery for that camp, very extensive, was contracted for, built, and put in operation in forty-eight hours. That is the way the Government can deal with this subject; it is not the way that State health officers do deal with it.

I do not know what may be the conditions of things down in Tampa. I know that the Government has undertaken the control of quarantine stations everywhere except in New York, Massachusetts, and Louisiana, and I, not knowing, have great hesitancy in saying what I believe; but I believe that in an emergency the Government in ten days can duplicate all that Florida has done in keeping out infectious diseases.

With regard to the statute of 1890, which the Senator from Tennessee says provides for the keeping out of cholera and infectious diseases from Mexico and Canada, I do not understand that such is the effect of it at all. I know it has been said that this statute did not give the Government any power to deal with cholera when it had once effected a lodgment in a State except to meet it at the State line and keep it from going into another State. I understand that that is the opinion of a very high official of the Government, so that the act of 1890 has not been utilized for the purpose of dealing with cholera or infectious disease after it shall have reached a State. But to my mind there is ample power given under that statute to stamp out cholera, yellow fever, the plague, the smallpox or any infectious disease, although it exists in a State. I wish to read the language of the statute:

> That whenever it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the President that cholera, yellow fever, smallpox, or plague exists in any State or Territory, or in the District of Columbia, and that there is danger of the spread of such disease into other States, Territories, or the District of Columbia, he is hereby authorized to cause the Secretary of the Treasury to promulgate such rules and regulations as in his judgment may be necessary to prevent the spread of such disease from one State or Territory into another, or from any State or Territory into the District of Columbia, or from the District of Columbia into any State or Territory, and to employ such inspectors and other persons as may be necessary to execute such regulations to prevent the spread of such disease. The said rules and regulations shall be prepared by the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. And any person who shall willfully violate any rule or regulation so made and promulgated shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500, or imprisonment for not more than two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

That statute in its terms plainly says that whatever is necessary to be done when the cholera or any infectious disease has effected a lodgment in one State to prevent its spreading into another the Government may do. Why not? If cholera has made a lodgment in the city of New York is the Government powerless and its hands tied as to everything except standing on the border line between New York and New Jersey and seeing it does not come over into the latter State? How many men must it employ to patrol the entire State line to see that it does not spread from the State where it is lodged into the State where it is feared it may spread? Is not there as much power to stamp out cholera in a State as there is to stamp out pleuropneumonia in a State? If the Secretary of the Treasury may, in defiance of State authority, enter into a State and slaughter ad libitum the herds of citizens of a State for the purpose of stamping out pleuropneumonia, may not the United States to prevent the spread of this terrible disease, to prevent its going westward to Chicago, to prevent its interference with the great Exposition, make rules and regulations as to how it shall be treated in the State where it is found?

I have not any doubt of the power of the Government to do that. I believe it was for that that the act was passed. There is no other reasonable construction which can be put upon that act. It is ludicrous to say that the Secretary of the Treasury is to make such rules and regulations as in his judgment may be necessary to prevent the spread of such diseases from one State or Territory into another only by going and establishing a line of patrol and quarantine along the State lines of the State within which it exists.

The act was passed for the purpose of enabling the Government to deal with such a disease in the States where it might effect a lodgment, and I believe the Government has entire power to do so. I believe it is for the interest of all the people of the United States and for the interest of commerce between the States that it should be done by the Government rather than by local boards of health, which must manifestly have less capacity and less ability to deal with it. I think, as the Senator from New Jersey does, that we make a mistake when we simply attempt to supplement what a State authority may do.

Mr. SQUIRE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. SQUIRE. Would the Senator have the establishments provided by the several States ignored? Would he have them rendered useless?

Mr. PLATT. I might answer by saying that I would have the State supplement the national authority. It never seems to have entered the minds of Senators that a State could possibly supplement the national work of dealing with these diseases, but that the United States must supplement the State work. I say we proceed entirely on a wrong theory.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], both as to the power of the United States to assume control of the subject of quarantine and as to the desirability of the General Government doing so; but it is apparent to every one that whatever is to be done must be done quickly. The bill has been reported from the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the proposed legislation, and I assume that it is now too late to change the method of dealing with this question. Therefore, I desire to make some suggestions in regard to the bill. I think it is somewhat loosely drawn and might have been greatly improved as a bill to adopt and supplement State quarantine regulations and to aid in their execution.

So far as the section that I understand is under discussion is concerned, by which it is proposed to authorize the President whenever it shall appear to him that, notwithstanding the quarantine defense, the danger from yellow fever and cholera is so increased by immigration that a suspension of the same is demanded in the interest of the public health, to suspend immigration from such countries and for such period of time as may deem necessary, I have no objection to it; although I wish now to say in regard to this section and in regard to a bill which has been reported from the Committee on Immigration, Senate bill 3513, for the suspension of immigration for one year, which I suppose is advocated partly upon the ground that it is necessary to protect this country against cholera, I have not a particle of faith in being able to protect the country against cholera by the suspension of immigration.

Cholera is no respecter of persons. It enters the hovel and the palace. It enters the city and the country. It followed the immigration to California in 1848 out from the Missouri River onto the plains and into the Rocky Mountains and attacked its victims in the pure air of the great plains. In my judgment cholera may come to this country as well in the cabin as in the steerage. It may be brought as well by the American citizens as by subjects of foreign countries. It may be brought as well by the subject of a foreign country who comes to this country to visit the country. It may be brought as well by vessels and those who come for a temporary sojourn in the United States as by those who come here to make their home in this country and become permanent residents. So I have not a particle of faith, I repeat, in being able to protect this country against the coming of cholera by simply suspending immigration.

I shall not attempt to suggest all the amendments I think might be made to the pending bill, but I call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee to some clauses of the bill. I find in section 2 a provision which requires vessels clearing at foreign ports to obtain from the consul, vice-consul, or other consular officer a bill of health, in duplicate, in the form prescribed by the Marine Hospital Service and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. I do not know that I quite understand what is meant by "the Marine Hospital Service."

If it means anything which can be applied and enforced it must mean the persons who are engaged in that service, the officers and employés of the Government. If it means the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, then that ought to be stated. If it means all the physicians engaged in that service, then it would be impracticable for them to get together in order to act in the form prescribed by the service. It would be necessary to have them called together in a legal manner, to meet in a legal manner, and to act all together, or a majority of them.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will allow me, I have no objection to using the term "the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service," but "the Marine Hospital Service" means the statutory bureau in the Treasury known by that name.

Mr. DOLPH. When amendments are in order, I will move to strike out "the Marine Hospital Service and approved by," so that it will read, "in the form prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury." The Marine Hospital Service is a bureau under the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall have no objection to it, if the Senator will prepare the amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. I have stated it, and will offer it at the proper time.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall have no objection whatever to that form of amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. I shall offer an amendment in the next line, line 9. The word "history" is used there in the statement that this bill of health shall set "forth the sanitary history of said vessel." I think "condition" probably is a better word, and I shall move that amendment.

Mr. VEST. Say "history and condition."

Mr. HARRIS. I do not think the Senator should move to strike out the word "history," but I shall have no objection to his adding the word "condition."

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator from Tennessee inform me how a consular officer can get the sanitary history of a vessel?

Mr. HARRIS. From the records of the vessel and the officers of the vessel it can be very easily obtained.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Oregon that the history of the vessel of course means its past condition, whether it has been subject to the disease, and so on. It is very important to have that history, because the vessel may have been already affected by disease, which, of course, should be known.

Mr. DOLPH. Then I will modify my amendment. In line 2, of section 3, I move to strike out "so far as it lawfully may," to meet the criticism of the Senator from Connecticut. I wish the Senator from Tennessee would notice the proposed amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator will please repeat it. I was diverted for a moment.

Mr. DOLPH. In line 2, of section 3, I propose to meet the criticism of the Senator from Connecticut by striking out the words "so far as it lawfully may."

Mr. HARRIS. I shall have no objection to that amendment. That language was inserted following the idea I expressed a moment ago, that certain things the Federal Government have power to do and other things the board of health do that the Government has no power to do.

Mr. DOLPH. In line 5 I shall move to strike out the word "prepared" and insert the word "made," as conveying the meaning that the regulations have been already adopted, and in line 6 I propose to strike out "the Marine Hospital Service and approved by," so as to require the rules and regulations to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to either of those amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Oregon will state his amendments in order they will be stated from the desk. The Senator will first state his first amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. Is it proposed to act on the amendments now?

Mr. HARRIS. I shall be glad, if the clerks have not taken down the amendments, to go back to the first amendment, and act upon each amendment in its order.

Mr. DOLPH. My first amendment is in lines 7 and 8, of section 2, on page 2, after the word "the," to strike out the words "Marine Hospital Service and approved by the;" so as to read:

By the President for that purpose, a bill of health, in duplicate, in the form prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. CALL. I should like the Senator from Oregon to state some reason why Congress should not prescribe a particular method for this action by the Treasury Department? Why should it not require the Secretary of the Treasury to have an official report from the Bureau charged by Congress with the duty of being informed on this subject?

Mr. DOLPH. This is the mere preparation of the form of certificate to be issued by a consular officer.

Mr. CALL. I understand it is that provision of the bill which requires the Marine Hospital Service to ascertain certain facts and report those facts to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HARRIS. The Secretary of the Treasury is required to approve additional rules and regulations or such rules and regulations as may be made. The Marine Hospital Service is a bureau in the Department in preparing such rules, and he can avail himself of that bureau and all other sources of information he chooses. There can be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. CALL. As I understand it, I think there is objection to it. Instead of Congress in its authority directing the Secretary of the Treasury as to the manner in which he shall obtain this information, namely, upon the report of a bureau charged by Congress with this duty——

Mr. DOLPH. It is not a report upon anything at all. We have not reached that point in the bill. This amendment is proposed to section 2.

Mr. CALL. That is the matter to which I have referred. Let us see the language.

Mr. DOLPH. This simply prescribes the form of certificate to be issued by the consul, vice-consul, or other consular officer. It simply prescribes the form of a document.

Mr. CALL. The language is:

A bill of health, in duplicate, in the form prescribed by the Marine Hospital Service and approved by—

Why should it not be in the form prescribed by the Marine Hospital Service? What Department of this Government is so capable of prescribing the form including the particulars upon which that certificate shall be given?

Mr. DOLPH. The term "Marine Hospital Service" may have a legal significance, but if it means anything it means the personnel of that service.

Mr. CALL. Unquestionably.

Mr. DOLPH. It means the physicians who are engaged in that service.

Mr. CALL. Undoubtedly.

Mr. DOLPH. To require anything to be done of them, in my judgment, would require them to be assembled at a meeting duly called and duly held, and a majority of them to agree to it. Then I have another objection to the clause. I have an objection to authorizing officers of the Government to make regulations that are to have the force of law. If we are going to authorize such regulations to be made I would rather authorize a member of the Cabinet to make them than the chief or the personnel of one of the bureaus subordinate to the head of the Department.

Mr. CALL. I submit for myself that I think those are very insufficient reasons. The Marine Hospital Service means the action of that Bureau under its chief and according to the rules prescribed by act of Congress or the Treasury Department. This provision of the bill requires that this most important document, the certificate for the bill of health, shall be in the manner and contain the particulars prescribed by the Marine Hospital Service.

Mr. DOLPH. Oh, no; the Secretary may approve or disapprove it; he may write an entire new one or prescribe what form is to be used. What is the use in having that inserted when he can call upon every officer of the Government? He can call upon the Attorney-General for an opinion. He can call probably through the Department of State for an opinion from the consul and vice-consul of the United States, or he can call for an opinion of the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service. He at last has got to pass upon them, and what is the use of this provision? Why not require him at once to issue the certificate.

Mr. CALL. That is very true, but the Senator's objection does not reach the point. He says it is not important that from this Bureau, charged by Congress with the duty of ascertaining what kind of a certificate shall be granted, the Secretary of the Treasury should be required before approval to have that statement. He proposes to allow the Secretary of the Treasury to make such a form as he sees fit, disregarding the advice and opinions of anybody in the service charged specially with the duty.

Mr. DOLPH. The bill as it stands does that.

Mr. CALL. Oh, no.

Mr. DOLPH. Yes, it does. The certificate must be approved by him. If he disapproves it that is the end of it.

Mr. CALL. That does not make any difference. If the bill does so provide it is not at all material to the point. The bill provides that a Bureau, the Marine Hospital Service, shall perform certain duties. The Senator objects to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. In line 9 of section 2, after the word "history," I move to insert the words "and condition;" so as to read:

Setting forth the sanitary history and condition of said vessel.

Mr. HARRIS. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. In line 2 of section 3, on page 3, after the word "and," I move to strike out the words "so far as it lawfully may;" so as to read:

That the Marine Hospital Service shall coöperate with and aid State and municipal boards of health, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. In line 6 of the same section I move to strike out the words "the Marine Hospital Service and approved by."

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator's suggestion as to line 5, to strike out the word "prepared," was not agreed to.,

Mr. DOLPH I propose to strike out the word "prepared" and insert the word "made," in line 5.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 5 of section 3, after the word "regulations," strike out the word "prepared" and insert the word "made;" so as to read:

Rules and regulations made by, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. Now let the amendment in line 6, striking out the words "the Marine Hospital Service approved by," be agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 6 of section 3, after the word "by," strike out the words "the Marine Hospital Service approved by;" so as to read:

And enforcement of the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Treasury, etc.

Mr. CALL. I submit again that this bill, which otherwise has met my approval, in vesting absolute and arbitrary authority in the Secretary of the Treasury and not in the President of the United States to disregard all the opinions of the Bureau specially charged to gather information upon this subject, would be made objectionable by the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

It does not matter that the head of the Department is properly responsible. Why shall not Congress require him to take the opinion of the officers, the scientific men, charged with this duty and supported by the Government for the very purpose of preparing this information and directing the action of the Treasury Department in this respect? The criticism, I think, is not an important one. Certainly it would be a very proper thing in Congress to require the Marine Hospital Service to furnish this information if it is worth anything, and it is the most efficient Bureau in the Government and has performed its duty satisfactorily. There is no reason in saying that the Secretary of the Treasury shall be absolutely independent of that Bureau and may disregard it entirely in this service.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask for a vote on my amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. In line 12 of section 3, after the word "the," I move to strike out "Marine Hospital Service" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury;" so as to read:

In the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. In line 18 of section 3, after the word "the," I move to strike out "Marine Hospital Service" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury;" so as to read:

In the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. In line 20 of section 3, after the word "the," I move to strike out the words "Marine Hospital Service shall report the facts to the;" so as to read:

Or into one State from another, the Secretary of the Treasury, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. In line 21 of section 3, after the word "Treasury," I move to strike out "who;" so as to read:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall, if in his judgment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. In line 22 of section 3, after the word "proper," I move to strike out the words "order said Marine Hospital Service:" so as to read:

It is necessary and proper to make such additional rules and regulations as, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. In line 27 of section 3, after the word "been," I move to strike out the word "so;" so as to read:

And regulations have been made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. After the word "made," in line 27 of section 3, I move to strike out the words "and approved by the Secretary;" so as to read:

Have been made they shall be promulgated by the Marine Hospital Service, etc.

And I move in lines 28 and 29 to strike out the words "Marine Hospital Service," and insert "Secretary of the Treasury."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. In line 34 of section 3, after the word "the," I move to strike out "Marine Hospital Service" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. In line 41 of section 3, after the word "crew," I move to strike out the words "and when said rules and regulations have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury they" and insert "which."

Mr. VEST. What does the Senator from Oregon propose to do with the first line of section 3? Does he propose to leave it as it is with the words "the Marine Hospital Service?"

Mr. DOLPH. Yes; that simply requires them to coöperate with the State officials. I suppose it might be considered a direction addressed to every physician and every agent employed.

Mr. MORGAN. Just say "the Secretary of the Treasury and the Marine Hospital Service."

Mr. DOLPH. I have no objection to that, but I do not want to be hypercritical about it. However, that seems to be a thing that can be directed by Congress. Let the pending amendment be acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 41, section 3, after the word "crew," strike out the words "and when said rules and regulations have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury they" and insert "which."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Oregon, who seems to be following the bill rather closely, that lines 33 and 34 provide that if the States "shall fail or refuse to enforce said rules and regulations the President may detail an officer or appoint a proper person for that purpose." It seems to me it would be a great deal better to say "he shall enforce the same," that is, enforce the regulations, without directing how he shall do it. He might want a dozen officers or a dozen or a hundred persons.. I suggest to strike out, after the word "President," the words "may detail an officer," in the thirty-third line, and the words "or appoint a proper person for that purpose," in the thirty-fourth line, and insert "shall enforce the same."

Mr. DOLPH. The amendments I propose are all of the same order. As we have entered upon this method of changing the bill, I wish the Senator would allow that matter to stand over. It may meet with some opposition.

Mr. TELLER. I thought that as we went along it would be better to correct the text in that respect also. However, I will withdraw my amendment for the present.

Mr. DOLPH. Has my last amendment been adopted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The last amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to have the clause of the bill read as amended by the last amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The clause will be read as amended.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, section —, line 41, after the word "crew," the words "and when said rules and regulations have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury they" were stricken out and the word "which" inserted; so as to read:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall make such rules and regulations as are authorized by the laws of the United States, and necessary to be observed by vessels at the port of departure and on the voyage, where such vessels sail from any foreign port or place at which contagious or infectious disease exists, or from which the President has reason to believe that infected articles of merchandise are being shipped, to any port or place in the United States, to secure the best sanitary condition of such vessel, her cargo, passengers, and crew, which shall be published and communicated to, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. In line 9 of section 4, I move to strike out the words "Marine Hospital Service" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. CHANDLER. Have those words been stricken out in line 1?

Mr. DOLPH. I did not move to strike out the words there. That is simply a direction that the Marine Hospital Service, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall perform particular duties in respect to quarantine. It seems to me that is a direction we may make, and it will be binding upon any officer in the Bureau.

Mr. HARRIS. It is exactly the same character of amendment with various others that have been agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, section 4, line 9, after the word "the," strike out "Marine Hospital Service" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I move the same amendment in line 10, to strike out "said Marine Hospital Service" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no need to insert anything there, but strike out the words "to said Marine Hospital Service."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, section 4, line 10, after the word "to," strike out the words "said Marine Hospital Service" and insert "the Secretary of the Treasury."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. In section 4, line 13, I move to strike out the words "said Marine Hospital Service may, with the approval of."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. On page 6, in line 14 of section 4, after the word "Treasury," I move to insert the word "shall;" so as to read:

Such forms as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. In line 14 of section 4, page 6, after the word "the," I move to strike out the words "Marine Hospital Service" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury;" so as to read:

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall also obtain, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. In line 22 of section 4, I move to strike out the words "said service" and insert "him;" so as to read:

And other pertinent information received by him, and shall also, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. In line 27 of section 4, after the word "of," I move to strike out "its" and insert "his;" so as to read:

Shall make an annual report of his operations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. In line 23 of section 4, after the word "as," I move to strike out "it" and insert "he;" so as to read:

As far as he may be able.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. In line 28 of section 4, I move to strike out the words "Secretary of the Treasury, who shall transmit the same to," and require the Secretary to report to Congress.

Mr. VEST. He is to report to himself, then?

Mr. DOLPH. That is to be stricken out. That will leave it so that the Secretary of the Treasury shall make annual reports of his operations to Congress with such recommendations, etc.

Mr. HARRIS. That perfects the sentence.

Mr. DOLPH. Let the amendment be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 4, line 28, after the word "to," strike out the words "the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall transmit the same to;" so as to read:

And shall make an annual report of his operations to Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. In lines 1 and 2 of section 5, I move to strike out the words "the Marine Hospital Service shall, with the approval of;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury, from time to time, issue to the consular officer of the United States, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. After the word "Treasury," in line 2 of section 5, I move to insert the word "shall;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time, issue, etc.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to hear that part of the section read as proposed to be amended.

Mr. DOLPH. It will then read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time, issue to consular officers of the United States, and to the medical officers serving at any foreign port, and otherwise make publicly known the rules and regulations made by him.

I am going to make it read by striking out the words on the top of the next page, page 7.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 2 of section 5, after the word "Treasury," insert the word "shall;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time, issue, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. In line 6 of section 5, page 7, I move to strike out the words "it and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury" and insert "him;" so as to read:

Made by him, to be used and complied with by vessels in foreign ports, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. In line 3 of section 6, after the word "the," I move to amend by striking out the words "Marine Hospital Service" and inserting "Secretary of the Treasury;" so as to read:

For treatment of the same, the Secretary of the Treasury may remand said vessel, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. In line 15 of the same section, after the word "the," I move to strike out "Marine Hospital Service" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury;" so as to read:

But at any ports where sufficient quarantine provision has been made by State or local authorities the Secretary of the Treasury may direct vessels bound for said ports, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the bill with the amendments already agreed to, as in Committee of the Whole, be printed for the convenience of the Senate.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to offer a few amendments about which there will be no controversy?

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest that the bill be ordered printed after all the amendments to be offered to-day have been acted upon.

Mr. VEST. I wish to offer an amendment to the third section.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the Senator from Missouri offer his amendment so that we can have all of the amendments printed.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. It is not to be acted upon, I understand.

Mr. PLATT. No, it will be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Before the word "shall," in line 1, of section 3, insert:

Shall, immediately after this act takes effect, examine the quarantine regulations of all State and municipal boards of health and—

So as to read:

SEC. 3. That the Marine Hospital Service shall, immediately after this act takes effect, examine the quarantine regulations of all State and municipal boards of health and shall coöperate with, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri ask for present action upon his amendment?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. HARRIS. There is no objection to the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to hear the amendment read once more.

Mr. PLATT. I presume it had better go over until to-morrow.

Mr. CULLOM. Let it be printed.

Mr. HOAR. If the Secretary of the Treasury has to read every municipal board of health regulation in the country he will be in some trouble.

Mr. FRYE. It is the Marine Board.

Mr. HOAR. Is it confined to the Marine Board?

Mr. VEST. Yes, the Marine Hospital Service.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to examine it. I think it had better be printed and go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment, then, will go over as an amendment to be proposed to the bill.

Mr. VEST. I offer another amendment which I ask to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The second amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri will be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 9 section 3, after the word "State," insert "or Territory, or the District of Columbia from another State, or Territory, or the District of Columbia."

Mr. HARRIS. That is a very proper amendment. Let it go on the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. On page 4, line 25, section 3, the same amendment should be made.

Mr. CALL. I offer an amendment which I ask to have printed, and which I shall propose to the pending bill to-morrow.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer an amendment to the bill, and ask that it be read and printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida desire to have his amendment read?

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Florida will be first read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Amendment to come in on the ninth page, after line 10, as section 9:

Whenever the proper authorities of a State shall surrender to the United States the use of the buildings or disinfecting apparatus at a State quarantine station, the Secretary of the Treasury shall be authorized to receive them and to pay a reasonable compensation to the State for their use.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill the following:

SEC. —. Whenever any State shall set apart any place within its territorial limits for quarantine purposes in respect of interstate or foreign or coastwise commerce, travel or immigration, and shall sell or donate the same to the United States, the President shall appoint a board of three persons skilled in such matters to exercise therein, under the supervision and control of the Marine Hospital Service, the powers and duties in this act specified.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to call the attention of the Senator who has the bill in charge to section 7. I desire to offer an amendment to come in after the word "places" in the ninth line of that section. I wish to insert the words "as he shall designate." The section is a little indistinct as to what countries the President may prohibit immigration from, or what is meant by the words "the President shall have power to suspend immigration from such countries or places." It may refer to those countries which have yellow fever and cholera alone. I desire that he may have the power to suspend immigration from countries adjoining and in the neighborhood, if he sees fit, and therefore I move to insert after the word "places," in the ninth line, the words "as he shall designate."

Mr. HARRIS. I have examined the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, and I think it is a very proper one, and is unobjectionable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 7, line 9, after the word "places," insert "as he shall designate;" so as to read:

The President shall have power to suspend immigration from such countries or places as he shall designate and for such period of time as he may deem necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection the amendment will be considered as agreed to. It is agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from New Jersey will allow me, the last amendment was an amendment to an amendment, and the vote on inserting section 7 has been reserved. That amendment has not yet been adopted.

Mr. TELLER. Mine is an informal amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There seems to be no objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the committee, and it can be agreed to although the committee amendment stands to be acted upon hereafter.

Mr. CHANDLER. The amendment to the amendment is agreed to, but the amendment of the committee is not agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as amended is not agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the penalty which is provided, which is entirely inadequate to prevent a ship from running into port. In section 1, line 11, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out the word "one" and insert "five."

Mr. HARRIS. That is, the fine shall not be more than $1,000, and the Senator from New Jersey proposes to strike out "one" and insert "five," which will make it read, "not exceeding $5,000." It leaves it within the discretion of the courts. I shall not object to the Senator's amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. DOLPH. Before that is adopted, I desire to ask the Senator from Tennessee whether there is any reason why a minimum fine is not fixed?

Mr. HARRIS. I should prefer leaving the matter to the discretion of the courts. I do not want to fix any iron rule about the penalty. I am willing to make the maximum large enough to prevent what is prohibited.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Then on page 3, line 24, the same amendment should be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first amendment submitted by the Senator from New Jersey will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 11, section 1, after the word "exceeding," strike out "one" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Not exceeding $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON. On page 3, line 24, section 2, there is a like amendment to be made. In the clause "not more than $1,000," I move to strike out "one" and insert "five." I do not know that it occurs anywhere else in the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not think it does.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 24 of section 2, after the word "than," strike out "one" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Not more than $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee, who has the bill in charge, to another amendment, which I think should be offered. On page 4, in lines 33 and 34, section 3, it is provided that if these regulations and rules are not enforced by the States the President "may detail an officer or appoint a proper person for that purpose." It seems to me that the proper thing to do is to strike out those words and insert "shall enforce the same."

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator's object would be accomplished, it seems to me, by making "officer" plural, "officers" and "person" plural, saying "persons."

Mr. TELLER. If that is more agreeable to the Senator from Tennessee I will accept it.

Mr. HARRIS. I am perfectly indifferent. I have no sort of objection to accomplishing the Senator's object, and I think it eminently proper.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me if we simply say the President shall enforce these regulations that is enough. He takes his own method to do it. I move to strike out the words "may detail an officer or appoint a proper person for that purpose," in lines 33 and 34 of section 3, and to insert "shall enforce the same."

Mr. DOLPH. I suggest to the Senator from Colorado whether it would not be better after the word "President" to insert "shall execute and enforce the same and," so as to read "shall execute and enforce the same and may detail an officer or officers and appoint proper persons."

Mr. HARRIS. To enforce the same necessarily carries with it the power to detail or appoint persons to execute it.

Mr. TELLER. If that is agreeable to the Senator who has the bill in charge I am quite willing to amend it in that way.

Mr. HARRIS. I believe the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon was to insert the language suggested by the Senator from Colorado, and to retain the words he proposes to strike out, but he must make plural the words "officer" and "person." It should read "officers" and "persons" if that clause is to be retained in the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I think the suggestion made by the Senator from Oregon is a good one, and with the consent of the Senate I will withdraw my amendment and move to insert after the word "President" the words "shall execute and enforce the same and," and to make the words "officer" and "person" plural, striking out "a" and "an" where they occur.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, section 3, line 33, after the word "President," insert the words "shall execute and enforce the same and," and after the word "detail" strike out "an officer" and insert "officers," and in line 34 strike out "a proper person" and insert "proper persons;" so as to read:

But if the State or municipal authorities shall fail or refuse to enforce said rules and regulations, the President shall execute and enforce the same and may detail officers or appoint proper persons for that purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Is it understood that the bill now, with the amendments agreed to, shall be printed, and also the other amendments offered? The latter will of course be printed separately.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be printed as amended, and the amendments intended to be offered will be printed separately.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 7, 1893, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 6, 1893.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CAVALRY AND ARTILLERY SCHOOL, FORT RILEY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation submitted by the Secretary of War for the cavalry and light artillery school at Fort Riley, Kans.; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CLAIM OF OWNERS OF SCHOONER KATHLEEN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Navy submitting, for appropriation, papers in the claim of the owners of the schooner Kathleen for damages sustained by said vessel in collision with the United States steamer Chicago; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, submitting report of the operations of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the year 1892; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS, WASHINGTON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a certified copy of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President of the State of Washington; which was laid upon the table.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate bills; which were severally read twice, and referred as indicated, namely:

A bill (S. 1664) for the relief of Lister Noble—to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (S. 1933) concerning testimony in criminal cases or proceedings based upon or growing out of alleged violations of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended March 2, 1889, and February 10, 1891—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

A bill (S. 3382) to authorize a corrected patent to be issued for the donation land claim of Wheelock Simmons and wife—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

A bill (S. 3537) for the relief of M. P. Deady—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Joint resolution (S. R. 124) directing the Secretary of War to investigate the subject of raft-towing on the Great Lakes and their connecting waters—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

WETMORE & BROTHER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 29) for the relief of Wetmore & Brother, of St. Louis, Mo.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COBB of Missouri. I will ask that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. There is no House report accompanying the bill.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. I ask that the Senate report be read.

The Senate report was read at length.

Mr. KILGORE. I would like to make some inquiry in regard to this bill. This is a Senate bill, I understand?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. KILGORE. Has it been considered by a committee of the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri can answer the question.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. It has not been reported by a House committee; but the amount being small and it having been passed unanimously by the Senate, I deem it unnecessary that such action should be taken, in view of the insignificance of the amount involved. It carries only $200.

Mr. KILGORE. I object to its consideration because it has not been considered by a House committee.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. It is a very small matter.

Mr. KILGORE. I do not know anything of the merits of the case, but I think that all of these bills should go through the regular channel.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the bill will be referred to the Committee on Claims.

CLAIMS OF THE CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the Senate amendment to the joint resolution (H. Res. 166) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to cover back into the Treasury the sum of $48,800 of the appropriations for the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians.

Mr. PEEL. I ask for the reading of the Senate amendment, with a view of moving concurrence.

The SPEAKER. The Senate amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following proviso:

"Provided, however, That neither the passage of the original act of appropriation to pay the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians for their interest in the lands of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Reservation, dated March 3, 1891, nor of this joint resolution shall be held in any way to commit the Government to the payment of any further sum to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians for any alleged interest in the remainder of the lands situated in what is commonly known and called the leased district."

Mr. PEEL. I move to concur in the Senate amendment. It simply provides that this, as well as preceding legislation on the subject, shall not establish a precedent for other appropriations of a similar character.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ELLIS, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. DOAN, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave of absence for one week from Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, this request will be granted.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk and for its reading, and that it be then referred to the Committee on Printing, which is the appropriate committee.

The SPEAKER. The resolution can be referred. The Chair understands that the gentleman desires to have it read.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent to have it read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent to have the resolution read for reference.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman need not object to this——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let it be referred under the rules.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. This is a resolution to which I want to call the attention of the House by having it read; that is all.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let it take the regular course.

BOARD OF REGENTS, SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] has a resolution respecting the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to report back a resolution to fill a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution. It is from the Committee on the Library. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 123) to fill vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] asks unanimous consent for the consideration of this resolution, and the Clerk will read it, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in the class other than members of Congress, be filled by the reappointment of James B. Angell, of Michigan, whose term of office expires January 19, 1893.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not understand its purport.

Mr. CUMMINGS. If the Clerk will read the report, it will be satisfactory to the gentleman, I think.

The SPEAKER. This is a joint resolution providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution. The Clerk will again report it, so that the House will understand it.

The Clerk again read the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. DINGLEY. Do I understand from the gentleman from New York that an amendment to the resolution is proposed?

Mr. CUMMINGS. No amendment whatever. This is the original Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The resolution was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CUMMINGS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MUSTER AND PAY OF CERTAIN MEMBERS OF THE VOLUNTEER FORCES.

The SPEAKER. On the 17th of December last there was before the House the bill (H. R. 6649) called up by the Committee on Military Affairs, the Chair believes. By unanimous consent, the vote upon it was postponed until January 6, 1893, it appearing on the vote then taken that there was no quorum. Now, the Clerk will report the bill, so that the House will know what it is.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6649) to extend the provisions of an act to provide for the muster and pay of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces.

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of an act to provide for the muster and pay of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces, approved June 4, 1884, as amended by an act approved February 5, 1887, be, and the same are hereby, revived and extended for a period of three years from the 3d day of June, 1892.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I have discovered a clerical error in the bill, and I ask unanimous consent to change the word "four," in line 5 of the printed bill, to the word "third," and the word "fifth," in line 6, to the word "third."

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, how does this bill come before the House?

The SPEAKER. On the 17th of December last this bill was before the House. Under the operation of the previous question it was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and it was accordingly engrossed and read a third time; and on the question, Shall the bill pass? the ayes were 70 and the noes 5, whereupon the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LONG] made the point of no quorum. Tellers were appointed, and pending the discharge of their duty the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] made the following request:

Mr. Speaker, it appears that there is not a quorum present, and I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over until the 6th day of January, to be voted upon immediately after the first morning hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio that the consideration of the pending bill go over until January 6, immediately after the first morning hour.

And there was no objection. That is the way in which the bill comes before the House now.

Mr. KILGORE. I want to make a point of order upon this.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Have we entered upon the first morning hour?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the committees have been called.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Then it would not be in order until that is done.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the Clerk to call the committees.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It makes no difference about that.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The only difference is, that if we get into consideration in the morning hour it might not be concluded in the hour, and that would be the difference.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Speaker, I believe I am entitled to be recognized to make a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the standing and select committees for reports.

The Clerk proceeded to call the committees for reports.

POST TRADERSHIPS.

Mr. OUTHWAITE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (S. 3117) relating to post traderships; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BIG HORN SOUTHERN RAILROAD.

Mr. PICKLER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (S. 3317) extending the time for the construction of the Big Horn Southern Railroad through the Crow Indian Reservation; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE HIWASSEE, THE TENNESSEE, AND THE CLINCH RIVERS, TENNESSEE.

Mr. GEARY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10015) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Hiwassee, the Tennessee, and the Clinch Rivers, in the State of Tennessee; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The call of committees was resumed and concluded.

MUSTER AND PAY OF CERTAIN OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN OF THE VOLUNTEER FORCES.

The SPEAKER. This completes the call of the standing and select committees. Now, under the order, the House will consider the bill referred to by the gentleman from Ohio, which the Clerk will again report.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to assail the validity of the order heretofore made by the House in relation to that bill with a point of order. When the agreement was concurred in by the House the statement was made in that connection that there was no quorum present; and if there was no quorum present, it was not competent for the House to enter into any agreement or make any order which would be binding upon any subsequent session of this body.

The SPEAKER. "There was not a quorum voting." [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. I hope the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] understands the distinction. It is a perfectly legal one.

Mr. KILGORE. I think the order read that there "was no quorum present."

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Texas that the vote was taken on a division, and it appeared that there was no quorum voting. The point was made, whereupon tellers were ordered, and just at that stage this agreement was made.

Mr. KILGORE. The statement is made by the gentleman from Ohio himself that he was satisfied that there was no quorum present, and for that reason asked that the further consideration of the bill be postponed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The trouble is, that although the gentleman from Ohio might be satisfied, it does not follow that there was not a quorum present.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There is nothing to indicate that the House was satisfied.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the bill, so that the House may understand it.

The bill was again read.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will permit the report to be read.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The report was read when the bill was up before, and I do not know whether the order permits any debate. The order is that the vote shall be taken at this time.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will state to the gentleman that while the order does not in strictness permit of debate, the report might be read by unanimous consent.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I have no objection whatever to that.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I would suggest that.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Speaker, can it be read without unanimous consent?

A MEMBER. It is submitted "without objection." The report can be read if there be no objection.

The SPEAKER. The previous question had been ordered, and the Chair does not think it can be read, because the terms of the order is that the vote shall be taken.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I understand the order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] had requested the correction of clerical errors as to dates. Without objection these corrections will be made. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question now is, Shall the bill pass?

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. OUTHWAITE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering business on the Private Calendar.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN. I desire to inquire whether the first thing in order is not the taking of a vote on the bill which was under consideration when the House adjourned?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BELTZHOOVER] and the House that there are pending certain pension bills reported to the House from the Committee of the Whole at the Friday evening sessions, upon each one of which bills the previous question has been ordered to its final passage, and under the practice of the House that operates to make those bills in order immediately after the reading of the Journal. Therefore the vote must first be taken on those bills, although under the rules of the House generally it is in order on Friday, immediately after the first morning hour, to make a motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN] had waived the point by not calling attention to it, the Chair might not have brought it to the attention of the House, because his mind would not have been directed to it; but as the gentleman from Indiana makes the point, the Chair thinks that those bills on which the previous question has been ordered to their final passage have priority and are properly in order at this time.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN] will give way.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I want to be heard a moment, Mr. Speaker, before that is done. I make the point of order that the Chair had recognized me to make my motion under the rules before the gentleman from Indiana called attention to this matter.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BELTZHOOVER] will bear in mind that after he had been recognized and had made his motion, as he has stated, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN] rose to a question of order, which he had a right to do. That point of order was, that the bills on which the previous question had been ordered to their final passage were entitled to priority, and the Chair thinks the point well taken.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In addition to the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BELTZHOOVER], I desire to make the further point that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN] did not call up his bills immediately after the reading of the Journal, but that the House then proceeded to the consideration of other business, so that the gentleman from Indiana waived for the time the priority of the bills which he desired to have considered, if they had such priority. He should have called them up immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that there was any waiver of the gentleman's rights. Indeed, in strictness it was the duty of the Chair to have announced, when the regular order was demanded, that these bills were the regular order, but the Chair did not have the matter specially in mind at that time.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Besides, Mr. Speaker, another order had been made by the House subsequent to the rule, which order controlled for the time.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly the bill called up by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] had priority, because the order for its consideration was made after the one relating to these bills.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Is it the ruling of the Chair that these private pension bills take priority of all other business after the morning hour until they are disposed of?

The SPEAKER. Not because they are private pension bills, but because the previous question has been ordered upon them to their final passage. The character of the bills does not enter into the parliamentary question at all.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Another inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Can I raise the question of consideration against these bills?

The SPEAKER. The trouble about that is that the previous question has been ordered upon the bills. The Chair will call attention to the rule.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker I think it is the well settled practice of the House that when the previous question is ordered upon the passage of a bill the question of consideration can not be raised against that bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the part of the first paragraph of Rule XVII, which applies to this matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

PREVIOUS QUESTION.

1. There shall be a motion for the previous question, which, being ordered by a majority of members present, if a quorum, shall have the effect to cut off all debate and bring the House to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been asked and ordered.

The SPEAKER. So it seems to the Chair that the ordering of the previous question has the effect, as expressed in the rule, to bring the House to a direct vote upon the passage of the bill or bills.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Notwithstanding the intervention of all these other proceedings?

The SPEAKER. Notwithstanding the intervention of the other proceedings.

HARRIET COTA.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill pending at the adjournment yesterday.

The bill (H. R. 9233) to grant a pension to Harriet Cota was read.

The SPEAKER. On the passage of this bill the yeas and nays were ordered; and the vote having been taken, the absence of a quorum was disclosed. The question therefore recurs now on the passage of the bill, and the vote will be again taken by yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays 61, not voting 156; as follows:

E. DARWIN GAGE.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next pension bill in order.

The bill (H. R. 9366) for the relief of E. Darwin Gage, late lieutenant-colonel of the One hundred and forty-eighth New York Infantry, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to recognize E. Darwin Gage as lieutenant-colonel of the One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment of New York Volunteer Infantry, and to amend the records of said regiment so as to show said Gage to have been lieutenant-colonel thereof from October 16, 1864, the date from which he was commissioned to take rank, to October 27, 1864, the date on which he was killed in action at Fair Oaks, Va., said Gage having actually discharged the duties of lieutenant-colonel of said regiment for the period above specified.

Mr. RAINES. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 3314, which has been passed by the Senate and is exactly similar in its provisions to this House bill, be substituted for it.

Mr. BLAND. Let the Senate bill be read, so that we may see whether it is identical.

The SPEAKER. The Senate bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3314) for the relief of E. Darwin Gage, late lieutenant-colonel of the One hundred and forty-eighth New York Infantry.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to recognize E. Darwin Gage as lieutenant-colonel of the One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment of New York Volunteer Infantry, and to amend the records of said regiment so as to show said Gage to have been lieutenant-colonel thereof from October 16, 1864, the date from which he was commissioned to take rank, to October 27, 1864, the date on which he was killed in action at Fair Oaks, Va., said Gage having actually discharged the duties of lieutenant-colonel of said regiment for the period above specified.

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAINES], as the Chair understands, is that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the Senate bill just read, and that this bill be substituted for the House bill now under consideration.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

Mr. RAINES. Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the Senate bill has been favorably acted upon by the House committee, and that the bill with the report is in the desk of the chairman, who is not here.

The SPEAKER. Leave has been granted to discharge the committee, no report having been made. The question is on ordering the Senate bill to a third reading.

Mr. BLAND. I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. WHEELER of Alabama) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9366) entitled "A bill for the relief of E. Darwin Gage, late lieutenant-colonel of the One hundred and forty-eighth New York Infantry," have had the same under consideration and report it back favorably and recommend its passage.

Gage was mustered as captain of Company D, of said regiment, September 14, 1862, to serve three years, and was present for duty to April 30, 1864. He was wounded June 16, 1864, and was killed in action while in command of his regiment at Fair Oaks, Va., October 27, 1864, and was commissioned lieutenant-colonel of said regiment November 29, 1864, to take rank from October 16, 1864, and he actually performed the duties of lieutenant-colonel from said date last mentioned until he was killed in action as aforesaid.

Your committee are of the opinion that Gage is entitled to be recognized as lieutenant-colonel in accordance with the provisions of the bill, as he evidently would have been had the case come within the terms of the law warranting such action by the Department. The fact that one Manning appears to have been commissioned the same day with Gage, to likewise take rank October 16, 1864, does not, in the judgment of your committee, overcome the equity of Gage's claim, because the latter was performing the duties of his rank and Manning was not. The fact that claimant was killed while gallantly performing his duty, and therefore never received his commission, certainly should not prejudice his claim for recognition as lieutenant-colonel of his regiment.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BLAND. I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAINES] to state what is the object of this bill.

Mr. RAINES. In response to the request of the gentleman from Missouri, I will briefly state the facts in this case. E. Darwin Gage was a captain in the One hundred and forty-eighth New York Volunteers. While actually in command of the regiment as lieutenant-colonel he was recommended for promotion to that position. Pending the receipt of that commission, Gage was killed in action at Cold Harbor. After his death the commission was issued, and we simply ask now that he be mustered and recognized as a lieutenant-colonel, the rank he would have held had he not been killed in that action, the commission having been issued.

The effect of the bill, I would state to the gentleman from Missouri, would be to give his widow a slightly increased pension.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

ELLEN HEWETT.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 4047) granting a pension to Ellen Hewett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ellen, mother of Frank Hewitt, late of Company K, Eleventh Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. BLAND. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. PEARSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 4047) granting a pension to Ellen Hewett, mother of Frank Hewett, and submit the following report:

It is shown by the records of the War Department that John F. Hewett enlisted in Company K, Eleventh Regiment Ohio Cavalry, June 1, 1864, and "died June 2, 1866; cause, poisoned; suicide," and the mother's claim has been rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that the soldier's death was not incurred in line of duty.

Dr. J. G. Riddler testifies that he was in charge of the United States General Hospital at Fort Laramie in 1865 and 1866, and that he was called to treat Frank Hewett, of Company K, Eleventh Ohio Cavalry, who had taken a large dose of tincture of opium with suicidal intent, and who died from the effect of the poison: that Hewett had no cause for suicide, as he was a favorite with men and officers, and it is affiant's opinion that he was mentally deranged, basing this opinion on his suicidal mania and his reputation for eccentricity.

Mrs. Hewett states under oath that she is the mother of John Franklin Hewett; that she is 78 years of age, has no property nor means of support, and is wholly dependent upon distant relatives; that the soldier was born February 4, 1844, and never was married to her knowledge.

James A. Baumgartner and Stephen Glass testify that the claimant is the mother of the soldier, and that she has no property or means of support.

No claim for pension has ever been filed on account of this soldier except by this claimant, his mother.

Because of the soldier's death in the service from suicide, presumably due to mental derangement, and the mother's present dependence, your committee return the bill with the recommendation that it do pass, after being amended by striking out the word "Hewitt" in the title of the bill and also in two places in line 6, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "Hewett" in each place.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to inquire if the effect of this bill is to give arrearages?

Mr. COBB of Missouri. It is not, but simply to give a pension from the time of the passage of the bill. There is nothing in the bill that requires or asks for arrears.

The amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole were adopted, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended to conform.

SOPHIA KAGWAICH.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 8498) to pension Sophia Kagwaich.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension rolls the name of Sophia Kagwaich, mother of Samuel Kagwaich, alias Kagnatz, late private in Company K, First Regiment Michigan Sharpshooters, at the rate of $15 per month.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments: Insert in line 4, after the words "pension rolls," "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws;" and strike out all after the word "sharpshooters" in line 8.

The amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole were concurred in, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SARAH COWGILL.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 6330) to pension Sarah Cowgill, a hospital nurse.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the general law passed at the last session of Congress covers this case, which was reported before the passage of the general law, I move that it be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN M. ROBERTS.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (S. 317) granting an increase of pension to John M. Roberts.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John M. Roberts, and pay him a pension of $10 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

Mr. LONG. Can we have the report in that case read?

The report (by Mr. MARTIN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 317) granting an increase of pension to John M. Roberts, have considered the same and submit the following report:

The facts in this case are fully set forth in the Senate report, which is as follows:

"The beneficiary in said bill is John M. Roberts, who is a resident of Osgood, Ripley County, Ind., and who was late a private in Company F, Eighty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, in the war of the rebellion in 1861. He enlisted August 15, 1862, and was discharged at Indianapolis, on the 26th of October, 1864, on account of disability, the result of a wound received in battle with the enemy. He was struck by a ball which went clear through his body. He was color guard, and was wounded in this way, while facing the enemy, in his place and in the line of duty. This occurred at Vicksburg, Miss., on the 19th of May, 1863. The ball weighed 1¼ ounces, and was extracted on the 10th day of June, at Memphis, Tenn. After a partial recovery from this wound he rejoined the regiment and remained with it, although not able for active duty, until his discharge as above stated.

"The wound never healed, and internal abscesses have since been continually forming and breaking. The claimant is wholly broken in health. The sworn statement of the physician, dated May 16, 1892, certifies that the claimant 'is suffering from a severe gunshot wound through the upper abdominal region in the right side, with evidences of severe abscesses of the liver resulting therefrom. The upper portion of the liver was undoubtedly penetrated by the ball. He suffers constant pain and is unable to perform any manual labor whatever.'

"The claimant is now drawing a pension of $30 per month. His claim for increase has been rejected by the Bureau of Pensions on the ground that he was already drawing as high a rate as the technical rules of allowance permit, there being no fixed rate and no equivalent for a wound through the body. The claimant is now 60 years old, in narrow circumstances, unable to work for a livelihood, with a family of six children, some of whom are yet dependent upon him for support, with no certain means of income except his pension.

"We are therefore of the opinion that there ought to be somewhat of increase granted in this case.

"We recommend that the bill be amended as follows: Strike out all after the word "Roberts," in lines 6 and 7 of the bill, and insert the following words: "and pay him a pension of $40 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving," and when so amended we recommend the passage of the bill."

The Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House concur in the Senate report and recommend the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 40, noes 34.

Mr. SNODGRASS. No quorum.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 88, nays 53, not voting 188; as follows:

The Clerk announced the following additional pair.

For the rest of this day.

Mr. HERBERT with Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. POST]. If he were here, I would vote no.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. BLAND. Pending that I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BLAND, the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. PAYNE) there were—ayes 33, noes 37.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. MARTIN for a call of the House, the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN) there were—ayes 53, noes 5.

Accordingly a call of the House was ordered.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion has been voted down and is not now in order.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now call the names of absentees. On this call excuses are in order.

The Clerk proceeded to call the names of absentees.

Mr. BABBITT (when the name of Mr. BUSEY was called). Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BUSEY] is called away on account of the sickness of one of his children. I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. WIKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague [Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois] be excused because of severe sickness in his family.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk completed the calling of the names of absentees.

Mr. MARTIN. I desire to know whether there is a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. There is a quorum present, 186 gentlemen having answered to their names.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

GEORGE E. BOWEN.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order to engrossment and third reading the bill (H. R. 6276) to authorize the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion as to George E. Bowen, late of Company E, Sixteenth Massachusetts Volunteers.

The SPEAKER. That motion can be entered at this time, but it can not be considered now, another matter being pending.

Mr. CURTIS. I simply enter the motion.

JOHN M. ROBERTS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill (S. 317) granting an increase of pension to John M. Roberts. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 95, nays 56, not voting 178; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. MOORE with Mr. BERGEN, for the rest of the day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. MARTIN. I renew my motion for a call of the House.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MARTIN. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 8.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The roll was called, and the following-named members failed to respond:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The doors will now be closed, and the names of absentees will be called; and on this call excuses may be offered.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know if a quorum is disclosed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum has not been disclosed.

The roll was again called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It appears by the roll that 171 members have answered to their names.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WEADOCK. I object.

Mr. MARTIN. I hope there will be no objection to that.

Mr. WEADOCK. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BENAJAH MORGAN.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7713) granting a pension to Benajah Morgan, late private in Captain Burn's company, Third Regiment, Third Brigade of Mounted Volunteers, in the Black Hawk war.

The bill was read.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

HENRY I. LA TOURRETTE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5972) to increase the pension of Capt. Henry I. La Tourrette, late a captain in Company G, Eighty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was read.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Invalid Pensions are in some doubt as to whether or not that case is covered by the general law. Until we can investigate that, I ask that this be passed over without prejudice.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

JAMES C. JENNINGS.

The next business was a bill (H. R. 8574) granting an honorable discharge to James C. Jennings.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the military record of and grant an honorable discharge to James C. Jennings, of South Willington, Conn., late a private in Company D, Eighth Connecticut Volunteers.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I wish to have the report in that case read.

The report (by Mr. PATTON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8574) for the removal of charge of desertion from the name of James C. Jennings, late a private in Company D, Eighth Connecticut Volunteers, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

It appears from the records of the War Department that the said soldier enlisted in Company D, Eighth Connecticut Volunteers, on September 21, 1861, to serve three years; that on December 24, 1863, he enlisted as a veteran in the same company and regiment at Norfolk, Va., to serve three years. Regimental returns report him present for duty until May, 1864, when he is reported absent in hospital at Washington, D. C., and same report appears on succeeding rolls up to December 12, 1865, which was the date of muster out of company. The medical records report him as follows:

"Received a severe gunshot wound of toe in battle. Toe amputated. To field hospital Eighteenth Army Corps, Cold Harbor, Va., June 7, 1864, with wounded foot. Was admitted to Harewood General Hospital, Washington, D. C., June 10, 1864, with gunshot wound of left foot—the third toe amputated—wounded at Cold Harbor June 5, 1864. Was transferred June 18, 1864, General hospital, Davis Island, New York Harbor, and furloughed July 8, 1864, after which he did not return, and was never mustered out of service."

It appears from affidavids of several witnesses that he went to his home and was sick and on crutches and unable to return until after his command was mustered out of service.

The records of the command to which he belonged properly accounts for him as in line of duty from time of enlistment, September 21, 1861, to date of furlough, July 8, 1864. Length of furlough not stated.

The evidence of several neighbors serves to show conclusively that the soldier was never after able to return to duty.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. I desire to inquire of the gentleman having this bill in charge whether there is any evidence in the record that this man ever reported the position he was in to his command and the reasons why he did not return.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I will say to the gentleman that this bill was fully discussed in the Committee on Military Affairs, and it is all right. This man served three years.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Well, I do not wish to make any unreasonable objection to the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

AMANDA ATHERTON AND LYDIA BOLLMAN.

Bills of the following titles were severally considered, engrossed, read a third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 7238) granting a pension to Amanda Atherton; and

A bill (H. R. 8969) to grant a pension to Lydia Bollman.

WILLIAM B. PRICE.

The next business was a bill (H. R. 2077) for the relief of William B. Price reported from the Committee of the Whole with an amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the name of William B. Price, late of Company A, Fifth Maryland Infantry, who was marked and charged with desertion from said service, and to amend the military record of said soldier so charged as a deserter and grant him an honorable discharge to date from December 4, 1862.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the report in that case read.

The report (by Mr. BOWERS) was read, as follows:

The Committee of Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2077) for the relief of William B. Price, have had the same under consideration and submit the following report:

This soldier was severely wounded, at the battle of Antietam, in the head and neck, sent to hospital and after a time sent home on furlough. Not being able to return at the date of the expiration of his furlough he was marked as a deserter.

The evidence shows that soldier was attacked with erysipelas, that for two years thereafter he was an invalid totally unable to do any service, and has never recovered his health.

Your committee is of the opinion that he should not have been marked as a deserter, and we recommend that the bill be amended by adding the following words: "Provided, That no pay, bounty, or emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the provisions of this act." And as so amended that the bill do pass.

The amendment recommended in the last paragraph of the report was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CORNELIUS DAY.

The next business was a bill (H. R. 9590) granting a pension to Cornelius Day.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Cornelius

Day, late a soldier in Capt. Owen's company, attached to Doniphan's regiment (First Missouri Mounted Volunteers), in the war with Mexico, from Santa Fe to Chihuahua, and who participated in its battles, and allow him a pension rated at $15 per month.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether the general law does not cover this case?

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, this bill comes from the Committee on Pensions, and I refer the gentleman's question to my colleague [Mr. PARRETT].

Mr. PARRETT. The general law does not cover the case, Mr. Speaker. This bill, on account of the peculiar disabilities of the soldier, provides for an amount in addition to what the general law would give.

Mr. PICKLER. How much does this bill give?

Mr. PARRETT. Fifteen dollars a month.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SUSAN S. MURPHY.

The next business was a bill (H. R. 6272) to pension Susan S. Murphy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Susan S. Murphy, of Eldorado, Union County, Ark., widow of Thomas Murphy, deceased, late a private in Capt. Sims's Company, Alabama Militia, Creek Indian war, and pay her a pension of $12 a month.

Mr. SEERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I think that case is covered by the general law. I would inquire of the gentleman whether it is not.

Mr. PARRETT. I think not.

Mr. SEERLEY. A gentleman from the State which I in part represent withdrew a bill of this character the other day, and I am opposed to this kind of legislation.

Mr. PARRETT. This is the case which is not provided for by the general law.

Mr. SEERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. WILSON of Missouri) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6272) granting a pension to Susan S. Murphy, have considered the same and report as follows:

The claimant's late husband, Thomas Murphy, was enlisted May 30, 1836, served three months as private in Capt. Simm's mounted company, Twenty-third Regiment Alabama Volunteers, Creek war, and was mustered out July 22, 1836. The soldier died February 22, 1866, and it is shown by the testimony accompanying the bill that his widow is sixty-five years old, in indigent circumstances, feeble health, and dependent upon the charity of her friends for support.

The passage of the bill is respectfully recommended.

Mr. SEERLEY. That case clearly comes under the general law. Half a dozen special bills of the same character have been withdrawn because the cases came under the general law, and there is no good reason why this one should be made an exception.

Mr. PARRETT. The general law allows only $8 a month, while this bill gives $12 a month.

Mr. PICKLER. The widows of soldiers in the Indian wars get only $8 a month, but this raises the amount to $12, as the gentleman from Indiana states.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. That is the objection to it.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, we seem to be running a race here with the Pension Bureau in putting claimants on the pension roll. [Laughter.] I suppose the next thing we shall have to do will be to raise the money to pay these pensions, because we have no money to pay anything. Although we denounce the Pension Bureau for its extraordinary liberality in granting pensions, we are here going beyond it, reversing its action where it has rejected cases, legislating more liberally than the Bureau itself is willing to construe the existing law, and doing all this in utter disregard of the interests of our constituents. I suppose, however, that this case is about as good as the rest of them, and that is not saying very much for it.

The question was taken on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, and the Speaker pro tempore stated that the ayes seemed to prevail.

Mr. SEERLEY. I ask for a division.

The House again divided: and there were—ayes 47, noes 25.

Mr. SEERLEY demanded tellers, but subsequently withdrew the demand, and the bill was engrossed, and read the third time, and passed.

JOHN T. FLEENOR.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 2912) to pension John T. Fleenor.

The bill was read.

The amendment reported by the committee, to strike out in the last line the word "sixteen" and insert "fourteen," so as to make the pension $14 per month, was read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ELIZA HOLMES.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 9215) granting a pension to Eliza Holmes.

The bill was read.

Mr. ANTONY. I move that the house adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS KENNEDY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4320) granting a pension to Thomas Kennedy.

The bill was read.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this case is covered by the general bill passed the other day pensioning soldiers of the Mexican war.

Mr. WAUGH. The general bill in regard to pensioners of the Mexican war does not cover this case.

Mr. BLAND. If it does not this bill ought not to pass. The House has already acted on this general question.

Mr. WAUGH. The history of the present case is this: Kennedy was not on the rolls of the Mexican war; he entered the service as a teamster and served for eight months. He was in an engagement in which thirteen regulars were killed and forty volunteers. But he has no army record.

Mr. BLAND. I suppose this bill is a little better than the others; but that is saying very little for it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The amendment reported by the committee, to insert "S." after "Thomas" in the title of the bill, so as to read "A bill granting a pension to Thomas S. Kennedy," was agreed to.

ANDREW B. KNAPP.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 2592) for the relief of Andrew B. Knapp.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MRS. S. A. FARQUHARSON.

The next pension business was the bill (S. 1303) to increase the pension of Mrs. S. A. Farquharson.

The bill was read.

Mr. LONG. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. WILSON of Missouri) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1303) to increase the pension of Mrs. S. A. Farquharson, have considered the same, and report:

Said bill is accompanied by Senate Report No. 375, this session, and, the same fully setting forth the facts, is adopted by your committee as their report, and the bill is returned to the House with the recommendation that it be amended so as to fix the rate of pension at $15 per month, and that it do pass as so amended.

[Senate Report No. 375, Fifty-second Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1303) granting a pension to Mrs. S. A. Farquharson, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant, Mrs. S. A. Farquharson, is the widow of the late Maj. Robert Farquharson, of the First Regiment Tennessee Volunteers, in the war with Mexico. Her said husband was at the time of his death a pensioner of the United States, upon account of wounds received in battle with the enemy at Cerro Gordo, Mexico, at the rate of $25 per month; since the death of her husband the claimant has been receiving a pension of $8 per month as his surviving widow.

It appears from the evidence submitted to the committee that the claimant is now over 60 years old; her only son, upon whose labor she was greatly depending for support, has recently died; she has now no living child or relative to assist her; she is without means or property of any kind, and in a dependent and helpless condition. The object of the bill is to increase her present rate of pension up to $25, being the same rate as that received by her husband at the time of his death.

Your committee are inclined, under the circumstances of this case, the advanced age and needy condition of the claimant, to grant this increase, to take effect from the passage of the bill, and recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the word "Farquharson," in the ninth line of the bill, down to and including the word "Farquharson" in the twelfth line of the bill, and when so amended recommend that the bill do pass.

The amendment reported by the committee, to strike out, in line 6, the word "twenty-five" and insert "fifteen," so as to make the pension $15 per month, was read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS TUCKER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 4916) granting a pension to Thomas Tucker, of Battery A, Fourth United States Artillery.

The bill was read.

The amendment reported by the committee, to strike out

"twenty" and insert "fifteen," so as to make the pension $15 a month, was read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore.

The question is now on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KILGORE) there were—ayes 30, noes 9.

Mr. KILGORE. That is not a quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr. KILGORE and Mr. PARRETT as tellers.

Mr. BURROWS. There are only six or eight more of these bills; let us get through with them to-night.

Mr. KILGORE. I made the point that no quorum had voted. There is apparently a quorum present, Mr. Speaker, and in view of that fact I will withdraw the point.

So (no further count being demanded) the bill was passed.

BILLS PASSED.

House bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments, were severally considered, the amendments adopted, and the bills as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time and passed, namely:

A bill (H. R. 8924) granting a pension to the widow of James A. Kelly;

A bill (H. R. 7234) granting a pension to Mary Millard; and

A bill (H. R. 9220) granting a pension to the widow of James R. Dyall, a veteran of the Florida war of 1836.

MARTHA A. HARRIS.

The bill (H. R. 1318) granting a pension to Martha A. Harris, reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment, was considered, ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SENATE BILLS PASSED.

The following Senate bills reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment, were considered, ordered to a third reading, and being read the third time, were passed, namely:

A bill (S. 2592) granting an increase of pension to William C. Tarkington; and

A bill (S. 2990) for the relief of George W. McKinney.

FRANCIS P. GARDNER.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H.R. 3713) granting an increase of pension to Francis P. Gardner, with amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is on agreeing to the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I call for the reading of the report in that case.

The report (by Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3713) granting an increase of pension to Francis P. Gardener, have considered the same and report:

The following is a statement of the service of the claimant's deceased husband:

"Capt. George W. Gardiner was graduated from West Point in 1814, his name heading the class in Cullum's Register.

"He served in the war of 1812-'15 with Great Britain.

"Was commandant of cadets and instructor of infantry tactics and of artillery at West Point.

"In 1828 was brevetted for faithful service. He had a fine military record, and was considered a superior and accomplished officer.

"He was killed in the Florida war of 1835, being engaged in Dade's desperate battle with the Seminole Indians.

"The officers of the detachment (commanded by the gallant Maj. Dade), who marched from Tampa Bay to the relief of Fort King, had reason to believe that the command could not reach the fort alive, and that an Indian massacre was before them, yet with unflinching devotion to duty and with a steady heroism unsurpassed in our annals they marched bravely on, and against hopeless odds fought till all save three were slain."

The following petitions accompany the bill:

"To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

"I most respectfully petition for relief.

"I am the widow of Capt. George W. Gardiner, of the United States Army, who was killed in the Dade massacre in the Florida war with the Seminole Indians in 1835.

"I am now nearly 80 years of age, in broken health, and with many infirmities, and am unable to provide myself with the necessary comforts of life upon the pension of $25 per month now allowed me.

"In 1853, through the kind efforts of the representatives of my native State of Connecticut, a special act giving me this pension for life was passed without an adverse vote in either House of the then existing Congress.' But for many years widows of officers who held the same rank as Capt. Gardiner have received and are now receiving an increase of pension.

"In failing health and with at most but a few years of life before me, I can not long be a recipient of your bounty, and in view of all the circumstances I most respectfully ask that this increase of pension (with the arrears) may now be added to my pension.

"My father, Lieut. A. C. Fowler, of the regular Army, who served in the war of 1812, died in the service, and I supported my mother, Mrs. Fowler, through her widowhood.

"I wish also to state that a bill passed through Congress giving to Mrs. Fowler a pension for life (with the arrears), but before it was confirmed her sudden decease prevented its benefits accruing to her or her heirs.

"My only brother, Maj. Fowler, served through the Mexican war and was three times promoted for gallant conduct; and my brother-in-law, Col. A. C. W. Fanning, died in the service of his country.

"Less than three years ago my only son, Col. Gardiner, who served in the war of the rebellion, died suddenly, thus leaving me without a living child or protector, and with no relative able to help or care for me.

"As the daughter, sister, and mother of soldiers who have served their country well, and as the widow of a brave officer whose life was needlessly sacrificed, I trust my case to the justice and liberality of your honorable body and beg that you will grant me the relief so greatly needed.

"FRANCES P. GARDINER."

"NEW HAVEN, CONN., January, 1892.

"To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

"The undersigned, citizens of New Haven, Conn., respectfully recommend to your early and favorable consideration the foregoing petition from Mrs. Frances P. Gardiner, who has long been a respected resident of our city.

"Charles R. Ingersoll, ex-governor of Connecticut; Timothy Dwight, president of Yale University; E. J. Phelps, ex-United States minister to England; George P. Fisher, professor in Yale University; George J. Brush, director of Sheffield Scientific School; Lwyns B. Morris, elected governor but not acknowledged by house of representatives; Colin M. Ingersoll, ex-member United States Congress; A. Heaton Robertson, judge of probate; N. D. Sperry, United States postmaster, New Haven; L. E. Munson, ex-United States judge, district of Montana; Edwin Harwood, rector of Trinity Church, New Haven; H. B. Harrison, ex-governor of Connecticut; S. E. Merwin, late Republican candidate for governor; Daniel C. Eaton, professor in Yale University; Charles A. White, attorney and counselor at law."

The gentleman who introduced the bill in the House appeared before your committee and stated that Mrs. Gardiner is entirely without any means of support aside from her pension, and her needs are extraordinary in that she requires the constant care and attention of others.

Your committee regard the case as an exceptional one, and in the light of the fact that the claimant's husband died in battle while rendering his country arduous and valuable service, and in view of her helpless and dependent condition, the passage of the bill is recommended, with an amendment fixing the rate of pension at $40 per month.

An amendment changing the spelling of the claimant's surname to "Gardener is also recommended."

The amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole were considered and adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection the title of the bill will be changed to conform to the text.

RECONSIDERATION.

On motion of Mr. MARTIN, a motion to reconsider the several votes by which the various bills reported from the Committee of the Whole were considered and disposed of, under the operation of the previous question, was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent, in view of the lateness of the hour and the inclemency of the weather, that the rule fixing a session for to-night be vacated.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE STACKHOUSE.

The SPEAKER protempore. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN] asks unanimous consent that the order heretofore made setting apart Saturday, January 7, at 3 o'clock, for the purpose of paying tribute to the memory of the late Representative Stackhouse, be vacated, and that Saturday, January 28, be substituted in its stead. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BUNTING until Tuesday next, on account of sickness.

And then, on motion of Mr. MARTIN (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

That bill is upon the Calendar, and I ask that the memorials may be laid on the table with other papers protesting against the passage of the bill referred to.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. QUAY, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1425) to provide for the erection of a monument to Maj. Gen. Nathanael Greene on the battlefield of the battle of Guilford Court-House, N. C., fought March 15, 1781, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

COLUMBIAN UNIVERSITY.

Mr. HIGGINS. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3623) to amend the act of March 3, 1873, for the relief of the Columbian University, in the District of Columbia, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The bill was read, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to so amend the act that hereafter the treasurer and secretary of the Columbian University need not be one person nor a member of the trustees of the corporation, but the trustees and overseers, in convention assembled, shall annually elect by ballot two suitable persons from among the trustees or not, as they may deem proper, one to be treasurer and the other secretary of the corporation and of the board of trustees.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VANCE introduced a bill (S. 3690) to incorporate the Tabernacle Society of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S 3691) regulating the employment of certain persons in manufactories, workshops, and stores in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PLATT. I introduce a bill to provide a temporary government for Alaska, and for other purposes, and I ask the indulgence of the Senate to say a single word.

The present government of Alaska is very crude in many respects, inefficient, and altogether abnormal in our history and policy. That there ought to be an improvement upon that government is undoubted. This bill has been prepared at the Department of the Interior and upon consultation with the present governor of Alaska; and while in many respects it is a great improvement upon the present law for the government of Alaska, it has some features in it which I do not think I am in favor of. With that declaration I introduce the bill.

The bill (S. 3692) to provide a temporary government for Alaska, and for other purposes; was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 3693) granting a pension to Fred S. Chamberlain; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 3694) for the relief of certain purchasers of public lands within the limits of Congressional land grants; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

TREATY WITH INDIANS OF OREGON.

Mr. MITCHELL. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate a copy of a treaty negotiated by Joel Palmer, then superintendent of Indian Affairs for the Territory of Oregon, on or about the 11th day of August, 1855, with the various Indian tribes inhabiting the coast of Oregon from the Columbia River to the California line, consisting of Tillamook, Coos Bay, Coquille, Too-too-to-ney, Chetco, Siuslaw, Clatsop, and Lower Umpqua Indians, and whereby they, it is alleged, ceded all the country claimed by them between the country theretofore ceded by various other treaties and the Pacific Ocean, estimated to contain 5,000,000 acres of land, and by the terms of which it is alleged there was a reservation of a tract of country on the coast within the limits of the coast reservation established by the President, estimated to contain 750,000 acres; and that the Secretary of the Interior be further directed to advise the Senate whether such treaty was ever transmitted to the Senate for ratification; also whether the United States, if said treaty was not ratified, has acted upon the terms stipulated therein and received the benefits of the cession therein provided; and if so, whether said Indians were ever paid the amounts stipulated in such treaty to be paid to them for and on account of the lands so ceded, and if so, when were such payments made; and further that he advise the Senate fully whether such treaty became operative and whether the terms thereof or any of them have been enforced against the Indians, or the stipulations therein complied with by the United States.

Mr. PLATT. To what treaty does the resolution refer?

Mr. MITCHELL. The treaty of 1855.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the resolution had better be printed so that we may examine it. There are certain questions asked as to whether certain obligations were assumed. I do not think the Secretary of the Interior or any Cabinet officer has a right to bind the United States by his opinion. I think the resolution ought probably to be amended so as simply to state what was done, and not to ask whether we were bound.

Mr. MITCHELL. The resolution simply calls for information. First, it asks that a copy of the treaty, if one was made at the time designated, be transmitted to the Senate. Second, although the resolution is somewhat lengthy, it simply calls for information as to what, if anything, has been done under the treaty. That is all. I have no particular objection to letting the resolution go over and be printed, if the Senator from Missouri desires that course.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it it be printed and we can then look at it.

Mr. MITCHELL. All right; let the resolution go over and be printed, to be called up to-morrow morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over and be printed.

SATURDAY BANK HALF HOLIDAY.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to call up the joint resolution (S. R. 130) to amend an act entitled "An act making Saturday a half holiday for banking and trust companies in the District of Columbia," approved December 22, 1892, reported by me yesterday from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. It went over yesterday on the objection of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The substitute reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia was read at length yesterday. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HOAR. I have examined the joint resolution since it went over. It is only intended, as I understand from reading it and from the assurance of members of the committee who reported it, to extend to Georgetown and Anacostia, in the District of Columbia, the provisions of the act passed in December, which applies to banks and other like institutions in Washington. I think after this measure shall become a law it would be safe for all holders of negotiable paper and persons desiring to enforce all other contracts which require an act to be performed at a bank on a given day, the indorsers of promissory notes or the makers of conditional contracts, to have the acts necessary for holding persons with whom they have contracted performed on both days. I think it is exceedingly doubtful whether the courts would hold that an act of Congress merely establishing a legal holiday would operate to create a new obligation on the part of an indorser of negotiable paper. I shall not in regard to a measure which is so convenient interpose any objection or insist on any amendment, but simply make the suggestion that in my judgment it would be safe for such persons to have the tender or demand made on both days.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, striking out all after the resolving clause and inserting a substitute.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. Perhaps no other member of the Senate will agree with me in what I am about to say with reference to this measure, but I do not see any necessity for it. I am not going to oppose its passage. I know we have been making holidays for every conceivable reason, but I do not see any reason at all for making a half holiday in the District of Columbia simply for banks and trust companies. If Saturday were a half holiday so that business closed here at 12 o'clock that would be another thing, but the banks open at 9 and close at 3 in the afternoon, I think, and I do not see any particular necessity for this measure which authorizes them to close at 12 on Saturday. Their hours are not late. Business goes on upon Saturday afternoon, we have no half holiday as to general business, and such a measure seems to me quite unnecessary. But, as I said, I am not going to oppose the passage of the joint resolution. I wanted simply to express my views on the subject.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOULE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, this day received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 1318) granting a pension to Martha A. Harris;

A bill (H. R. 2912) to pension John T. Fleenor;

A bill (H. R. 3713) for increase of pension of Francis P. Gardener;

A bill (H. R. 4047) granting a pension to Ellen Hewett;

A bill (H. R. 4320) granting a pension to Thomas S. Kennedy;

A bill (H. R. 4916) granting a pension to Thomas Tucker, of Battery A, Fourth United States Artillery;

A bill (H. R. 6272) to pension Susan S. Murphy;

A bill (H. R. 7234) granting a pension to Mary Millard;

A bill (H. R. 7238) granting a pension to Amanda Atherton;

A bill (H. R. 7713) granting a pension to Benajah Morgan, late private in Captain Burn's company, Third Regiment, Third Brigade of Mounted Volunteers in the Black Hawk war;

A bill (H. R. 8498) to pension Sophia Kagwaich;

A bill (H. R. 8924) granting a pension to the widow of James A. Kelly;

A bill (H. R. 8969) to grant a pension to Lydia Bollman, a dependent sister;

A bill (H. R. 9215) granting a pension to Eliza Holmes;

A bill (H. R. 9220) granting a pension to Mrs. Caroline Hardee Dyall, widow of James R. Dyall, veteran of the Florida war 1836;

A bill (H. R. 9233) to grant a pension to Harriet Cota; and

A bill (H. R. 9590) granting a pension to Cornelius Day.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 2077) for the relief of William B. Price;

A bill (H. R. 2592) for the relief of Andrew B. Knapp;

A bill (H. R. 6649) to extend the provisions of an act to provide for the muster and pay of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces; and

A bill (H. R. 8574) granting an honorable discharge to James C. Jennings.

ADDITIONAL QUARANTINE POWERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? If not, that order is closed and the Chair lays before the Senate the regular order, which is the bill (S. 2707) granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill; the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. VEST, in line 1, of section 3, after the word "service" to insert, "shall immediately after this act takes effect examine the quarantine regulations of all State and municipal boards of health," so as to read:

That the Marine Hospital Service shall, immediately after this act takes effect, examine the quarantine regulations of all State and municipal boards of health, and shall coöperate with and aid State and municipal boards of health in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations of such boards and in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Treasury, etc.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee to insert an additional section as section 7.

Mr. WOLCOTT. This measure is a most important one, and the Senate seems to be quite thin. I suggest that there is no quorum present. Let the roll be called.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll will be called by the Secretary.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Berry,	Dolph,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Blackburn,	Frye,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Call,	George,	Mills,	Squire,
Cameron,	Gibson,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Carlisle,	Hansbrough,	Morgan,	Teller,
Chandler,	Harris,	Morrill,	Vance,
Cockrell,	Higgins,	Palmer,	Vest,
Coke,	Hoar,	Peffer,	Walthall,
Cullom,	Hunton,	Platt,	White,
Daniel,	Jones of Ark.	Proctor,	Wilson,
Dawes,	Kyle,	Quay,	Wolcott.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-four Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the committee inserting section 7.

Mr. HARRIS. In section 3, line 24, after the word "State," to conform that part of the section to certain amendments suggested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], I move to strike out the words "from another" and insert "or Territory or the District of Columbia from another State or Territory or the District of Columbia;" so as to read:

Are not sufficient to prevent the introduction of such diseases into the United States, or into one State or Territory or the District of Columbia from another State or Territory or the District of Columbia, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, if in his judgment, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know what stage the bill is in, but I wish to make a correction in an amendment as we find it printed in the bill on our tables. I moved yesterday an amendment to section 3, on page 5, which does not seem to be printed in the bill as it is in the RECORD. I moved to amend in lines 38 and 39 in the present bill, so as to read in this way:

But if the State or municipal authorities shall fail or refuse to enforce said rules and regulations, the President shall execute and enforce the same, and may detail officers or appoint proper persons for that purpose.

As it reads in the printed amendment, it is simply that the President may "appoint officers for that purpose." It is correctly printed in the RECORD, but not in the bill as it is reprinted.

Mr. CHANDLER. It says "detail" in the bill.

Mr. TELLER. The Secretary will find in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this morning on page 408 the exact words of the amendment as I proposed it.

Mr. HARRIS. Does not the Senator from Colorado think, as the language appears in the bill, it accomplishes his object perfectly? It seems to me it does.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose the committee desires to have it in the power of the President not only to appoint persons but to detail officers.

Mr. CHANDLER. The bill so reads.

Mr. TELLER. It does not in the print I have.

Mr. CHANDLER. It does in the print I have.

Mr. TELLER. In the copy I have it reads that the President "may appoint officers."

Mr. CHANDLER. "May detail or appoint officers."

Mr. HARRIS. It reads:

The President shall execute and enforce the same and may detail or appoint officers for that purpose.

Mr. TELLER. I overlooked the word "detail."

Mr. HARRIS. The word "detail" remains in the bill.

Mr. TELLER. If it means that the President may detail or appoint officers, it is all right. The bill, as printed, does not give the amendment exactly in the language in which I offered it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, to insert as a new section, section 7.

Mr. PLATT. Let the section be reported as it now stands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The section will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 7. That whenever it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the President that by reason of the existence of cholera or yellow fever in a foreign country, there is serious danger of the introduction of the same into the United States, and that notwithstanding the quarantine defense this danger is so increased by immigration that a suspension of the same is demanded in the interest of the public health, the President shall have power to suspend immigration from such countries or places as he shall designate and for such period of time as he may deem necessary.

Mr. KYLE. I move to amend in line 3 of the section by striking out the words "yellow fever," and inserting "other infectious or contagious diseases."

I will state my reasons for doing this. I notice section 8, at the close of the bill, repeals the old law in regard to contagious diseases, and by this morning's Post I notice there are 600 cases of typhus fever in Old Mexico. The same may occur upon the Canadian border, and I think by striking out the words "yellow fever" and substituting "other infectious diseases," the essential part of the old law proposed to be repealed by section 8 will be retained.

Mr. WHITE. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill whether the power given under section 7 to the President is not a simple reiteration of the power given to the Secretary of the Treasury under previous provisions of the bill?

Mr. HARRIS. I do not think it is.

Mr. WHITE. A previous provision of the bill says that the Secretary may frame such rules and regulations as to detention in all respects, as to the prevention of diseases in all respects, and that such rules and regulations, when promulgated by him, shall have the effect of law. Now, have you not lodged in the Secretary of the Treasury under the previous provisions of the bill, if it means anything, all the power which you lodge here? Where is the limitation upon the power of the Secretary of the Treasury stated in the previous provision of the bill?

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator will allow me to suggest that the rules and regulations which the Secretary of the Treasury may make are in respect to vessels, passengers, crews, and cargo, which are sailing to this country, which are coming. The power given to the President is, in case of an exigency which in his opinion demands it, to prevent the coming at all. That is the difference, as it appears to me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], to the amendment of the committee inserting a new section as section 7, which will be reported.

The SECRETARY. In section 7, after the words "cholera or," in line 3, it is proposed to strike out "yellow fever" and insert "other infectious or contagious diseases;" so as to read:

That whenever it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the President that by reason of the existence of cholera or other infectious diseases in a foreign country, etc.

Mr. WHITE. With the greatest deference to the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], I think that he states a distinction without a difference. The admission is that the previous sections of the bill give to the Secretary of Treasury full power to make all such rules and regulations as he may deem best as to the coming of vessels, as to the time of detention, and as to what shall be done to them after they get here; in other words, the fullest and most plenary power to prevent the coming into the United States of any person whom his regulations may choose to exclude. Under the terms of the previous sections the exercise of this power to make regulations is not exhausted by calling the power into being at one time. It is a lodgment in the Secretary of the Treasury of a continuous power, a power coterminous and coexisting with his official function. Now, is not that all the power given in this section?

But the Senator says the distinction is this, that one is the power given to the President to prevent them from coming, the other is the power given to the Secretary of the Treasury to prevent them from coming in. Is not that a distinction without a difference? Where is the distinction between the two? If the Secretary of the Treasury promulgates his regulations, saying that nobody shall come in, is not that a regulation saying that nobody shall come unless it is to be supposed that a man knowing he can not come in is going to come? The power of the President in suspending immigration can not go any further than preventing immigrants from coming in; his authority is not extraterritorial; he can not prevent a man from being guilty of the act of folly of shipping for this country, if he pleases, with the knowledge that he can not come in.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Louisiana allow me to suggest, that I must have been unfortunate in my expression or he unfortunate enough not to have understood what I said. The difference, as I conceive it to be, is this: The Secretary of the Treasury makes rules and regulations under which persons may come in. The power given to the President is, in case of such exigency as may possibly arise, to say they shall not come at all. The difference is between being authorized to come in under certain circumstances and not being authorized to come at all.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the explanation of the distinguished Senator reads the provision out of the bill, for the very elementary conception of the quarantine power is that it contains within itself ex vi terminorum the power to disinfect, the power to detain for a particular time, or the power to prevent coming in for as long a time as may be considered necessary. When you use the expression "quarantine," it is used as understood by civilized nations, and in every quarantine in the United States where it is considered proper that the party should not come in, the regulation goes, saying he shall not come in for three months or for forty days, or for six months, or he shall not come in for the time necessary to protect the public health.

Therefore, if the rules and regulations which the Secretary of the Treasury is to make under the previous provisions of this bill do not include the power to make rules and regulations as to quarantine, as commonly and at all times understood, then the previous provisions of the bill mean nothing, and you have lodged in the Secretary of the Treasury no power whatever.

I say this power ought to be lodged somewhere. If it be lodged at all, it ought not to be lodged in two places. If you confide it to the Secretary of the Treasury, then why go on and reconfide the same power in the President? If you do not wish to confide the power to the Secretary, then insert in your bill a provision confiding it to the President.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Louisiana if he extends his argument so far that he conceives that a municipality or a State, under the quarantine powers which are now exercised or which are conceded to it by this bill, would have the power to pass a quarantine regulation which should prohibit for one year or three years all immigration from Europe to the ports of that State?

Mr. WHITE. I will answer the Senator by saying that the quarantine regulations of my State, which have been in existence for a great many years and which have been declared constitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States after an elaborate examination, give the health officer power to detain a vessel six months with everybody on it, if he pleases.

Mr. HOAR. That is not quite my question.

Mr. WHITE. My argument is that the power to quarantine and the power to regulate quarantine contains within itself ex vi terminorum the power to limit the coming in for the time adjudged necessary by the quarantine officer to prevent the introduction of the infection; and if three months is that period, then that is adequate: if three years is that period, then the quarantine power would contain the power for the three years.

Of course if the lodgment of the quarantine power should be fraudulently exercised, and instead of providing for quarantine in the execution of the health law, the officer with whom this power was lodged should go further and attempt to do by indirection that which he had no authority to do directly, then the courts might intervene. The President would be in the same position here. The power to prevent the coming in is only granted to the President under this bill in so far as is necessary to protect from infection. The same limit is put upon him by the terms of this bill that is put upon every quarantine officer by the very nature and object of the quarantine power. Therefore, if the President should establish a quarantine for three years and three years was not necessary for the purpose of preventing this infection, then the President would transcend his powers, and under the pretext of exercising the quarantine power would exercise another and substantive power, because the President is made by the terms of this bill a quarantine officer for every port in the United States.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Louisiana be right, it seems to me he furnishes a very strong argument indeed for agreeing to section 7 at it stands; because if section 7 be adopted, then I think it will be quite clear that it is the purpose of the law to recognize in the existing quarantine authorities of the States the power to prescribe the rules and regulations for an immigration which is to continue to come in, and that the power to suspend immigration altogether, either temporarily or permanently as a health device, is intended to be lodged solely in the President of the United States, where it certainly should be lodged. In other words, if it be true that the quarantine power involves in it the power of total suspension of immigration, if we leave the bill without the proposed section 7, every petty quarantine officer, or certainly the Secretary of the Treasury, will have it, to which I do not agree. I think it is quite clear that this section should be added, declaring in terms whenever the health or protection of the country from infection requires the total suspension of immigration, that power is to belong to the President, and in lodging it by the seventh section in the President it would be taken away from the common quarantine officers, who otherwise might have it under the other section.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I submit respectfully to the Senator from Louisiana that the first section of the bill provides:

> That it shall be unlawful for any merchant ship or other vessel from any foreign port or place to enter any port of the United States except in accordance with the provisions of this act and with such rules and regulations.

These rules and regulations are made by the Secretary of the Treasury and have reference only to importations of persons and goods, and provide that if a ship shall enter a port contrary to the rules and regulations a penalty shall be imposed, which is fixed in the bill.

There the whole duty and power of the Secretary of the Treasury ends; but without the seventh section of the bill, if it became necessary to prohibit the importation of persons from the states of Europe and elsewhere, which were infected with disease to an extent that would make it dangerous to admit them, the President has the power to prohibit. The power of the Secretary of the Treasury is only the power to regulate; that of the President, under certain extreme conditions, is the power to prohibit. But, as I take it, this bill without the seventh section or some similar provision would be very incomplete. We should enable some officer of the Government to exercise this power; and certainly no officer of the Government should be intrusted with such a power but the President.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I wish to inquire if an amendment is in order at this time?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. An amendment is now in order.

Mr. HARRIS. I submit to the Senator that we had better dispose of the pending question. There is an amendment pending to section 7 which has not yet been acted upon. When that is acted upon, then the whole bill will be open for amendment, and the Senator will then have an opportunity to offer his amendment.

Mr. SQUIRE. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE].

Mr. VEST. I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Louisiana. Do I understand the Senator to hold that without the seventh section of this bill the Secretary of the Treasury, as the bill now reads, would have authority to exclude immigration entirely from this country?

Mr. WHITE. I hold that under the first section of the bill giving him power to make rules and regulations, he can make such rules and regulations as he could make under the quarantine power, which would exclude people from this country.

Mr. VEST. It seems to me, with entire respect to the Senator from Louisiana, that that ignores the fundamental idea of a quarantine. Quarantine laws are based upon the incipient fact, and the necessary fact, that a foreign vessel should reach or come within the jurisdiction of the United States. As a matter of course, so long as that vessel is outside of our jurisdiction no law of Congress or of a State or municipality could have an extra territorial effect upon it. It is impossible to conceive of a quarantine unless you admit that the foreign vessel has come within the jurisdiction of our country. Therefore, although the choice of the word may not be exactly appropriate, it is absurd to hold that the quarantine authorities have the right to prohibit immigration entirely. The two powers must be, in the very nature of the case, absolutely and radically distinct.

The President of the United States, when he exercises that extraordinary power, says to the whole world, "You shall not come within the jurisdiction of this country; there shall be absolute nonintercourse in the interest of the health and the lives of the people of the United States." A quarantine law, upon the other hand, says, "You may come within the jurisdiction of the United States, but when you do you shall be subject to certain regulations, and until those regulations are complied with your passengers shall not be landed upon our shores." Therefore, I hold it is logically and absolutely necessary, if we desire to create this power to exclude immigration, that the seventh section of this bill shall be retained.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri will allow me, the word "quarantine" has its root in the word "quarante," by which for forty days there was an absolute inhibition of anybody coming into a port. That is what the word "quarantine" comes from. The courts have declared over and over again that the States have that power; and in my State the power has been enforced over and over again in holding people out for six months and for seven months during the entire summer period. Has it been claimed that that was not an exercise of quarantine power?

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me to ask, through the Chair, can there be any application of the regulations of quarantine until a foreign vessel has come within the jurisdiction of this country?

Mr. WHITE. Certainly not.

Mr. VEST. Then, as a matter of course, there is not an entire prohibition of immigration, because the proclamation of the President would prevent a vessel from coming inside of our jurisdiction at all. That shows, it seems to me, beyond any question that the two powers are absolutely distinct.

Mr. WHITE. The power is not lodged in the President under this section in the bill, if the Senator will allow me, to prevent a vessel from coming in. It is to prevent particular persons from coming on the vessel.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course, we are now legislating in regard to persons; we are now legislating in regard to immigration. To say that an empty vessel may come in with nobody upon it is, I submit, simply begging the whole question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. CULLOM. I think there is no objection to that.

Mr. VEST. There is no objection to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SQUIRE. I understand that the entire bill is now subject to amendment, and I offer an amendment to section 5.

Mr. PLATT. Section 7, as amended, has not yet been agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose it is first in order to dispose of section 7.

Mr. CHANDLER. What is the question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to section 7 as amended by the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE].

Mr. CHANDLER. On the adoption of the amendment as in Committee of the Whole?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not opposed to the adoption of this amendment. I conceive that if we do not suspend all immigration for one year, as proposed by the bill pending in the Senate, we ought of course to give to the President the powers which are conferred by section 7. I am therefore heartily in favor of its adoption. I wish to say, however, that it will not prevent me from urging the passage of the bill totally suspending immigration for one year.

Here is a power given to the President to suspend in his discretion, whenever there is danger of infection, immigration coming from certain ports. If the law passes totally suspending immigration for one year, it will of course supersede the operation of this section 7 to that extent, but with the understanding that it will not prevent me from asking the Senate to consider the bill for the total suspension for one year, I advocate the adoption of section 7 as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the Senate ready for the question on agreeing to the amendment of the committee inserting section 7 as amended?

Mr. WHITE. I do not care about calling for the yeas and nays in Committee of the Whole on that amendment, but in order to do it in the Senate is it necessary that I should now reserve the amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not necessary.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator will have the right to reserve it later.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SQUIRE. I submit an amendment which I send to the desk to come in at the end of section 5.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 5:

Provided, That so far as relates to rules and regulations and enforcement thereof and the reports herein provided for, the Secretary of the Treasury shall execute the provisions of this act through the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service.

Mr. DOLPH. That amendment should not be adopted. In the first place, we have provided that the Secretary of the Treasury shall make these regulations and that he shall promulgate them, and he is responsible for their enforcement. We have provided at the beginning of section 4:

That it shall be the duty of the Marine Hospital Service, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to perform all the duties in respect to quarantine and quarantine regulations which are provided for by this act, and to obtain information of the sanitary condition of foreign ports and places from which contagious and infectious diseases are or may be imported into the United States, and to this end the consular officer of the United States at such ports and places as shall be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury shall make to the Secretary of the Treasury weekly reports of the sanitary condition of the ports and places at which they are respectively stationed.

Now comes the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] with an amendment which will undo substantially all that we have done, and put the Secretary of the Treasury under the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service.

Mr. SQUIRE. I will explain the object of the amendment, if the Senator will allow me, as I was about to do.

If I recollect correctly, when the Senator from Oregon yesterday commenced to propose his amendments substituting the Secretary of the Treasury for the Marine Hospital Service, he made the remark that while the bill contemplated using the Marine Hospital Service, he thought for legal reasons it would be better to designate some particular officer, either the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service or the Secretary of the Treasury, and preferably the latter, for, as he said, the terms of the bill might require some expression of opinion from different physicians belonging to that service which it might be inconvenient to obtain, and therefore some expression should be used that would fix the legal responsibility more definitely so as to give effect to the law.

I agreed entirely with the Senator from Oregon in the position he took yesterday in proposing the several amendments which were agreed to on his motion; but in thinking this matter over and in conferring with others upon the subject, I find that there is a feeling that the bill as at present constructed seems to ignore this very important Bureau of the public service. It seems to put a slur or a slight upon it which is not necessary, and which is not deserved by that Bureau.

I need not go, nor is it necessary that I should do so, into the history of this Bureau of the Government, which operates under the Secretary of the Treasury; but it is well known that this Bureau is an important one. It has been efficiently conducted, it is well officered; nobody can complain or has complained that it is inefficient; and why should we, by implication, cast a slur upon it?

The object of the amendment I have offered is simply to make at least a graceful recognition of that Bureau. I may say, perhaps properly at this point, that in order to make sure that this amendment would be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, I have consulted with the Secretary on the subject, and he used the very language which I have used—that it would be a graceful recognition of this very important Bureau coming under his Department. He expects to use this Bureau in the same manner in which it has been heretofore used, and it would be very appropriate to suitably recognize the Bureau in this bill.

I can see no objection to the adoption of the amendment. It seems to me that the Senate by the amendments heretofore adopted, substituting the Secretary of the Treasury for the Marine Hospital Service, and various other corrections which were made to conform thereto, has practically done all that was needful by way of making the Secretary of the Treasury the main responsible agent of the Government for the conduct of this business, and that we should recognize also the Marine Hospital Service, and in so doing recognize its efficiency.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SQUIRE. Yes, sir.

Mr. VEST. Have not the Senator and the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service overlooked the first lines of the third section which we have left in the bill?

That the Marine Hospital Service shall coöperate with and aid—

And as amended shall immediately after the enactment of this law "make examination of the quarantine regulations by any State or municipality, and shall coöperate so far as it lawfully may," etc. There is an express recognition.

Mr. SQUIRE. I admit that there is one reference by name to the Marine Hospital Service.

Mr. VEST. That was left deliberately in the bill, for I yesterday called the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] to the fact.

Mr. SQUIRE. If the Senator will permit me, as I understand, these various rules and regulations have already been practically prepared by the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, as it is expected that this bureau will prepare and provide the rules and regulations and pursue the same course with reference to them as it has heretofore.

Of course, any study or preparations of this sort have been for the purpose of saving time at this important juncture.

Mr. VEST. I do not wish to discuss the matter, but will the Senator permit me to call his attention also to section 4 of this bill, which has left in it this language:

That it shall be the duty of the Marine Hospital Service under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, etc.

There is another recognition of that bureau. I think the Supervising Surgeon-General is supersensitive on this point.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I do not mean to presume to represent the Supervising Surgeon-General, but I know that many of his friends think that the course pursued yesterday may be regarded as a slur upon him. I do not believe the Senate intends to do that. It seems to me that we can just as well do what is desired, without any imputation of that kind, by this graceful recognition, which the Secretary of the Treasury himself is willing to accept and says he thinks is proper to be incorporated as a provision of the bill.

It may not be known to all that there have been some things occurring in the management of this Bureau which have not been altogether smooth. The point I wish to bring out distinctly is, that Congress, if it enacts this measure and it becomes a law, does not intend to give any color to the proposition to make any other persons or officers an independent bureau, separate and distinct from the one which now exists, or any subdivision of that bureau, which may ignore the Bureau as it stands to-day, and which would be an independent and separate authority on this question. That is the point I wish fully considered. I think if we realize the position of this important branch of the service, its efficient organization for work, the work that it has done, and the interest which has been manifested in its operations heretofore, we will readily concede that this amendment should be adopted. The chief or head of the Bureau should be distinctly recognized in the bill and made responsible.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Washington is very largely intended as a mere legislative compliment to a set of physicians who are somewhat jealous of their positions. If the bill passes as it now stands the Marine Hospital Service is the only medical bureau which belongs to the Treasury Department. The Marine Hospital Service is recognized in the bill as the medical board of that Department, and in effect the Marine Hospital Service will perform all the duties that it would have performed if the amendments of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] had not been adopted. They were wholly unobjectionable to me, and perhaps obviated a possible ambiguity that might have arisen, and I very cheerfully accepted them; but as a matter of fact, in the popular opinion which exists among sanitarians throughout the entire country, these quarantine authorities ought not to be submitted to the Marine Hospital Service, but to a board of sanitarian scientists.

The Marine Hospital Service will perform all the duties which are demanded at the hands of medical officers if the bill passes as it now stands, and I am not inclined myself to get up a controversy or to encumber the bill with such an amendment as the Senator from Washington has presented in order to pay the graceful compliment which he says the amendment would be. There is certainly no reflection upon the Marine Hospital Service in the bill as it now stands. If the bill passes it repeals the act which created the National Board of Health. I may say that, growing out of professional jealousy, which ranks as high among doctors as any other people on the face of the earth, while the National Board of Health existed it was crippled, embarrassed, and finally starved to death by the active hostility of the Marine Hospital Service. I bear no malice. I intend to deal with absolute fairness and justice with the Marine Hospital Service, but I am not going out of my way to compliment them in a legislative enactment.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the act of 1878, for the prevention of the introduction of contagious diseases into the United States, recognized this Bureau of the Treasury Department. That act provides that—

> At all other ports where, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, it shall be deemed necessary to establish quarantine, the medical officers or other agents of the Marine Hospital Service shall perform such duties in the enforcement of the quarantine rules and regulations.

The act of 1890 contains a similar provision, which reads as follows:

> And it shall be the duty of the United States attorney in the district where the misdemeanor shall have been committed to take immediate cognizance of the offense, upon report made to him by any medical officer of the Marine Hospital Service.

The act of 1890, approved on the 27th of March, provides that—

> The said rules and regulations shall be prepared by the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

This has been the uniform language of all the acts relating to quarantine. Why, then, should we have spent the whole day yesterday upon the proposition that the words "Marine Hospital Service" were indefinite and required all the officials of that Bureau to convene in order to perform any act? Why give the Secretary of the Treasury the absolute authority to disregard in making these regulations the recommendations of the Marine Hospital Service? To the contrary, we have all the former acts which have been passed by Congress upon the subject.

There is a reason beyond that of compliment to this Bureau or to the very eminent physician who is now the Supervising Surgeon-General. There is a reason connected with public policy. This bill confers the most extraordinary power. The Constitution in express terms prohibits that there shall be any regulation of commerce giving a preference to ports of one State over that of another. This bill in direct terms gives authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to make regulations of commerce in the nature of quarantine regulations, prescribing the particular ports in which commerce may be carried on and where vessels may enter.

From the necessity of the case, Mr. President, I was willing to give this authority in a case of extreme urgency, but shall it be an absolute and unlimited authority? Why say that the Secretary of the Treasury shall do it without consulting a bureau specially created for the purpose of inquiring into this service, for whose aid large appropriations have been made every year? Why so carefully eliminate every clause of the bill except the two mentioned by the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Tennessee? The clauses to which they refer ought not to be in the bill upon the propositions on which other provisions referring to the Marine Hospital Service were stricken out, for every reason for striking out the other clauses applies to that part of the bill in which these words are left. The words that were left do not apply to the rules and regulations which the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make for the exclusion of infectious or contagious diseases, and the making of these rules and regulations constitute the important part of the bill and constitute all its force and efficacy. Strike these out and there is nothing in the bill.

So far as these rules are concerned the bill gives the Secretary plenary authority. If the bill is constitutional he may declare one port to be the only port in which commerce may be carried on, stating that his opinion, in his uninformed opinion, without reference to the medical opinion of the country, he orders that the commerce shall be in that port alone.

The original bill said to the Secretary, "You may exercise this arbitrary power upon the recommendation and the approval or the initiation of the medical officers charged by law with the duty of informing themselves upon this subject." The bill, therefore, and the proposition of the Senator from Oregon are a discredit to the Marine Hospital Service. They are a declaration that that service is inefficient, incapable, and ought not to be retained. There can be no other justification for carefully eliminating from the bill every reference to the Marine Hospital Service and giving an arbitrary and unlimited power to the Secretary of the Treasury upon his own motion and his own unadvised opinion to make a preference of one port over another.

I am willing, Mr. President, to have a national quarantine if it be necessary. I am willing to have the authority of Congress to regulate commerce extended to the point of prohibiting it as a measure of protection against disease in a case of extreme urgency, but surely that authority ought to be carefully limited and ought to be exercised only upon the recommendation of an intelligent medical opinion carefully obtained, and aided by the Government to obtain the information upon which such action should be taken.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I am not opposed to any compliments which the Senator from Washington or any other Senator may see fit to pay to the present Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service. So far as I know and believe he is a capable and accomplished officer, in every way fitted for the work of the service, and is doing that work well and faithfully. But I think under the circumstances he is sufficiently recognized in the use of the words "the Marine Hospital Service" in two places in the bill.

As the bill was reported by the Senator from Tennessee, it was objectionable, to my mind, and I called his attention to the frequent use of the words "Marine Hospital Service." He said that upon the motion of any Senator he would have no objection to those words being stricken out, and the words "Secretary of the Treasury" inserted in every case.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], in making the motion to amend did not strike out the words "Marine Hospital Service" in every case, but has left that clause in the bill in two places. In the third section the Marine Hospital Service is required to coöperate with and aid State and municipal boards of health in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations of such boards and in the enforcement of the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Treasury; and again in section 4 it is made the duty of the Marine Hospital Service, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to perform all the duties in respect to quarantine and quarantine regulations which are provided for by this act.

Moreover, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has called my attention to the statute creating the office of Supervising Surgeon-General of the Treasury Department, which makes it the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, as a general rule, to employ the Marine Hospital Service and the Surgeon-General of that service to do this kind of work when committed to the Treasury Department. I will read the first section of the act, section 4802 of the Revised Statutes:

> The Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time, appoint a surgeon to act as Supervising Surgeon of the Marine Hospital Service, who shall, under the direction of the Secretary, supervise all matters connected with the Marine Hospital Service.

There is the law by which the Secretary of the Treasury is obliged to employ the Supervising Surgeon-General to supervise all matters connected with the Marine Hospital Service; and here in this proposed act in two places the Marine Hospital Service has committed to it the duty of doing all this work.

Now, Mr. President, what more can the present, able, and efficient Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service desire? Is that not sufficient without his asking us to turn from the consideration of weightier matters in the bill to pay him, as the Senator from Washington says, a compliment on account of his efficiency? I pay him the compliment of being an efficient officer, but I do not believe in passing laws giving power, as a general rule, to anybody in the Departments of the Government but the heads of Departments.

I do not believe by legislation in naming the bureaus and subordinate officers of the various Departments except when it is absolutely necessary to do so. I think the powers which are conferred by act of Congress upon the President and the heads of Departments should be given to the President and heads of Departments. Of course the President and the Secretaries will use the proper subordinate officers, and no other officers, to perform the duties which Congress imposes upon the Executive, but to tie down and limit the Secretary of the Treasury in every section of a bill of this kind to use one particular officer and no other when we want him to accomplish the great end that it is his duty to accomplish, and if he can not accomplish it by one bureau of his Department to accomplish it by another bureau of his Department, is, it seems to me, a mistake in legislation. I think the Senator from Washington should regard the rights, and interests, and prerogatives, and dignity, and character, and honor of the present able Supervising Surgeon-General as being well protected by the bill as it stands.

Mr. HARRIS. There is nothing in the bill which can by any possibility be construed into any reflection on the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, nor is there anything in what I have said which can be justly construed into any criticism of that officer. I know him very well, and regard him as an able, efficient, and accomplished officer. I should be very far from being willing to reflect upon him, and when the proper time comes I will myself move to insert after the word "the," in line 1, of section 3, page 3, the language "Supervising Surgeon-General of the;" so it will read: "That the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service" shall perform the duties there assigned to the Marine Hospital Service. I shall also move the insertion of the same language in the same connection in the first line of section 4. It does not change the substance, or effect, or the operations of the bill in the slightest degree, and I am perfectly willing to insert that language.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE].

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Washington will withdraw it and accept the suggestion that I make.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I think this amendment ought to be adopted. Whatever may have been the intention, and we are bound to conclude it was simply an intention, to perfect the bill, the effect of the action taken yesterday is, in my judgment, very liable to be construed into a serious reflection on the present able and efficient Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, and for the reason which I shall state.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator whether, if we were to strike out the words "Secretary of the Treasury" in the bill, it would not be a reflection upon the Secretary, and whether, if we now provide that the regulations which are to govern this whole subject shall be made by the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service instead of the Secretary of the Treasury, it is not a reflection upon the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. MITCHELL. Not at all; not under existing circumstances by any manner of means.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then how is it a reflection upon the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service?

Mr. MITCHELL. If the bill had come from the committee originally without naming in every section, as it did, this particular Bureau by designation, designating it as the Marine Hospital Service, then any amendments which might have been offered here would have received perhaps a different construction; but when a bill as it comes from the committee has a recognition, in its every section from beginning to end, of this particular Bureau, and provides in every section to the effect that the operations of the bill shall be carried out by the Secretary of the Treasury through this Bureau, then, when all those provisions have been eliminated and the whole matter turned over absolutely to the Secretary of the Treasury, it amounts, it seems to me, to a reflection on that Bureau and on the head of that Bureau that ought not to be indulged in, to say the least.

I agree that the terms used in the original bill, "the Marine Hospital Service," ought to have been amended. I agree fully with my colleague in the criticism he made yesterday upon that clause being inserted and used as a designation of a source of authority. But the amendment that should have been made, in my humble judgment, was not by striking out that clause and inserting "the Secretary of the Treasury," but by striking out that clause and inserting "the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service," which would be a designation of a certain officer, the chief of the proper Bureau, through whom the Secretary of the Treasury would execute the law.

Mr. HARRIS. Does not the Senator recognize the fact that the operations of the bill as amended yesterday will be precisely the same that they would have been if the amendments had not been made?

Mr. MITCHELL. I hardly think so. I think the bill as amended yesterday will leave it open to the Secretary of the Treasury, provided he is so disposed, to create or revive perhaps another board of health, creating a second bureau or some similar authority, and thus designating certain officers other than the Surgeon-General of the Marine Service and his subordinates and associates to exercise functions appropriately and properly pertaining to them.

Mr. HARRIS. Can he create a board of health with statutory authority?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly not; but that is the precise question, as to whether the bill as it stands does not confer this authority and whether it may not lead to the old contention that existed here for years between the National Board of Health and this very Bureau.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to suggest that the bill repeals the act which created the National Board of Health. The National Board of Health never could have been created without the authority of an act of Congress. The Secretary of the Treasury under this bill will have no more power to create a board of health or any other organization than he will have to change the time at which the sun shall rise.

Mr. MITCHELL. That after all is a matter of construction. I differ with the Senator from Tennessee, the chairman of the committee, in reference to that matter. I do not claim that the Secretary of the Treasury under this bill, if it should become a law, would have power to revive the old National Board of Health. I do not insist upon that, but I do insist that the striking out of these words yesterday and the insertion of the phrase "the Secretary of the Treasury" gives a power to the Secretary of the Treasury in respect of the instrumentalities he shall employ in the execution of the law that he did not possess under the bill as it stood yesterday. It amounts moreover, in addition, in my judgment, to an unwarranted reflection upon the present Marine Hospital Bureau and upon the very able and efficient Surgeon-General of that Bureau.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Tennessee has stated what he will move to insert if the pending amendment is withdrawn. In the first line of section 4 he will move to insert the words "Supervising Surgeon-General," and then this proposed law, about which Dr. Wyman is so much exercised that he comes to the Capitol to have his personal status defined by law, will read——

Mr. MITCHELL. When it comes to that I am not aware, as far as I am concerned—the Senator from New Hampshire may know better—that Dr. Wyman has been at the Capitol at all. I have not seen him here for one, and am not aware that he has been here either personally or by proxy.

Mr. SQUIRE. May I be permitted to say——

Mr. CHANDLER. He has a right to come here. I make no criticism upon that.

Mr. SQUIRE. He expressly told me he would not come to the Capitol.

Mr. CHANDLER. I know that since yesterday Dr. Wyman has been exercised on this subject. That he has exercised any Senator I do not pretend to say. The fourth section as proposed to be amended by the Senator from Tennessee would read thus:

That it shall be the duty of the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to perform all the duties in respect to quarantine and quarantine regulations which are provided for by this act.

Now, what more does Mr. Wyman want? Does he want the earth? Does he want to be made Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I yielded to a question.

Mr. CHANDLER. Excuse me; I only asked a question.

Mr. MITCHELL. And I reply to the Senator from New Hampshire by asking him a question. Does the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service have the same power under the bill as it stands to-day, without an amendment, provided it becomes a law just as it is, that he would have if the amendment of the Senator from Washington were adopted?

Mr. HARRIS. Absolutely.

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, I think so.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then, that being the case, what is the objection? Why are the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Tennessee so persistent in insisting that this amendment shall not be adopted when both admit just now that it will not change the effect of the bill?

Mr. SQUIRE. If the Senator from Oregon will permit me I should like to make a correction. I understand that the Senator from Tennessee is not opposed to my amendment; that he is indifferent whether it is adopted or not. I should like to have him state if that is not the case.

Mr. HARRIS. At first blush I thought I would say that I was utterly indifferent as to whether the amendment was agreed to or not.

Mr. SQUIRE. That is what the Senator told me.

Mr. HARRIS. But having looked at the matter since that time, I think the amendment I say I shall propose if this amendment is withdrawn does everything the pending amendment can do. Indeed, without the amendment I propose the bill devolves these duties upon the Marine Hospital Service, and the present Surgeon-General is the executive head of that service and would perform them. But what more than the provision in the third section and in the fourth section Dr. Wyman or his most zealous friend can desire is what I can not see, except to go out of the way and repeat in a formal section what already appears in the bill upon the pure and cold idea of going out of our way to pay a personal compliment to the individual.

Mr. MITCHELL. This, of course, is no place for personal compliment as far as matters of legislation are concerned.

Mr. HARRIS. It is not.

Mr. MITCHELL. But this is quite a different question. It is a question both of power and appropriateness—legislative propriety. I am not quite sure, however, but the amendment suggested by the Senator from Tennessee substantially meets the requirements; but I can see no reason at the same time, in view of the amendments already made to the bill, why there should be any objection on the part of the chairman of the committee, or on the part of any Senator, in fact, to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like the privilege of giving the reason why the amendment should not be adopted.

Mr. MITCHELL. Let us have it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think ordinarily when a bureau officer is fastened by two statutes on the head of a Department so that the head of the Department can not use any other officer to do a particular thing, it is enough without his coming up to the Capitol and insisting upon being fastened upon the head of the Department by three statutes. Here is the first statute, section 4802 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that the "Supervising Surgeon-General of Marine Hospital Service * * * shall * * * supervising all matters connected with the Marine Hospital Service." Here is the other provision: That the Marine Hospital Service (and the Senator offers to put in the words "Supervising Surgeon-General") shall perform all the duties in respect to quarantine and quarantine regulations, and there is not anyhing else here. It is provided that he shall perform all those duties.

There are two statutes, and I do not believe in having the head of a bureau come up here when under those circumstances he is protected by two different statutes and insist upon it there would be a reflection cast upon him by the Senate of the United States when it is legislating upon a bill of this great public consequence because it does not legislate so as to fasten him upon the Secretary of the Treasury by a third statute. That is the reason why I am against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hardly think the Senator from New Hampshire is justified in referring as he has done to the present Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service by name and in the tone and manner he has, and insisting that he is here asking this and that. He is not here, so far as that is concerned, but I trust and believe he has a right to expect fair treatment at the hands of the Senate both in debate and in legislation.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator say he is not in the building now?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I decline to yield further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon has the floor, and declines to yield.

Mr. MITCHELL. I might with the same propriety make another and counter assertion, because it amounts to nothing but mere assertion, as far as that is concerned, as I know no more about it than the Senator from New Hampshire knows about the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service. I take no personal interest in it. I might with the same propriety assert that a third party was here representing through Senators certain outside interests for the purpose of attacking this very Bureau. I might do that, perhaps, with the same propriety that the Senator from New Hampshire makes his assertion, and I might even name certain persons, perhaps, if I were disposed to bring in outside matters.

The Senator admits that the amendment does not change the effect of this proposed law, but insists with pertinacity that it shall not for some unknown reason be adopted, and that is all there is to it. In view of what took place yesterday this amendment simply equalizes matters, makes a proper distribution of the powers, gives a proper recognition to and vests appropriate powers in the Secretary of the Treasury and the proper bureau officer through which the law is to be executed.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, to say that I am surprised at the turn which this debate has taken and the spirit which is manifested this morning in relation to this matter, is to put it very mildly indeed. We were yesterday, all in good faith I think, endeavoring to fix and prepare the bill so that in some way this great danger which menaces the country could be taken under supervision and avoided. I venture to say that not in the mind of a Senator here yesterday was there any thought about the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service—I did not even know his title—but in good faith we were endeavoring to perfect a bill to prevent what we all so much fear, the introduction of cholera. Every amendment, in my judgment, was submitted by Senators and adopted by the Senate in perfect good faith looking towards that end, and although we differed, perhaps, in what ought to be done, there was that common purpose.

Now, the whole spirit of the discussion has changed and the Senate is excited, so far as it may be, as to whether some slight has not been intended to be put upon a certain officer of a certain bureau of a Department of the Government. I do not know why this has been thrust upon the Senate. I do not know whether the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service has complained or not. I had supposed him heretofore to be a gentleman qualified to fill his position, a gentleman of skill and eminence in his profession, a gentleman of good judgment, but I want to say that if he has come here and complained and has incited Senators to present his case to the Senate he is not the man to be where he is, and I do not want to recognize him at all.

Mr. WHITE. May I call the Senator's attention, before he takes his seat, to the fact that the Senator from Washington says the regulations which are to carry out the bill have already been written, before the bill is passed, by the Marine Hospital Service.

Mr. SQUIRE. I stated that the Bureau had prepared them, because there is no time to be lost. The regulations I understand have been prepared.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the amendments made yesterday to this bill were made in accordance with the universal practice of Congress, that when we confer authority we confer it either upon the President or the head of a Department. It is most remarkable that anybody should complain that a bureau in the Treasury Department is not recognized in the bill. When we put a duty upon the head of a Department we give him all the agencies in his Department and he may select one or the other. It is to be presumed that he will select that bureau which is most capable of discharging the duties we have imposed upon him. It is an unheard-of proposition that we are to recognize a bureau of a Department or that it is a slight upon the head of the bureau if he has not his name mentioned in the bill.

The suggestion of amendment made by the Senator from Tennessee is objectionable in that view. We deal, I repeat, with the head of a Department and make him responsible. We have no right to say that he shall discharge the duties thus put upon him through one bureau or another. There may be a necessity that he shall use this Bureau and many others in case of great danger.

It does seem to me as if the head of that Bureau is afraid he will not have the consequential position he ought to have. I feel a good deal as the Senator from Connecticut does. Although I do not know the head of that Bureau, if that is his position he is unfit for the place.

The statement that because he is not named in the bill or because his Bureau is not is a reflection upon him or his Bureau is an unheard-of one in this body, and I think his friends are doing him great injustice and great harm. The best thing they can do is to withdraw all suggestions about this Bureau. Its name never ought to have been mentioned in the bill except so far as it was necessary to mention it for the purpose of assisting the Secretary of the Treasury in discharging the duties we have imposed upon him. Executive authority is intrusted in the first instance to the President, and through him and by him to the executive officers who are appointed under him, and not to subordinates like bureau officers.

Mr. SQUIRE. I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee to state again what he proposes to substitute for my amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I will with pleasure answer the question of the Senator from Washington, but before doing so I want to say to the Senator from Colorado that the amendment I propose does not change in the slightest degree the meaning or effect of the bill as it stands, whether the amendment is made or not. If the Senator from Washington will turn his eye on page 3, to the first line of section 3, I propose to insert, after the word "the," the language "Supervising Surgeon-General of the;" so that it will read:

That the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service shall coöperate with, etc.

Mr. SQUIRE. That is substantially what I wish to accomplish by my amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. Then in the first line of section 4, on page 5, at the bottom of the page, after the word "the," I propose to insert precisely the same language, "Surgeon-General of the;" so as to read:

That it shall be the duty of the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, under the directions of the Secretary of the Treasury, to perform all the duties in respect to quarantine and quarantine regulations, etc.

That is certainly everything the Senator ought to desire, and it ought to be satisfactory to him, as it seems to me; yet it does not change the meaning of the bill or its operations in the slightest degree.

Mr. SQUIRE. With the explanation given by the Senator from Tennessee of the amendments he proposes to offer, and believing that those amendments will substantially cover the ground I intended to cover by my proposed amendment, I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By the consent of the Senate the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to say right now that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee will not pass without a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. DOLPH. Is the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Tennessee has not been offered as yet. He has simply announced his intention to offer it.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I will move to insert the words I have indicated after the word "the," in the first line of section 3.

Mr. DOLPH. I desire to have one amendment considered at a time. I wish to discuss one and not the other. I ask the Senator to offer one amendment at a time.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well; I am offering now the amendment to section 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 1, after the word "the," insert "Supervising Surgeon-General of the;" so as to read:

That the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service shall, immediately after this act takes effect, examine the quarantine regulations of all State and municipal boards of health and shall coöperate with and aid State and municipal boards of health in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations of such boards and in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Treasury to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries, etc.

Mr. DOLPH. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. PLATT. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Oregon yield to me for just a moment or two?

Mr. DOLPH. I will.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator from Connecticut will not insist upon taking a vote by the yeas and nays on this question. I think a very unnecessary question has been thrust upon the Senate. The Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service hails from my State. He is my personal friend. I think I feel as sensitive to his honor and his standing as any other Senator, and I confess I never dreamed in any of the amendments made yesterday that there was the least particle of reflection upon him, directly or indirectly, or any attempt to abridge, or restrict, or limit the power of the Supervising Surgeon-General. When the Marine Hospital Service was referred to, as a matter of course he is at the head of it, and that Bureau being under the Secretary of the Treasury, necessarily it was only proper and legitimate that the Secretary of the Treasury should be invested with the power. I never dreamed that the Secretary of the Treasury would ever attempt to create an independent bureau and employ officers not authorized by law, for the payment of whose salaries there was no provision of law, in order to overslaugh and set aside the Marine Hospital Service.

In other words, the Secretary of the Treasury has no power on earth except what we give to him, and he would have no power even if the whole Marine Hospital Service were stricken out of the bill to appoint any persons to perform the functions here imposed upon him except the arm we have given him already by law, the Marine Hospital Service. If we were to strike out every word in regard to the Marine Hospital Service, I appeal to the Senator from Tennessee to tell me how the Secretary would enforce this enactment except by the Marine Hospital Service?

Mr. HARRIS. That is the only medical Bureau.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is the only medical bureau he has. We are simply quibbling over something that exists only in the imagination and not in fact. If we strike out of the bill everywhere the Marine Hospital Service and do not mention it, the Secretary of the Treasury still has to use that arm. That is the only power he has of a medical nature. We do not create anything else. On the contrary we expressly wipe out of existence the National Board of Health. It is abolished literally and absolutely by the bill, although it has not existed for years. There is an express provision in the bill wiping it all out.

I think the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee ought to be agreed to, and let us go on and pass the bill and get rid of it.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut demands the yeas and nays upon the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. DOLPH. I have the floor.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to appeal to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DOLPH. I desire to make a few remarks. I intended to make them upon the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. HARRIS. I certainly do not propose to interfere with the Senator from Oregon, but I do want to beg the Senator from Connecticut not to insist on his demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PLATT. I will not at this time, but I desire to say that the amendment will not be finally adopted by the Senate without a yea-and-nay vote, if the Senate will give it on my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The demand for the yeas and nays is temporarily withdrawn. The Senator from Oregon will proceed.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I had intended before the amendment submitted by the Senator from Washington was withdrawn to have made some brief remarks upon it. I had never read the bill under consideration until yesterday, when I heard it read from the desk. As it was read, and when I came to examine it, I believed that there were certain powers conferred upon the Marine Hospital Service and certain duties required of the service which had better be imposed upon and required of the Secretary of the Treasury. Besides, I had an impression that the use of the term "Marine Hospital Service," where something was to be done like the framing of regulations, was an unfortunate phrase, and that if we were going to require any service of that kind of the Bureau it should be required of the chief of the Bureau.

For these reasons I offered yesterday in the Senate, without any particular study, the amendments which were adopted, with the intention of perfecting the bill, and I hope everyone will believe without the slightest intention of reflecting upon the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service. I desire to say that I am personally acquainted with that officer. My contact with him has been most pleasant and I have nothing in the world to complain of in him. I believe him to be an officer well qualified to perform the duties of his office and disposed to perform them faithfully.

One amendment made yesterday, where "the Secretary of the Treasury" was substituted for "the Marine Hospital Service," relates to the power to make and the duty of making rules and regulations which are to have the force of law in regard to quarantine. I said yesterday what I repeat now, that I do not like that legislation very well, but if we are going to authorize an officer of the Government to make such regulations I prefer that the head of the Department shall be authorized and required to make such regulations instead of some subordinate officer of the Government.

Now comes the Senator from Washington and proposes an amendment, as follows:

Provided, That so far as relates to rules and regulations and the enforcement thereof, and the reports herein provided for, the Secretary of the Treasury shall execute the provisions of this act through the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service.

That makes the power of the Marine Hospital Service greater than it was under the original bill. It makes the Secretary of the Treasury subordinate to the Marine Hospital Service and requires the rules and regulations to be made by that service under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. If it had referred solely to the enforcement of rules and regulations, then it would not have been at all necessary, because in the amendments I offered yesterday, and which were adopted, I carefully left in the bill everything that could be properly performed and should be performed by the Marine Hospital Service. Under section 3 as it was left in the bill it is provided:

That the Marine Hospital Service shall coöperate with and aid State and municipal boards of health in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations of such boards and in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Treasury to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases, etc.

In section 4 as it was left in the bill after the amendments of yesterday it is provided:

That it shall be the duty of the Marine Hospital Service under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to perform all the duties in respect to quarantine and quarantine regulations which are provided for by this act, and to obtain information, etc.

I say these two sections provide that the Marine Hospital Service shall perform everything that it is proper for them to perform. The amendment of the Senator from Washington would take from the Secretary of the Treasury the power to make regulations. As the bill now stands it is provided that the Marine Hospital Service shall execute the regulations, but the Senator from Washington attempts by his amendment to restore the power to make rules and regulations to the Marine Hospital Service.

I have no objection, myself, to the first amendment suggested by the Senator from Tennessee, that the words "Supervising Surgeon-General of the" shall be inserted in the first line of section 3; so as to read:

That the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service shall coöperate with and aid State and municipal boards of health.

I suppose that would give him power to coöperate through his subordinates in the service. If it does not I do not think it would be very material; but when you come to the place where it is proposed to insert the words in the fourth section I think that would hurt the bill. I think the words "Marine Hospital Service" ought to be retained there. As it reads now it is provided:

That it shall be the duty of the Marine Hospital Service, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to perform all the duties in respect to quarantine and quarantine regulations which are provided for by this act, etc.

Physically it would be impossible for the Supervising Surgeon-General to perform all these duties. To construe the act so that it would effect the purpose it would have to be held that the direction to the Supervising Surgeon-General to perform all the duties would permit them to be performed by all the subordinates in his Bureau, and I think that would probably be the case. I think that it would not tend to perspicuity to adopt the amendment in section 4.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, a single word in respect to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. I do not see him in his seat, but I really hope that he will withdraw his amendment. It seems to me that such an amendment can possibly have no place in this measure of legislation. We are adopting a bill which confers all this power upon the Secretary of the Treasury, and we were careful yesterday in the amendments offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] to see that the Secretary of the Treasury was vested with full power.

The Marine Hospital Service is a service under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury—a part of his own Department. It should be subject to his orders. It is now proposed, however, that as to certain duties to be performed he is to be restricted in his choice of officers. It seems to me that that is not only insulting to the Secretary of the Treasury, but damaging as well to the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service. It is a virtual admission that unless he was named officially in the bill there was a fear he would not be recognized.

I can imagine a condition of things which may arise which would require that the Supervising Surgeon should be absolutely removed from office in case, we will say, of disabilty, his inability to perform the duties, and as the bill clearly makes it his duty and nobody else's duty, would not the Secretary of the Treasury be obliged to remove him from office, as there can be but one occupant of that office, and appoint some one else to perform the duties? The question is, Can this be a temporary appointment or can it not? It seems to me that it would work gross injustice, not only to the Supervising Surgeon, because, as I say, a condition of circumstances may arise where he could not perform the duties physically, and the bill makes it necessary for that officer and no other officer to perform them.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to suggest to him that if the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service should be stricken to-day with paralysis there would be an acting Supervising Surgeon-General in less than a minute? The office would always be full. There is always somebody to perform its duties.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It would seem to me that when you designate that these duties shall be performed by a man who is alive, although in a measure incapacitated, it is entirely unnecessary to put any such provision in the bill. It complicates it.

I hope the Senator from Tennessee will withdraw the amendment, for I do not believe the Senate wants to pay a compliment in the bill. I do not think it is a proper thing to pay compliments in an act of legislation of this great Government, nor do I think that the service will be any better performed by the substitution of these words.

Certainly every Senator can see in a moment that the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service would have charge, so far as he would be able to perform them, of the duties imposed by the bill, but why not leave the whole responsibility where it belongs, with the Secretary of the Treasury, to detail an officer? I can imagine other difficulties in the way. I have witnessed myself within the past six months a conflict of authority between Government officers and State officers with regard to this same subject. I have noticed the sparring backwards and forwards frequently. Suppose that for personal reasons, if you please, the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service is unable to agree with the State authorities who are made a part of this whole system. It is a dual system. It is a Federal system and a State system mixed together. Then it might be necessary to detail some other officer from the Marine Hospital force in order to get along comfortably with the officers appointed by the States.

Hence it is there are multitudes of reasons why there should be no such restriction, and there is no reason existing in the world why it should be incorporated in the bill except the simple desire to pay a compliment to somebody.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the propositions which have been under discussion are not in my judgment immaterial. Before I make some observations upon that point I wish to say that I think very great injustice has been done the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, that is, the person now filling that office. I have heard intimated here suspicions of that officer having made observations, objecting to the amendments, of recommending other amendments to the bill, or criticising it "in some shape, or soliciting notice or compliment in the bill now under consideration, but no Senator has directly made such a statement. Therefore, I think it is unfair to have assumed it by such expressions as "if the Surgeon-General had done so he is unworthy of his position." It is not fair by ifs and ands and suggestions and surmises to impute disgraceful things to men. This officer, in my opinion, is a man of high character and of delicate consideration in regard to himself and his claims to public consideration.

But, Mr. President, this is not an immaterial question, as has been suggested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. It does not concern the mere personal character of the person who shall be or who is now the Supervising Surgeon General of the Marine Hospital Service. The previous laws upon this subject have always used the language contained in the bill before it was amended, and they have limited the power of the Secretary of the Treasury in respect to this most important subject, namely, giving a preference of one port in one State over that of another, contrary to the direct prohibition of the Constitution, a result which can only be justified by the existence of the most imminent and urgent danger to the whole public, to the people of that State or of every other State.

Why should not the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury or the President be limited by the qualification that it shall be done upon the recommendation of men acquainted with the subject, and whose judgment and opinions are valuable and necessary? Why should not there be that limitation in saying to the Secretary of the Treasury you may close the ports of a State, you may prescribe the port in which the whole commerce of this country shall enter, but you shall only do it when in the opinion of advised, intelligent, and capable men there is an earnest and immediate and impending danger to the whole country? Why should not that qualification be impeosd by Congress upon the exercise of this great power?

The Senator from Missouri says that it is necessary always to give to the head of a bureau absolute, unlimited, and unrestrained power, and that Congress should not prescribe the manner in which that power shall be executed. What reason is there for such a proposition? Why should not Congress say to the President, the executive department, you shall not exercise your discretion in this case except upon the advice of such persons, and upon the occurrence of certain facts and conditions, which shall be ascertained, and upon this ascertainment the power that you have shall be exercised in your discretion?

In reference to quarantine that has been the uniform course of the law. Let us see. In 1878, on the 29th of April, Congress passed an act containing the following provisions:

That no vessel or vehicle coming from any foreign port or country where any contagious or infectious disease may exist, and no vessel or vehicle conveying any person or persons, merchandise or animals, affected with any infectious or contagious disease, shall enter any port of the United States or pass the boundary line between the United States and any foreign country, contrary to the quarantine laws of any one of said United States, into or through the jurisdiction of which said vessel or vehicle may pass, or to which it is destined, or except in the manner and subject to the regulations to be prescribed as hereinafter provided.

* * * * * * *

SEC. 5. That wherever, at any port of the United States, any State or municipal quarantine system may now, or may hereafter exist, the officers or agents of such system shall, upon the application of the respective State or municipal authorities, be authorized and empowered to act as officers or agents of the national quarantine system, and shall be clothed with all the powers of United States officers for quarantine purposes, but shall receive no pay or emoluments from the United States. At all other ports where, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, it shall be deemed necessary to establish quarantine, the medical officers or other agents of the Marine Hospital Service shall perform such duties in the enforcement of the quarantine rules and regulations as may be assigned them by the Surgeon-General of that service under this act.

So in regard to the act passed in 1888, and so in regard to the act of 1890, the power to make these rules and regulations is limited in the Secretary of the Treasury to their initiation by the Marine Hospital Service, not even using the term "Supervising Surgeon-General" always, but unquestionably every one understands that that would mean the Supervising Surgeon-General.

The Senator from Missouri says that if this clause were stricken out from the whole bill the Secretary of the Treasury could not carry into effect this act except in the manner and through the officers provided by Congress, viz, the Marine Hospital Service. But if an appropriation is given and if unlimited discretion is given to him to make rules and regulations, why can he not establish his own board of health? It depends upon the money; the power is here, the power to make rules and regulations in defiance of the opinion of every medical man in the world and of the experience of all countries. It is no answer to that to say he will not do it. It is no excuse for legislation to say that an officer will act wisely and intelligently within the power given to him when given a power which may be abused.

I do not believe there will be the slightest difference in the administration of the law by the Treasury Department whether any of these words are contained in this proposed act or not; but what then? Does it justify giving this arbitrary power contrary to all precedents in all the laws? Is there any reason for the proposition advanced by the Senator from Tennessee that an arbitrary and unlimited power shall be given to the Secretary of the Treasury to say there is cholera when there is not? Because we say to the man, "You shall fill that office," will it be wise to give him the power to say, "No port shall be entered but this one, although there is no cholera in the country, because I see fit to say under the power given me that there is cholera"?

There is no justification, Mr. President, in reason for that kind of a proposition. The bill as presented limited the power of the Secretary of the Treasury in giving a preference of one port to another and in closing the ports of a State, and of all the States if he saw fit to do so, by the qualification that he should not do it except upon rules and regulations prescribed by the medical officers of the United States. It is said he will not do it without the approval of those officers. Undoubtedly he will not, but why shall not the power be limited? He might abuse it. The law is intended to provide for possible abuses, and the limitations of the law are intended to prevent the oppressive use of the power granted by it.

Therefore, Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington was a proper amendment and is in exactly the language contained in the preceding acts in reference to the enforcement even of these rules.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the first amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask Senators who are interested in these various amendments to let them go over a little while until we can proceed with some other amendments which seem to me of some importance. If there is no objection I would call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee to amendments that I should like to move to section 3, on page 5.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HARRIS. I have none, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. On page 5, line 42, of section 3, I move to strike out the words "authorized by the laws of the United States and." It does not seem to me that when we authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to make such rules and regulations as are necessary to be observed by the vessels at the port of departure and on the voyage we need to make any qualification. It is not pretended that any State can make regulations which will affect the ports of departure and on the voyage, and therefore it seems to me that that power should be absolute.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from New Hampshire certainly does not suppose that that language refers to State laws. It refers to the acts of Congress.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand; but why not let the words go out and let the Secretary have the power by this law, without looking to any other laws, to see whether the powers he wants to exercise under this clause are elsewhere conferred? I hope the Senator gets my point. The clause would then read:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall make such rules and regulations as are necessary to be observed by vessels.

Why does not that convey the whole idea of the Senator?

Mr. PLATT. He can not violate the law.

Mr. CHANDLER. As the Senator from Connecticut says, he can not violate the law, and we do not want him when he is exercising his powers to make regulations as to what shall be done in foreign ports and on the voyage to be obliged to look to any other clauses of the statute than this to determine what to do.

Mr. HARRIS. I see the force of the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire, and I shall not object to the amendment he proposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, line 42, ofter the word "are," strike out the words "authorized by the laws of the United States and;" so as to read:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall make such rules and regulations as are necessary to be observed by vessels, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest that the forty-fifth, forty-sixth, and forty-seventh lines of section 3 should be either stricken out or amended. I will first move to strike out from the words "at which," in line 45, down to and including the word "shipped," in line 48.

Mr. PLATT. Including what has already been put in?

Mr. CHANDLER. Including what has already been inserted, so that the clause will authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to "make such rules and regulations as are necessary to be observed by vessels at the port of departure and on the voyage where such vessels sail from any foreign port or place to any port or place in the United States to secure the best sanitary condition of such vessel, her cargo, passengers, and crew."

Mr. HARRIS. That simply enlarges the power of the Secretary. He may make rules and regulations in respect to all ports except such ports as these conditions apply to.

Mr. CHANDLER. To all ports. The point I make is that as it stands the Senator will perceive the power is limited to making regulations for infected ports.

Mr. HARRIS. I see it is a limitation, and the Senator proposes to strike out the limitation?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall not object to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I move to strike out the words from "at which," in line 45, down to "shipped," in line 48.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, after the word "place," in line 45, strike out "at which contagious or infectious disease exists, or from which the President has reason to believe that infected articles of merchandise are being shipped;" so as to read:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall make such rules and regulations as are necessary to be observed by vessels at the port of departure and on the voyage, where such vessels sail from any foreign port or place to any port or place in the United States, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to insert, as the last section but one of the bill, the following:

SEC. —. That there shall be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000, to be expended, or so much of the same as may be necessary from time to time, under the direction of the President and according to his discretion, to meet emergencies arising in the execution of the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment just agreed to, the Chair understands, will come in just before the last section of the bill. It will be section 8, and the present section 8 will become section 9.

Mr. PLATT. I move to insert, before the word "may," in line 39 of section 3, the words:

Adopt such measures as in his judgment shall be necessary to prevent the introduction or spread of such diseases, and.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator thinks that power is not already given. I think it very proper it should be given. I think it is already in the bill.

Mr. PLATT. I fear it is not, and by way of abundant caution I propose to insert it.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. WHITE. I call for the yeas and nays on it.

Mr. SQUIRE. It seems to me that the language of the amendment is very general. That language would give the power to the President to so act without reference to any rules or regulations and in contravention of them.

Mr. PLATT. Not at all.

Mr. SQUIRE. I shall object to the amendment.

Mr. WHITE. On the adoption of the amendment I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SQUIRE. I second the call.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the demand for the yeas and nays seconded? [A pause.] The demand is not seconded by a sufficient number of Senators.

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator from Louisiana desires the yeas and nays the request ought to be put again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the demand for the yeas and nays seconded?

Mr. HARRIS. Of course I want to give any Senator the yeas and nays who desires them upon any given proposition; but I do think it very important that some action should be taken upon these general questions. I hope that Senators may arrive at definite conclusions as to what we ought to do and do something. There is absolute and very great necessity, in my opinion, for action. The yeas and nays demanded upon the various questions that will arise at this time, and in the present condition, means the utter failure of definite action to-day.

Mr. WHITE. I will state to the Senator that my purpose is to prevent action on the bill to-day if I can do so.

Mr. HARRIS. I so supposed; and that being the purpose, I shall not favor the Senator's demand for the yeas and nays. If he wanted them for any other purpose, however much I might disagree with him, I should always give them to him.

Mr. PLATT. May I be indulged a word by unanimous consent? I dislike to suggest, in the absence of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN], what seems to me to be the only practicable way of disposing of this subject, and that is to continue the order which was made the other day until Monday, when the Senate will be full. If the Senator from Minnesota were present I should make that suggestion, and ask that that might be agreed upon.

Mr. CHANDLER. With the further understanding that the bill shall be voted on upon Monday?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. No.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Louisiana says "no."

Mr. WHITE. I have no desire in the world to delay the bill by any captious objection. I have serious objections to many of the provisions of the bill. I was a member of the committee to which the bill was referred, I being in the minority, and I do not think the bill received serious or grave consideration in the committee. I have received telegrams this morning from the president of the board of health of my State, and from all the commercial bodies in my State, on the subject of the provisions of the bill. The parties are on their way here; they will be here, and whilst I could not agree to vote on the bill upon Monday, I shall make no captious objection or cause any trouble or delay whatever, but before the final vote is taken on the bill I desire to consult with them. I expect that they will perhaps be here on Monday.

Mr. CHANDLER. Upon the statement of the Senator from Louisiana, I will not ask for unanimous consent that the bill may be disposed of on Monday. I recognize the situation in which the Senator from Louisiana is placed. I recognize the peculiarities connected with the quarantine at the mouth of the Mississippi, which I believe to be an excellent quarantine service. At the same time I ask the Senator to bear in mind the fact that the Louisiana quarantine may be all right as it is, and may have no need of national legislation and no need of any part of the appropriation contained in the bill, but that the great peril we are seeking to deal with is in New York City. I hope if the Senator can manage to adjust and accommodate the wants and wishes of the Louisiana people so that the bill may not be hindered in its passage that he will do so. I believe it can be done.

Mr. WHITE. I will state frankly to the Senator that with every purpose he has in view I have entire sympathy, and I have no doubt we can coöperate, but not on the terms of this bill. I do not think that the far-reaching effects of the terms of the bill are now comprehended. I think the bill goes away beyond the necessity which the Senator has in view, and I think it creates a radical departure in the Government of a far-reaching kind. I think the provisions which do that in the bill are not explicit.
